For Rachel Bruzzone
"So easy to look at, so hard to define"
SDO

For Elizabeth Torresson
Aldri finst þér vitrari kona ok fegri í verǫldu
RS

Contents

Prefaces 9

Fragments 11
Incertarum fabularum fragmenta 11
Dubia 347

Bibliography 363

Indices 383

Prefaces

With a few notable exceptions, the fragments treated in this volume have not been the object of sustained modern scholarly attention. Our goal has been to tease out some of their individual puzzles and peculiarities, to set them in larger literary, historical and philological contexts, and to render them accessible to further scholarly work. This can thus be understood as in some ways a preliminary edition of rich but extremely difficult material, and our general goal has been to open up problems and perspectives rather than to shut them down. This does not mean that we believe that every road is open for further research, but we hope to have pointed to some that are.

My interest in the incerta of Cratinus can be traced to my work on the fragments of Eupolis as part of Heidelberg Academy Komfrag project, on the one hand, and to a graduate seminar I offered at the University of Minnesota during the 2014–2015 academic year, on the other. I subsequently invited Ryan Seaberg, one of the participants in that seminar, to collaborate with me in the production of this volume. Ryan's interest in historical linguistics will be apparent to the reader throughout, and I am grateful to him for these contributions and many others. This has truly been a joint, collaborative project.

Much of my work on this volume was completed during the 2016–2017 academic year, when I held a Core Fellowship at the Helsinki Collegium. Thanks are due my departmental and college administration at the University of Minnesota for allowing me to take this leave. I would also like to express my gratitude to Bernhard Zimmermann (the leader of the Komfrag project), the Heidelberg Academy and the Freiburg Institute of Advanced Study for their support of my research, and to Piero Totaro and Tiziana Drago for their wonderful hospitality during my time as a Distinguished Visiting Professor and researcher at the University of Bari in May 2017. Finally, I wish to offer profound thanks to Adnan Akay (Provost), Hitay Özbay (Acting Dean of the Faculty of Humanities and Letters) and Mustafa Nakeeb (Coordinator of the CCI Program) for arranging my appointment as a Visiting Professor at Bilkent University, where final preparation of the volume took place.

My portion of this book is dedicated to my wife Rachel, whose love and support sustain me this morning, as always now, as the sun rises slowly late in the year over the mountains and pine forests of central Anatolia.

S. Douglas Olson
Ankara, 29 December 2017

I first met Cratinus in a graduate seminar on commentary writing offered at the University of Minnesota by Douglas Olson, who subsequently invited me to collaborate on this volume. I am immensely grateful to him for this invitation and for his patience and guidance throughout.

The bulk of my work on this volume was completed while I was a graduate student in Minneapolis, with the final preparation completed in Washington, D.C. and Philadelphia. I owe my heartiest thanks to Bernhard Zimmermann and the Heidelberg Academy for making possible my attendance at a workshop in Merano in May 2016, where I had the chance to meet others working on the Komfrag project and to benefit from their feedback, as well as to the Freiburg Institute for Advanced Studies for making possible my stay there as a guest researcher in June 2016 and thus for giving Douglas and me a chance to work together in the same place for a time. I would also like to thank the department of Classical and Near Eastern Studies at the University of Minnesota for funding my work on this volume in summer 2015, and my erstwhile colleagues there—Josh Reno and Rachael Cullick, especially—for their friendship and willingness to listen to me go on and on about Cratinus.

My portion of this book is dedicated to my wife Elizabeth for all her support and encouragement.

Ryan Seaberg
Philadelphia, 29 December 2017

Fragments

Incertarum fabularum fragmenta

fr. 299 K.–A. (273 K.)

πιεῖν δὲ θάνατος οἶνον, ἢν ὕδωρ ῥεπῇ ἀλλ᾽ ἴσον ἴσῳ μάλιστ᾽ ἀκράτου δύο χοᾶς πιοῦσ᾽ ἀπ᾽ ἀγκύλης ἐπονομάζουσα ⟨×⟩ ἵησι λάταγας τῷ Κορινθίῳ πέει

1 ἢν Jacobs, Meineke : ἂν Ath.[CE] Eust. ὕδωρ ῥεπῇ Kaibel : ὕδωρ ἐπῇ Ath.[CE] Eust. : ὕδωρ ἐνῇ Kock : ὑδαρής τις ᾖ Herwerden : ὑδαρῆ ᾽γχέῃ Peppink 2 χοᾶς Pierson : χοέας Ath.[CE] 3 πιοῦσ᾽ scripsimus : πίνουσ᾽ Ath.[CE] ⟨δὴ⟩ add. Neue : ⟨σε⟩ Fritzsche : -ζουσ᾽ ⟨ἀεὶ⟩ Jacobs : -ζουσ᾽ ⟨ἅμα⟩ Meineke and/but drinking wine is death, if water is preponderant

But after she drank two pitchers of straight wine mixed one-to-one, from her ankylê, calling out his/its name ⟨×⟩, she tosses wine-lees in honor of the Corinthian penis

Ath. 11.782d–f
ἀγκύλη. ποτήριον πρὸς τὴν τῶν κοττάβων παιδιὰν χρήσιμον. Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ Βακχυλίδης (fr. 17)· ——. ἐντεῦθεν ἐννοοῦμεν τοὺς παρ᾽ Αἰσχύλῳ (fr. 179.4) ἀγκυλητοὺς κοττάβους. λέγονται δὲ καὶ δόρατα ἀγκυλητὰ καὶ μεσάγκυλα ἄλλα ἀπὸ ἀγκύλης ἤτοι τῆς δεξιᾶς χειρός. καὶ ἡ κύλιξ δὲ ἀγκύλη διὰ τὸ ἐπαγκυλοῦν τὴν δεξιὰν χεῖρα ἐν τῇ προέσει. ἦν γὰρ τοῖς παλαιοῖς πεφροντισμένον καλῶς καὶ εὐσχημόνως κότταβον προΐεσθαι· καὶ οἱ πολλοὶ ἐπὶ τούτῳ μᾶλλον ἐφρόνουν μέγα ἢ ἐπὶ τῷ εὖ ἀκοντίζειν. ὠνομάσθη οὖν ἀπὸ τοῦ τῆς χειρὸς σχηματισμοῦ, ὃν ποιούμενοι εὐρύθμως ἐρρίπτουν εἰς τὸ κοττάβιον. καὶ οἴκους δὲ ἐπιτηδείους κατεσκεύαζον εἰς ταύτην τὴν παιδιάν ankylê: a cup used for the game of kottabos. Cratinus: ——. Also Bacchylides (fr. 17)· ——. On this basis we can make sense of the ankylêtoi kottaboi mentioned in Aeschylus (fr. 179.4). Spears are also referred to as ankylêta, while others are mesankyla from ankylê in the sense "the right hand".[1] An ankylê is also a cup (kylix), because the right hand bends at the wrist (epankyloun) during the throw. For the ancients had given thought to how to throw kottabos gracefully and elegantly, and many people were prouder of this than of throwing a javelin well. (The cup) thus got its name from the motion of the hand they produced when they smoothly tossed (its contents) at the target. They also used to build rooms specifically for this game

[1] In fact, the adjective is < ἀγκύλη in the sense "throwing-thong"; cf. LSJ s. v. II.2.

Meter Iambic trimeter.

⏑–⏑⏑ ⏑|–⏑|– ⏑–⏑–
–⏑⏑– | ⏑–⏑– –⏑⏑–
⏑–⏑– ⏑–⏑⏑ ––⏑⟨×⟩
⏑–⏑⏑ ⏑|–⏑– ⏑–⏑–

Discussion Pierson 1759. 412; Jacobs 1809. 248; Neue 1822. 38–9; Fritzsche 1838. 147; Meineke 1839 II.179–81; Meineke 1858. 348; Herwerden 1872. 77; Kock 1880 I.93–4; Peppink 1936. 64; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text 2–4 do not obviously belong immediately after 1; see Interpretation. The Epitome routinely omits material that is corrupt or confusing as it is preserved in Ath.[A], or that could be regarded as somehow expendable, and one or more verses are thus most likely missing between 1 and 2.

In 1, the paradosis ἄν produces nonsense, and Jacobs' ἤν is an easy fix.

At the end of 1, the paradosis ὕδωρ ἐπῇ ("water is upon (it)") would be a very odd way of saying "water is in (it)". Kock's ὕδωρ ἐνῇ ("water is in it", printed by Kassel–Austin; cf. [Arist.] Pr. 938[a]7; Luc. VH 2.30) might be right. But the sentiment is so extreme—no water at all is allowed—that we adopt instead Kaibel's equally simple ὕδωρ ῥεπῇ and take the rho to have been lost via haplography. Herwerden's ὑδαρής τις ᾖ ("something watery is present") and Peppink's ὑδαρῆ 'γχέῃ ("something watery is poured in"; cf. Pherecr. fr. 76.2 ὑδαρῆ 'νέχεέν σοι;, "Did she pour something watery in (your cup) for you?") are much further from the paradosis.

The Epitome's present participle πίνουσ(α) ("while drinking") at the beginning of 3 is suspect because most of the contents of the cup had to be drunk before the wine lees were thrown at the target. We therefore print aorist πιοῦσ', a change of only a single letter.

For the various suggestions for supplementing 3, cf. e. g. Ar. Eq. 1341 σέ /; Nu. 750 δή /; V. 218 ἀεί /; Pl. 701 ἅμα /. Jacobs' ἀεί and Meineke's ἅμα entail elision of ἐπονομάζουσα. Fritzsche's σέ brings with it a substantial change in the content of the fragment and is thus methodologically problematic.

Citation context From the long catalogue of drinking vessels (drawn more or less direct from Pamphilus?) that makes up much of Book 11 of Athenaeus. This portion of the Book is preserved only in the Epitome (Ath.[CE]) as a consequence of the loss of a number of pages from the exemplar of the main manuscript (Ath.[A]). For the mistaken definition of ἀγκύλη as a type of cup offered here, see Interpretation on 3–4.

Eustathius had access to a copy of the Epitome, and at p. 344.13, 21–8 = I.538.10, 538.19–539.6 he appears either to be combining material from Athenaeus with another source or to be drawing direct from the same (now-lost) author as Athenaeus himself relied upon: καὶ ἡ ἀγκύλη δὲ ἀκόντιόν ἐστί τι, ὅθεν καὶ οἱ ἀκοντισταὶ ἀγκυλισταί. … ἔτι ἰστέον καὶ ὅτι ἀγκύλη οὐ μόνον ἡ ἀνωτέρω ῥηθεῖσα ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ καμπὴ τοῦ ἀγκῶνος καὶ ποτηρίου γένος χρήσιμον εἰς κο⟨τ⟩τάβους παρὰ τὸ ἀγκύλον, τὸ ἐπικαμπὲς καὶ στρεβλὸν καὶ σκολιὸν καὶ ἐπικεκλασμένον. ἠγκύλουν γάρ, φασί, τὴν δεξιὰν οἱ τοὺς κο⟨τ⟩τάβους προϊέμενοι κυκλοῦντες αὐτήν, οὓς δὴ κοττάβους ἀγκυλητοὺς Αἰσχύλος (fr. 179) ἔφη ὁμωνύμως δόρασιν, ἅπερ ἀγκυλητὰ καὶ μεσάγκυλα ἐκάλουν ἀπὸ χειρός, φασί, δεξιᾶς. χρῆσις δὲ κοτύλης παρά τε Βακχιλίδῃ ἐν τῷ (~ fr. 17.1–2)· εὖτε τὴν ἀπ' ἀγκύλης πίνουσι, καὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ ἐν τῷ· (v. 1) ——, καὶ ἑξῆς ἕως τοῦ (v. 2)· ——. ἐκ δὲ τοῦ τοιούτου ἀγκύλου καὶ ὁ ἀγκυλομήτης ("And the ankylê is a type of javelin (akontion), whence also javelin-throwers (akontistai) are called ankylistai … Let it be further known that an ankylê is not only what was said above but also the bend of the arm and a kind of cup useful for kottabos, (the name) being derived from ankylos ('bent'), that which is curved, crooked, bent or distorted. For they say that those who threw kottaboi bent their right hand and moved it in a circle. Aeschylus (fr. 179.4) in fact called these kottaboi ankylêtoi, using the same word as for spears, which they called ankylêta and mesankyla, they say, from the word for the right hand. The use of kotylê in Bacchylides in his (~ fr. 17.1–2): "when they drink the (cup?) from their ankylê", and in Cratinus in his (v. 1): —— and what follows as far as (v. 2): ——. Ankylomêtês is derived from an ankylos of this sort"). Cf. Phot. α 185 = Synag. B α 277 ἀγκύλη· ἀκόντιον. καὶ τοῦ ἀγκῶνος ἡ καμπή. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἡ δεξιὰ χείρ ἀγκύλη, ὅθεν καὶ τὰ δόρατα ἀγκυλητά τε καὶ μεσάγκυλα ἐκάλουν. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἀγκύλη εἶδος ποτηρίου, ᾧ ἐχρῶντο πρὸς τὴν τῶν κοττάβων παιδιάν. ἀγκύλη οὖν καὶ ἡ δεξιὰ χείρ. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ πρὸς κότταβον ἐπιτηδεία κύλιξ, διὰ τὸ ἀπαγκυλοῦν τὴν δεξιὰν χεῖρα ἐν τῇ προέσει. ἦν γὰρ τοῖς παλαιοῖς πεφροντισμένον καλῶς καὶ εὐσχημόνως κότταβον προΐεσθαι. ὠνομάσθη οὖν ἀπὸ τοῦ τῆς χειρὸς σχηματισμοῦ, ὃν ποιούμενοι προθύμως ἐρρίπτον εἰς τὸ κοττάβιον. ἔστι δὲ καὶ εἶδός τι ἅμματος, ὡς Ἄλεξις Ἀχαΐδι (fr. 32)· ——. ἐχρήσαντο καὶ ἄλλοι τῇ λέξει ("ankylê: a javelin; also the bend of the elbow. The right hand is also referred to as an ankylê, for which reason they called spears as well ankylêta and mesankyla. In addition, a kind of cup they used to play kottabos is called an ankylê. The right hand is accordingly also an ankylê, but in addition a cup suitable for kottabos, because the right hand bent in the course of the toss. For the ancients had given thought to how to throw kottabos gracefully and elegantly. It was therefore named after the motion of the right hand, which they produced while eagerly making a throw at the target. It is also a kind of knot, as Alexis (says) in Achais (fr. 32): ——. Others too used the word"), which Erbse identified as Paus.Gr. α 14. Hsch. α 566 is similar but more abbreviated:

ἀγκύλη· ἀκόντιον. ἢ ἡ καμπὴ τῆς ἀγκῶνος καὶ ποτηρίου γένος εἰς κοττάβους. οἱ γὰρ τοὺς κοττάβους προϊέμενοι τὴν δεξιὰν χεῖρα ἠγκύλουν, κυκλοῦντες αὐτὴν ὡς ἐνῆν πρεπωδέστατα, σεμνυνόμενοι ὡς ἐφ' ἑνὶ τῶν καλῶν. οἱ δὲ καὶ ἀγκυλισταὶ ἀκοντισταὶ εἴρηνται. δηλοῖ δὲ καὶ ἀποτομάδα ("ankylê: a javelin, or the bend of the arm and a type of cup used for kottabos. For people throwing kottaboi would bend their right hand, moving it in a circle as though this incorporated what is most fitting, affecting an air of solemnity as if at something good. Javelin-throwers are also called ankylistai. (The word) also denotes a kind of javelin"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus). Related material is preserved at

- Ath. 15.667b–c ἐκάλουν δ' ἀπ' ἀγκύλης τὴν τοῦ κοττάβου πρόεσιν διὰ τὸ ἐπαγκυλοῦν τὴν δεξιὰν χεῖρα ἐν τοῖς ἀποκοτταβισμοῖς. οἳ δὲ ποτηρίου εἶδος τὴν ἀγκύλην φασί ("They derived the name of the kottabos-throw from ankylê on account of the fact that the right hand bends as the throw is made. Others say that an ankylê is a kind of cup")
- Poll. 6.95 (ankylê included in a list of cups similar to the one much more fully preserved in Athenaeus)
- Hsch. α 564 ἀγκύλᾳ· τῷ ἀκοντίῳ ("ankyla (dat.): a javelin")
- EM p. 12.20–1 ἀγκύλη· τοῦ ἀγκῶνος ἡ καμπή· καὶ οἱ ἀκοντισταὶ ἀγκυλισταί ("ankylê: the bend of the arm. And javelin throwers (are called) ankylistai")
- Suda α 251 ἀγκύλη· εἶδος ἀκοντίου. καὶ ἠγκυλωμένος ἀγκύλην ἔχων. ("ankylê: a kind of javelin; and ênkylômenos means 'fitted with an ankylê'").

Interpretation 1 is an overblown insistence that—contrary to normal practice—wine ought never to be mixed with more than an equivalent amount of water. 2–4, by contrast, describe how a female symposiast (a courtesan?) drinks a large amount of wine mixed one-to-one and then plays kottabos (3–4 n.) with the lees, calling out the name of the Corinthian … penis she loves (a paraprosdokian joke alluding to the behavior of Euripides' Stheneboia (fr. 664, quoted in 3–4 n.)).

The custom of mixing wine with water in a kratêr is attested already in Homer (e. g. Il. 9.202–3) and Hesiod (Op. 596). The relative amount of water and wine varied and is the topic of considerable ancient discussion. But typical figures are five parts of water to two of wine (e. g. Eup. fr. 6; Hermipp. fr. 24) or two parts of water to one of wine (e. g. Alc. fr. 346.4; Anacr. PMG 356(a).3–4). A three-to-one mix (Hes. Op. 596) is sometimes called too weak (e. g. Anaxil. fr. 23) and is recommended by Plutarch (Mor. 657c) only for magistrates at meetings and philosophers at work. See in general Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 228.2 (a four-to-one mixture). Drinking ἴσον ἴσῳ (one-to-one), as demanded in 1 (at least as printed here) and practiced in 2–3, is thus extreme behavior; cf. adesp. com. fr. 101.10–13 τοῖς μὲν μέτριον πίνουσι καὶ κεκραμένον / εὐθυμίαν, ἐὰν δ' ὑπερβάλης, ὕβριν, / ἐὰν δ' ἴσον ἴσῳ προσφέρῃ, μανίαν ποιεῖ· / ἐάν δ' ἄκρατον, παράλυσιν τῶν σωμάτων ("for those who drink [wine] in moderate amounts and mixed, it produces cheerfulness. But if you go to excess, it produces ugly behavior; and if you consume it one-to-one, it produces madness; and if you drink it unmixed, it paralyzes your body"). See in general Arnott 1996. 650–1 (arguing that "the most temperate drinkers seem to have opted for 1 measure of wine to 3 of water"); Pütz 2003. 203–8; Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 6.

A small amount of unmixed wine (ἄκρατος οἶνος) was typically consumed immediately after a meal, before the symposium proper began, in honor of the Ἀγαθὸς Δαίμων who had discovered it, i. e. Dionysus (cf. Ar. Eq. 85 ἄκρατον οἶνον Ἀγαθοῦ Δαίμονος; V. 525 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Pax 300 with Olson 1998 ad loc.; Theopomp. Com. fr. 41.2; Antiph. fr. 135; Nicostr. Com. fr. 19; Xenarch. fr. 2.2–3). Consumption of straight wine was otherwise generally avoided and is routinely associated with barbarians.[2] Although the woman described in 2–4 actually drinks not unmixed wine but wine mixed one-to-one, therefore, the reference to the wine as ἄκρατος in 2 serves to cast her behavior as even more outrageous than it might otherwise appear to be, setting up 4. Cf. Sophil. fr. 4.1 ἄκρατος ἐδίδοτ' ἴσον ἴσῳ ("he/she offered akratos mixed one-to-one").

1 πιεῖν θάνατος For πίνω used absolutely in the sense "drink (wine)", e. g. Philyll. fr. 5.3; Epicr. fr. 3.17; Theopomp. Com. fr. 33.10; Anaxandr. fr. 42.15; Diod. Com. fr. 2.12; Austin–Olson 2004 on Ar. Th. 735–7. For θάνατος used hyperbolically with an epexegetic infinitive, cf. S. OC 529 θάνατος μὲν τάδ' ἀκούειν ("it is death to hear this"); Alex. fr. 9.11–12 (B.) τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἕτερον λουτρόν ἐστιν, οὐ πότος, / ψυκτῆρι πίνειν καὶ κάδοις. (A.) θάνατος μὲν οὖν ("(B.) The other style is bathing, not drinking, when you drink with a cooler and jars. (A.) Actually, it's death"); "Simon." AP 7.431.8 = FGE 955 Σπάρτᾳ δ' οὐ θανεῖν ἀλλ' φυγεῖν θάνατος ("for Sparta, it is not dying but flight that is death"); and cf. Alciphr. 1.4.2 θάνατος ἡ γῆ ("the land is death" for a fisherman).

---

[2] Especially Thracians (cf. Satyr. fr. 1, FHG iii.160 = fr. 20 Schorn, where Alcibiades outdoes the hard–drinking Thracians in drinking unmixed wine) and Scythians (cf. Ath. 10.432a, paraphrasing Pl. Lg. 637d–e). The Spartan king Cleomenes is said by Herodotus (6.84.3) to have picked up the habit of drinking unmixed wine from the Scythians and to have gone mad and died as a result. For the supposed dangers of ἀκρατοποσία, cf. the story at Plu. Alex. 70.1 and Ath. 10.437a–b about a drinking contest held by Alexander the Great that resulted in the death of the winner and 41 other contestants. For drinking unmixed wine in comedy, cf. Theophil. fr. 8.5–6 (B.) ἐπέπιες δὲ πόσον; (A.) ἀκράτου δώδεκα / κοτύλας ("(B.) How large a toast did you drink? (A.) Twelve kotylai ('cups') of unmixed wine"); Men. Sam. 394 πίνουσ' ἄκρατον with Sommerstein 2013 ad loc.

ὕδωρ For disparagement of water-drinking in other contexts, e. g. fr. *203 ὕδωρ δὲ πίνων οὐδὲν ἂν τέκοις σοφόν ("you couldn't come up with anything clever drinking water"; attributed to Cratinus in a Hellenistic epigram, but not necessarily to be regarded as a line from one of his plays); Epich. fr. 131 οὐκ ἔστι διθύραμβος, ὅκχ' ὕδωρ πίῃς ("it's not a dithyramb if you're drinking water"); Ar. Eq. 349; Aristopho fr. 12.7–8 ἐσθίουσι τε / λάχανά τε καὶ πίνουσιν ἐπὶ τούτοις ὕδωρ ("they eat vegetables and drink water to accompany them"; of Pythagoreans); Bato fr. 2.9 ἀλυσιτελὴς εἶ τῇ πόλει πίνων ὕδωρ ("you're no use to the city when you drink water", sc. because wine-drinking is better for the economy).

2 ἴσον ἴσῳ For the phrase used in reference to wine, see (in addition to the passages quoted in the introductory section of Interpretation) e. g. fr. 196; Ar. Pl. 1132; Archipp. fr. 2; Stratt. frr. 23.2; 64.2; Philetaer. fr. 1.1; Aristopho fr. 13.3; Xenarch. fr. 9. For other polyptota with ἴσος, e. g. Hdt. 9.48.4; S. Ant. 142; E. Ph. 750; Pl. Lg. 837a, and cf. Plaut. Per. 223 par pari respondes dicto ("you respond in equal measure"). On polyptoton generally, Gygli-Wyss 1966.

For μάλιστα modifying an adjective to form a kind of periphrastic superlative, cf. Ar. fr. 690 μάλιστα σῶς ("especially safe"); E. Hipp. 1421 μάλιστα φίλτατος ("most truly dear"); fr. 743.2 μάλισθ' ἁλώσιμος ("especially easy"); X. HG 1.7.29 μάλιστα μέγιστοί ("by far the greatest"); see Schwyzer 1953 II.184; Thesleff 1954. 119–20; Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 109.1 (on μάλα used to intensify an adjective).

ἄκρατος sc. οἶνος, as at e. g. Pherecr. fr. 147.2; Ar. Ec. 1123; Theopomp. Com. fr. 41.2.

δύο χοᾶς A chous (< χέω, "pour") was a unit of volume equivalent to 12 kotylai ("cups") or approximately 3.2 liters (cf. Young 1939. 280), and also a pitcher presumably capable of holding roughly the same amount. Here volume is in question; contrast fr. 199.3 (wine-pouring vessels), and see in general Millis 2015 on Anaxandr. fr. 33.1. Two choes is an enormous amount to drink, the rough equivalent of 8.5 standard modern 750-ml bottles of wine; cf. Epin. fr. 2.4–5 ῥυτὸν / χωροῦντα δύο χοᾶς, ὃν οὐδ' ἂν ἐλέφας ἐκπίοι ("a rhyton that holds two choes, which not even an elephant could drain"); Ath. 10.414f (the Megarian trumpeter Herodorus used to eat six choinikes of bread and 20 litrai of any meat he could get, drank two choes of wine, and could play two trumpets at once), 434a–b (Alexander the Great dies after failing to finish a second two-choes cup of wine). For similar hyperbole with three choes, Damox. fr. 1.3 (a rhyton called an "elephant" that holds three choes); Hedyl. HE 1837–8 ἡ διαπινομένη Καλλίστιον ἀνδράσι, θαῦμα / κοὐ ψευδές, νῆστις τρεῖς χόας ἐξέπιεν ("Callistion, who keeps up with the men when she drinks—an amazing boast, but not a lie—drank three choes on an empty stomach"); Theodorus of Hieropolis fr. 1, FHG iv.513 ἤσθιε μνᾶς κρεῶν εἴκοσι καὶ τοσαύτας ἄρτων οἴνου τε τρεῖς χοᾶς ("he used to eat 20 minas of meat, along with an equal amount of bread, and three choes of wine"; of Milo of Croton).

3–4 Kottabos (also referenced in fr. 124) was a drinking-game that involved tossing wine-lees (λάταγες) at a target consisting of either (1) a plate (the πλάστιγξ) that was balanced on top of a pole-stand, and that—if struck—fell and hit a bronze vessel called the μάνης, producing a loud noise (= κότταβος ἐν λεκάνῃ or κότταβος κατακτός); or (2) small vessels (ὀξύβαφα) floating in a basin (λεκάνη) filled with water, which one attempted to sink (= κότταβος δι' ὀξυβάφων). Which variety of the game is in question here is unclear. See in general Ath. 15.665d–8f; Poll. 6.109–11; Hayley 1894; Schneider 1922; Sparkes 1960; Csapo–Miller 1991; Schäfer 1997. 48–9; Olson 1998 on Ar. Pax 343/4 (with additional bibliography and primary references); Campagner 2002; Pütz 2003. 221–41.

3 ἀγκύλη (< *$h_2$enk–, "bend"; see Beekes 2010 s. v.) is not attested as the name of a drinking vessel outside of Athenaeus and the lexicographic sources listed in Citation context, and the idea appears to have arisen from a confused belief that ἀπ' ἀγκύλης should be taken with πίνουσ' ("as she drinks from an ankylê"; thus the manuscripts) rather than with ἵησι ("from her ankylê … she tosses"). Cf. Bacch. fr. 17.2–3 τὴν ἀπ' ἀγκύλης ἵησι τοῖσδε τοῖς νεανία ις / λευκὸν ἀντείνασα πῆχυν ("which (fem.) she tosses from her ankylê in honor of these youths, stretching out her white forearm"); Anacr. PMG 415 Σικελὸν κότταβον ἀγκύλῃ † δαΐζων † ("† daizôn † Sicilian kottabos lees with his ankylê").[3] ἐπονομάζουσα For invoking the name of a friend or lover as one makes a kottabos throw, see also Pi. fr. 128.2–3; X. HG 2.3.56; Ath. 15.668b, and for a similar practice while shooting dice in Roman comedy, Plaut. As. 780 quom iaciat [sc. talos], 'te' ne dicat: nomen nominat ("when she throws [sc. dice], she won't say 'you'; she'll call you by name"), 904–5; Capt. 73 sibi amator, talos quom iacit, scortum invocat ("when a lover throws dice, he calls out his whore's name"); Cur. 354–60.

4 λάταγες (probably substrate vocabulary, like many words associated with viticulture, e. g. ἄμπελος, "grape-vine"; κάμαξ, "vine-pole"; ὄρχος, "row of vines"; χάραξ, "vine-prop") were the dregs of wine at the bottom of a drinking cup used to play kottabos.[4] The word is first attested at Alc. fr. 322 λάταγες ποτέονται κυλίχναν ἀπὺ Τηίαν ("latages fly from Teian cups") and

---

[3] "Sidearm" (Rusten 2011. 214) is much too far from the Greek to be appropriate.

[4] The lexicographers struggle with the word, which they know only as a literary curiosity: Hsch. κ 3755, 3801 (citing E. fr. 631, where kossabos is used to mean is found elsewhere in the 5th century at Hermipp. fr. 48.7, as well as at Crit. fr. B2.2 West[2]; S. fr. 277.1 (satyr play?); Achae. TrGF 20 F 26.3 (satyr play); Dionys. Minor fr. 3.6 West[2].

τῷ Κορινθίῳ πέει plays on E. fr. 664 (from Stheneboia) πεσὸν δέ νιν λέληθεν οὐδὲν ἐκ χερός, / ἀλλ' εὐθὺς αὐδᾷ· 'τῷ Κορινθίῳ ξένῳ' ("She notices every crumb that falls from her hand, and immediately she says: 'In honor of the Corinthian stranger!'"). Ath. 10.427d–e introduces the fragment with the comment "They dedicated the bits of food that fell off the table to their dead friends", and Hsch. κ 3629[5] identifies it as a description of Stheneboia referring to Bellerophon, but connects it with playing kottabos (a confused reference to this fragment rather than the Euripidean original?). The same verse is referenced more directly at Ar. Th. 404 (411 BCE) οὐκ ἔσθ' ὅπως οὐ τῷ Κορινθίῳ ξένῳ ("It must be for the Corinthian stranger!", the comment of a suspicious husband when his wife drops and breaks a pot; see Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.), putting its notoriety beyond any doubt.

πέος (cognate with Lat. penis) is a crude, colloquial term, first attested in Archilochus (frr. 327.2; 328.9) but otherwise confined to comedy (e. g. Ar. Ach. 158) and epigram (AP 11.224.1; 12.240.2); see Henderson 1991 § 1. Here it is reserved for the end of the line as a shocking—and thus amusing—alteration of the Euripidean phrase.

fr. 300 K.–A. (274 K.)

πρὸς τοῦ Σόλωνος καὶ Δράκοντος, οἷσι νῦν φρύγουσιν ἤδη τὰς κάχρυς τοῖς κύρβεσιν

1 τοῦ Plu.[SUMA] : τοὺς Edmonds : τῶν Kassel 2 τοῖς Plu.[S] : ταῖς Plu.[UMA]

in the name of Solon and Draco, with whose kyrbeis they are at this very moment parching their barley kernels latages); λ 390 (confounding latax, kottabos and the noise produced by the manês); Phot. λ 114 (latages glosses kottaboi).

---

[5] Κορίνθιος ξένος· ἐπὶ τῶν τὰς λάταγας ῥιπτούντων. ἀπὸ (vel ἐπὶ?) τῆς παρ' Εὐριπίδῃ Σθενεβοίας τῷ Βελλεροφόντῃ † ἀποχευούσης †, ὡς δὲ Ἄτταλος ἐν τῷ Περὶ Παροιμιῶν ἐπὶ τῶν † διὰ κάλλος, ὡς ὁ Βελλεροφόντης ("a Corinthian stranger: in reference to people throwing latages; from (or 'in reference to'?) the Euripidean Stheneboia † as she pours out † for Bellerophon; but according to Attalus in his On Proverbs in reference to those † on account of beauty, like Bellerophon").

Plu. Sol. 25.1–2
ἰσχὺν δὲ τοῖς νόμοις πᾶσιν εἰς ἑκατὸν ἐνιαυτοὺς ἔδωκε· καὶ κατεγράφησαν εἰς ξυλίνους ἄξονας ἐν πλαισίοις περιέχουσι στρεφομένους, ὧν ἔτι καθ᾽ ἡμᾶς ἐν Πρυτανείῳ λείψανα μικρὰ διεσώζετο· καὶ προσηγορεύθησαν, ὡς Ἀριστοτέλης (Ath. 7.1) φησί, κύρβεις. καὶ Κρατῖνος ὁ κωμικὸς εἴρηκέ που· ——. ἔνιοι δέ φασιν ἰδίως ἐν οἷς ἱερὰ καὶ θυσίαι περιέχονται κύρβεις, ἄξονας δὲ τοὺς ἄλλους ὠνομάσθαι. κοινὸν μὲν οὖν ὤμνυεν ὅρκον ἡ βουλὴ τοὺς Σόλωνος νόμους ἐμπεδώσειν, ἴδιον δ᾽ ἕκαστος τῶν θεσμοθετῶν ἐν ἀγορᾷ πρὸς τῷ λίθῳ, καταφατίζων, εἴ τι παραβαίη τῶν θεσμῶν, ἀνδριάντα χρυσοῦν ἰσομέτρητον ἀναθήσειν ἐν Δελφοῖς

He gave all his laws authority for one hundred years, and they were written down on wooden tablets (axones) that revolved along with the oblong frames containing them. Slight remnants of these were still preserved in the Prytaneion in our day; according to Aristotle (Ath. 7.1), they were also called kyrbeis. The comic poet Cratinus too says somewhere: ——. But some authorities say that only those tablets in which sacred rites and sacrifices are contained are properly called kyrbeis, whereas the rest are termed axones. The Council accordingly swore a group oath to maintain the laws of Solon, and each thesmothete swore separately at the stone in the Agora, vowing that if he transgressed the thesmoi ("statutes") in any way, he would dedicate a gold statue of equal value at Delphi

Meter Iambic trimeter.
– – ⏑ – | – ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ –
⏑ – ⏑ – | – ⏑ – – – ⏑ –

Discussion Bergk 1838. 139; Meineke 1839 II.217–18; Linforth 1919. 281; Holland 1941. 358; Edmonds 1957 I.118–19; Andrewes 1974. 27; Stroud 1979. 3–4, 7, 34, 37; Immerwahr 1985. 134; Robertson 1986. 148–53; Kassel ad loc.; Meyer 2016. 334

Attribution to known plays Tentatively assigned by Bergk to Nomoi, in which he believed Solon was a character; cf. frr. 134–5 with Kassel–Austin ad loc.

Text In 1, Kassel tentatively proposed τῶν for the paradosis τοῦ in order to allow the article to govern Solon and Draco collectively; but cf. S. Ai. 587–8 σε πρὸς τοῦ σοῦ τέκνου / καὶ θεῶν ἱκνοῦμαι ("I beseech you by your child and the gods"); Aeschin. 1.87 πρὸς τοῦ Διὸς καὶ θεῶν ("by Zeus and the gods"). Edmonds' τούς, which transforms the beginning of 1 into a prepositional phrase ("toward the kyrbeis of Solon and Draco"), deserves no consideration.

In 2, the gender of κύρβις is uncertain (masculine at Achae. TrGF 20 F 19.3–4; feminine at Ar. Av. 1354). But S is far and away the oldest manuscript of the Lives, and its readings—here τοῖς for the other witnesses' ταῖς—are to be preferred when there is no other criterion on which to judge.

Citation context From a discussion of Solon's legal reforms seemingly drawn from a Hellenistic treatise that discussed the kyrbeis and axones. Cratinus is cited to show that the kyrbeis were made of wood and are thus to be identified with the axones (a dubious proposition).

Interpretation Part of a desperate plea offered in the name of Athens' two most famous traditional lawgivers in reaction to some allegedly fundamental disregard of the city's legal codes. On the traditional understanding of the verse—that the kyrbeis are being used as firewood (or perhaps as cooking utensils; see below)—one would expect the subject of the relative clause, and the party whose other behavior is being complained of, to be female, since processing grain was women's work (e. g. Ar. Nu. 1358 ὡσπερεὶ κάχρυς γυναῖκ' ἀλοῦσαν, "like an old woman grinding barley"; Ec. 221; Sol. fr. 71b Ruschenbush, cited below).

Draco (PA 4553; PAA 374190) produced Athens' first set of written laws in 621/0 BCE ([Arist.] Ath. 4.1), although he was said to have adapted existing (oral) norms when he did so (Arist. Pol. 1274^{b}15; cf. [Arist.] Ath. 3.1). Draco's legal code, later judged overly harsh (Arist. Pol. 1274^{b}16–18; Plu. Sol. 17.1–2), is supposed to have punished idleness and petty theft, as well as murder, with death (Plu. Sol. 17.1; Alciphr. 2.38.3); to have granted impunity to those who caught and abused a μοιχός ("adulterer", i. e. a man who engaged in unauthorized sex with a free woman; Paus. 9.36.8); and to have banned anyone who committed homicide from "libations, mixing bowls, sacrifices and the markets" (D. 20.158). Draco's code also enfranchised hoplites, allowing them to vote and to hold certain magistracies depending on their property qualifications, and established a council of 401 men, the members of which were elected by lot from hoplites over 30 years of age and could be fined for absenteeism ([Arist.] Ath. 4). Draco's laws were replaced by Solon's (see below), with the exception of those on homicide, which were left intact (Plu. Sol. 17) and which were in fact republished in 409/8 BCE (IG I^{3} 104.5 with Stroud 1968) and could supposedly still be read in the late 4th century BCE ([D.] 47.41). This is the first mention of Draco in our sources; see in general Gagarin 1981; Carawan 1998. 33–83; Phillips 2008. 35–57.

Solon son of Exekestides (PA 12806; PAA 827640), born ca. 625 BCE to a notable family of moderate means (Arist. Pol. 1296^{a}18–20; [Arist.] Ath. 5.3; 28.2; Plu. Sol. 1; 3.2; 14.1; D.S. 9.1; Suda σ 776), was chosen as archon in 594/3 BCE and granted extraordinary powers to reform Athens' laws in order to ease tensions between rival aristocratic factions, on the one hand, and between Athens' aristocrats and its poorer and less powerful citizens, on the other (Plu. Sol. 12–14, 16). Chief among Solon's reforms were the seisachtheia (lit. "shaking off of burdens"), which put an end to debt-slavery for Athenians (Plu.

Sol. 19), and a redivision of Athens' citizen-body into four political classes (pentakosiomedimnoi, hippeis, zeugitai and thetes) according to the amount of assessable property each man controlled. The first three classes were allowed to hold political office, while the fourth could only serve on juries, in the Assembly ([Arist.] Ath. 7.3; Plu. Sol. 18) and in a new court called the Heliaia. Other reforms attributed to Solon include the disenfranchisement of citizens who refused to take up arms in the event of a revolution, supposedly in order to counteract political apathy ([Arist.] Ath. 8.5; Plu. Sol. 20.1); the abolition of dowries (Plu. Sol. 20.6; patently some sort of ancient misunderstanding of older sources); and the creation of the right of one citizen to take legal action on behalf of another ([Arist.] Ath. 9; Plu. Sol. 18.6). After passing his reforms, Solon surrendered his extraordinary powers and left the country (Hdt. 1.29.1; [Arist.] Ath. 7.2; Plu. Sol. 25.1). He died shortly after Peisistratus seized power for the first time, and was eventually honored with a statue in the Agora (D. 19.251). For Solon in general, see Davies 1971. 322–4; Oliva 1973; Rhodes 1981. 118–20; the essays collected in Blok and Lardinois 2006; Hendrickson 2013 (focusing on the complicated relationship between the poems and the biographical information in the pseudo-Aristotelian Athenaion Politeia). For the laws in particular, see Leão and Rhodes 2015. For the image of Solon in comedy, see Olson 2017 on Eupolis' Dêmoi.

For Draco and Solon mentioned together, see also And. 1.81, 83; X. Oec. 14.4; D. 24.211; Aeschin. 1.6; Luc. Cal. 8; Alciphr. 2.38.3.

The laws of Draco and Solon were recorded on kyrbeis and axones, objects whose exact physical shape, contents, location and character were a subject of intense scholarly debate already in the Hellenistic period; cf. Ar. Byz. fr. 410 with the other ancient references collected by Slater 1986 ad loc. and Stroud 1979. 28–33. Both kyrbeis and axones had authoritative legal texts of one sort or another carved or painted on them (e. g. Ar. Av. 1354; Pl. Pol. 289d–e), possibly in boustrophedon (Harp. p. 220.8–12 = O 14 Keaney, in reference to the axones[6]). Kyrbeis may have presented vertically (e. g. [Arist.] Ath. 7.1; Harp. p. 220.8–12 = O 14 Keaney), axones thus perhaps horizontally; whether they were 3- or 4-sided was a matter of discussion already in the Library in Alexandria (Eratosth. fr. 80 Strecker). Both kyrbeis and axones were thought to have once been housed on the Acropolis but to have been moved to the Agora and the Prytaneion, respectively, by Ephialtes late in the first half of the 5th century BCE (Anaximen. FGrH 72 F 13; [Arist.] Ath. 7.1; Poll. 8.128; Phot. o 173). See in general Andrewes 1974. 21–8; Stroud 1979, esp. 47–60; Davis 2011; Meyer 2016.

---

[6] Cf. Phot. o 173 = Suda o 104 (from the Epitome of Harpocration).

The axones were definitely made of wood (also e. g. Gell. 2.12.1; D.L. 1.45, 63; Suda α 2833). That the kyrbeis were wooden as well—in which case the point is that they are being burnt[7]—is less certain, and they may instead have been made of bronze. Linforth 1919. 281 n. 1 (followed by Holland 1945. 358–9; Stroud 1979. 3–4, 28, 37) accordingly suggested that Cratinus' character means that the kyrbeis have been repurposed as roasting pans. Robertson points out, however, that we have no evidence for metal grain-roasting pans and that kyrbeis (certainly not bowl-like, regardless of what one believes their precise shape was) would be an odd choice of object to convert to this purpose, and suggests as an alternative translation of οἷσι … / … τοῖς κύρβεσιν "by virtue of whose kyrbeis", with reference to Solon's regulations for meals served in the Prytaneion. Alternatively, 5th-century usage may have been looser than modern scholars would like, and Cratinus' character may be using the term kyrbeis for what ought properly to have been called axones.

Barley (for which, see in general Garnsey 1988. 87–164; Braun 1995. 25–32; Zohary–Hopf–Weiss 2012. 51–9) is husked and was therefore roasted in order to separate the grain from the chaff (Plin. Nat. 18.61, 72, 97, 116). The device employed was referred to as a φρυγεύς[8] (seemingly the Attic term) or κοδομεῖον (Poll. 6.64), a πατάλλιον (Poll. 10.108) or a φώγανον (Poll. 10.109). See in general Blümner 1912. 10–13; Moritz 1958. xx–xxi.

---

[7] Cf. Hdt. 8.96.2 (cited by Kassel–Austin) Κωλιάδες δὲ γυναῖκες ἐρετμοῖσι φρύξουσι ("Colian women will roast [their barley] with oars"; an oracle referring to the massive amount of driftwood to be produced by the upcoming battle at Salamis).

[8] Pollux treats φρυγεύς and cognates four times, offering a series of vague and seemingly contradictory definitions of φρύγετρον in particular (1.246 ᾧ τὰς κάχρυς ἔφρυγον; 6.64 τὸ ἐργαλεῖον; 7.181 ἀγγεῖον δὲ ᾧ ἐνέφρυγον) and finally at 10.109 quoting the ambiguous Polyzel. fr. 6 οὗπερ αἱ χύτραι κρέμανται καὶ τὸ φρύγετρόν γε πρός ("where the cookpots are hanging and the phrygetron as well") and conceding that whether the word refers to an implement or a vessel is unclear. LSJ s. v. I (followed by Montanari s. v.) glosses φρύγετρον in the Polyzelus fragment and in Sol. fr. 71b Ruschenbush (Athenian girls going to their wedding ceremonies should carry a φρύγετρον "as evidence of their involvement in the production of barley meal"; quoted at Poll. 1.246) as "a vessel for roasting barley". But Hsch. φ 926 offers φρύγετρον· ξυλήφιον ᾧ κινοῦσι τὰς πεφρυγμένας κριθάς ("phrygetron: a piece of wood with which they stir the roasted barley"; = LSJ s. v. II), which is compatible with the passages from Polyzelus and Solon, and LSJ s. v. I ought probably to be struck and the material assembled there transferred to s. v. II, leaving φρυγεύς (Theopomp. Com. fr. 54) as the word for "roasting vessel". For the suffix, cf. κίνητρον ("stirrer"), λίστρον ("spade"), μύστρον ("spoon"), πλῆκτρον ("pick"), τέρετρον ("drill"), ὑπάλειπτρον ("salve-spreader").

1 πρός + gen. is common in adjurations, most often with the names of gods, e. g. πρὸς (τοῦ) Διός, "by Zeus" (e. g. Pi. fr. 52k.7; Ar. Nu. 314; Av. 130; Pl. Euthphr. 4e; D. 9.15); πρὸς τῆς Ἑστίας, "by Hestia" (Ar. Pl. 395; Anaxandr. fr. 46.1; Diph. fr. 81.3; Strato Com. fr. 1.28); πρὸς (τῶν) θεῶν, "by the gods" (e. g. Il. 1.339; S. Ai. 371; E. Alc. 382; Ar. Ec. 1095; Stratt. fr. 63.1; X. HG 2.4.21 (speech); Pl. Sph. 232e). See in general Poultney 1936. 188–90; Schwyzer 1953 II.516[9].

1–2 For the combination νῦν … ἤδη in the sense "right now, at this very moment", e. g. Ar. Nu. 295, 326–7 ("right now"); Ra. 882/3–4; Men. fr. 359.2. At fr. 145, by contrast, the words are to be taken separately (νῦν with τῇ, but ἤδη with πῖθι λαβών).

2 φρύγω (etymology uncertain) is a general verb for treatment with dry heat, used not just of the processing of barley (also e. g. Pherecr. fr. 197.1; Th. 6.22) but also of the roasting of other items (e. g. fr. 150.2 (Odysseus' men cooked by the Cyclops); Pherecr. fr. 170 (chickpeas); Ar. Ra. 510–11; Ec. 844 (both in reference to τραγήματα, "snacks"); [Hes.] fr. 302.4 (pottery in a kiln); Hdt. 2.94.2 (castor-berries); Theoc. 7.66 (beans). More extended uses at Telecl. fr. 41.1 φρύγει τι δρᾶμα καινόν ("he's baking a new drama"); Theoc. 6.16; 9.13 (both of summer heat); 12.9 (of the sun).

κάχρυς A homely pre-Greek word (Beekes 2010 s. v.) first attested here and mostly confined in the classical period to comedy (Ar. Nu. 1358; V. 1306 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.), Hippocrates (e. g. Morb. II 67 = 7.102.12 Littré) and Theophrastus (e. g. HP 3.10.4). Moer. κ 18 identifies it as an Atticism (κάχρυς Ἀττικοί· κριθαὶ πεφρυγμέναι Ἕλληνες, "Athenians (say) kachrys, whereas Greeks (generally say) 'parched barley'"; cf. Phot. κ 509 = Ael. Dion. κ 17 κάχρυς· κριθαὶ πεφρυγμέναι, "kachrys: parched barley"), hence presumably its presence at Alciphr. 2.24.2.

κύρβεσιν Etymology uncertain; used metaphorically in the singular of a litigious individual at Ar. Nu. 448, whence presumably Aristaenet. 1.17.[10]

fr. 301 K.–A. (298 K.)

ὡς ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες so that we may raise our armpit up after we've got drunk[11]

---

[9] Scarcely "at the Kyrbeis" (Rusten 2011. 214).
[10] Also a dubious conjecture by Lobel at A. fr. 451c.36.
[11] Not "while drinking", as at Storey 2011. 401.

Hsch. μ 374
μασχάλην αἴρειν· κωθωνίζεσθαι καὶ πίνειν. ὡς ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες. ἐν τῷ μεθύειν αἴρειν ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην. εἰώθεισαν γὰρ λέγειν μασχάλην αἴρειν (scripsimus : αἴρεις cod.) ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνίζειν, καὶ καταμωκᾶσθαι ταῖς χερσίν· οἷόν ἐστι καὶ τὸ παρ' Ὁμήρῳ· χεῖρας ἀνασχόμενοι (Od. 18.100) to raise one's armpit: kôthônizesthai ("to drink hard") and pinein ("to drink"); so that we may raise our armpit up after we've got drunk. To raise one's armpit up while drunk. For they were accustomed to say "to raise one's armpit" (our emendation for the manuscripts' "you raise your armpit") instead of kôthônizein ("to drink hard"), and to make mocking gestures with their hands; the Homeric cheiras anaschomenoi ("holding up their hands"; Od. 18.100) is an example

Zenob. 5.7 (~ Prov. cod. Par. Suppl. 676 et Prov. Bodl. 625)
μασχάλην αἴρειν· ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνίζεσθαι καὶ πίνειν. Κρατῖνος· ὡς ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην αἴρειν καταμωκωμένους ταῖς χερσίν. οἷόν ἐστι τὸ παρ' Ὁμήρῳ χεῖρας ἀνασχόμενοι (Od. 18.100) to raise one's armpit: instead of kôthônizesthai ("to drink hard") and pinein ("to drink"). Cratinus; so as to raise their armpits up as they make mocking gestures with their hands. The Homeric cheiras anaschomenoi ("raising their hands"; Od. 18.100) is an example

Prov. cod. Par. Suppl. 676 (Cohn, CPG Suppl. I p. 66)
μασχάλην αἴρειν· ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνίζεσθαι καὶ πίνειν. Κρατῖνος· ἄνω μασχάλην αἴρειν. τάχα ἐκ τοῦ ποιεῖν τινας (⟨τοῦτο ἐν τῷ⟩ add. Cohn) μεθύειν. ἢ μωκωμένους ταῖς χερσίν, οἷόν ἐστι καὶ ⟨τὸ⟩ παρ' Ὁμήρῳ χεῖρας ἀνασχόμενοι (Od. 18.100) to raise one's armpit: in place of kôthônizesthai ("to drink hard") and pinein ("to drink"). Cratinus: to raise one's armpit. Perhaps from the fact that some people do † to be drunk ("do this in the course of being drunk" Cohn); or as they make mocking gestures with their hands, as for example ⟨the⟩ Homeric cheiras anaschomenoi ("holding up their hands"; Od. 18.100)

Meter Most easily understood as trochaic tetrameter (thus Runkel, Meineke and Kaibel):

–⏑–– –⏑–– –⏑–– –⏑–

But perhaps iambic trimeter instead (thus Kock, followed by Kassel–Austin, reading ὡς ἄνω / τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες):

⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑– ×⟩–⏑–
––⏑– ––⏑|– ⏑–⏑–

Discussion Kock 1880 I.99; Tsirimbas 1936. 70

Citation context The basic source for the notes in Zenobius and Hesychius, as well as for the parallel material in other lexicographers and paroemiographers collected below, must be the lost Atticist lexicon drawn on inter alia by the common source of Photius and the Suda (generally referred to as Σ′′), as well as by Pollux, who has adapted the material to his own style and purposes:

– Poll. 6.26 ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν μεθυόντων ἔλεγον τὸ μασχάλην αἴρειν, ὡς τοῦτο ἔθος ὂν τοῖς ἐν μέθῃ· διὸ καὶ Ὅμηρον (Od. 18.100) προειπεῖν χεῖρας ἀνισχόντες γέλῳ ἔκθανον ("they would use the expression 'to raise one's armpit' in reference to people who were drunk, since this was habitual for those who were inebriated; Homer (Od. 18.100) accordingly proclaimed 'they died from laughter, holding up their hands'";[12] from a discussion of terms in μεθυ- having to do with intoxicated persons or drunkenness)
– Phot. μ 139 = Suda μ 273 μασχάλην αἴρεις· ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνισθήσῃ. οἱ γὰρ μεθύοντες ᾖρον τὰς μασχάλας καταμωκώμενοι. καὶ οἱ μνηστῆρες χεῖρας ἀνίσχοντες γέλῳ ἔκθανον (Od. 18.100) ("you raise your armpit: in place of kôthônisthêsêi. For men who are drunk would raise their armpits when they made mocking gestures with their hands. And the suitors died with laughter holding up their hands (Od. 18.100)"; identified by Erbse as Paus. Gr. μ 7)
– Diogenian. 6.33 μασχάλην αἴρειν· ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνίζεσθαι καὶ πίνειν ("to raise one's armpit: in place of kôthönizesthai ('to drink hard') and pinein ('to drink')")
– Prov. Bodl. 625 μασχάλην αἴρειν· ἀντὶ τοῦ κωθωνίζεσθαι καὶ πίνειν. Κρατῖνος· ἄνω μασχάλην αἴρειν, ἀντὶ τοῦ † κωθωνιζῃ † ("to raise one's armpit: in place of kôthônizesthai ('to drink hard') and pinein ('to drink'). Cratinus: to raise one's armpit up, in place of † kôthônizêi †")
– Greg.Cypr. cod. Leid. 2.72 μασχάλην αἴρειν· ἐπὶ τῶν πολλάκις πινόντων ("to raise one's armpit: in reference to those who drink frequently").

Related material, but with the order of the words in the lemma reversed and a different explanation of the phrase,[13] and thus presumably drawn from a different source, is preserved at – Hsch. α 2066 αἴρειν μασχάλην· οὕτως εἰώθασι λέγειν ἀντὶ τοῦ ὀρχήσασθαι. οἱ δὲ τὸ ἀγροικικῶς ὀρχεῖσθαι ("to raise one's armpit: they are accustomed to use this expression in place of 'to dance'. But other authorities (take it to mean) 'to be dancing clumsily'")

– Phot. α 640 αἶρε μασχάλην· οὕτως εἰώθασι λέγειν ἀντὶ τοῦ ὀρχήσασθαι ἢ κωθωνίζεσθαι ("Raise your armpit!: they are accustomed to use this expression in place of 'to dance' or kôthônizesthai ('to drink hard')")

---

[12] Hence apparently the garbled "to raise the underarms, i. e. to laugh recklessly, of a drunkard Cratin. 301 Ael. epist. 15 Hsch." in Montanari s. v. μασχάλη.

[13] Note also ἀγροικικῶς for the expected ἀγροικῶς in Hsch. α 2066 and Greg.Cypr. cod. Mosq. 1.12.

- Suda αι 283 = Synag. B α 536 αἶρε μασχάλην· ἐπὶ τοῦ ὀρχήσασθαι ("Raise your armpit!: in reference to dancing")
- Greg.Cypr. cod. Mosq. 1.12 αἴρειν μασχάλην· ἀντὶ τοῦ εὐωχεῖσθαι· εἴρηται ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγροικικῶς ὀρχουμένων ("to raise one's armpit: in place of euôcheisthai ('to feast'). The term comes from those who are dancing clumsily")
- Apostol. 1.74 αἴρειν μασχάλην· ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρχουμένων ἀγροίκως ("to raise one's armpit: in reference to those who are dancing clumsily").

Text The paroemiographers associate the phrase μασχάλην αἴρειν with Cratinus, but report only that he wrote ἄνω μασχάλην αἴρειν. Hesychius, meanwhile, offers the words ὡς ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες, but without reference to Cratinus. Runkel combined the sources and assigned ὡς ἄνω τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες to Cratinus, and the words might in fact easily have dropped out of Zenobius via a simple saute du même au même, with the original text reading Κρατῖνος· ὡς ἄνω ⟨τὴν μασχάλην αἴρωμεν ἐμπεπωκότες. διὰ τὸ μεθύοντας⟩ τὴν μασχάλην αἴρειν καταμωκωμένους ταῖς χερσίν ("Cratinus: So that we may raise <our armpit up after we've got drunk. On account of the fact that drunks raise⟩ their armpits when they make mocking gestures with their hands"), as Kaibel hypothesized.

Interpretation μασχάλην αἴρειν (literally "to raise one's armpit") is apparently a condensed colloquial way of saying "to raise (one's hand and thus expose) one's armpit" that refers to lifting one's hands in the air as one drunkenly dances, gestures or the like. Outside of the lexicographic and paroemiographic sources collected in Citation context, the phrase is attested only at Ael. Ep. 15 οὐ χεῖρον δ' ἂν εἴη οἰνωμένον σε καὶ μασχάλην ἆραι ("it would be no worse if you were to raise your armpit while drinking wine"), which lends further support to the notion that it was identified by ancient scholarship as an Atticism.

μασχάλη is first attested at hHerm. 242 χέλυν δ' ὑπὸ μασχάλῃ εἶχε ("he held the tortoise/lyre under his armpit") and in the related verb μασχαλίζω at A. Ch. 439, and is absent from elevated poetry (in satyr play at A. fr. 39.2; in comedy at Ar. Ach. 852; Ec. 60; in prose at e. g. X. Eq. 12.5; Hp. Epid. VII 44 = 5.412.3 Littré; Thphr. Char. 19.3). The word can be used of the equivalent part of an animal (e. g. A. fr. 39.2 [wolves]; Simon Eq. 6 [a horse]; cf. μασχαλιστήρ, a strap that runs under the shoulder of a horse, at Hdt. 1.215.1[14]) and of the point where the branch of a plant joins its stem (e. g. Thphr. HP 3.15.1). Contrast μάλη (first attested at Ar. Lys. 985; subsequently at e. g. X. HG 2.3.23; Pl. Lg. 789c; Alex. fr. 107.2; Diph. fr. 3.3, and picked up as an Atticism at e. g. Plu. Mor. 674c; Luc. Gall. 29; Alciphr. 3.10.3), which is used in the classical period exclusively in the phrase ὑπὸ μάλης and seems properly to refer only to the human armpit (thus Poll. 2.139 "ignoramuses refer to the maschalê as a malê, but Attic-speakers do not, although they do refer to what is carried under it as hypo malês"; Phryn. Ecl. 169 "you are not to say malê, (but you may) nevertheless (use) hypo malês"). Etymology uncertain; Beekes 2010 s. v. suggests (as is his wont) that the word may be substrate vocabulary and compares ἀγκάλη.

[14] Beekes 2010 s. v. μασχάλη ("formally [μασχαλιστήρ] is a euphemistic expression for 'mutilate'"; also citing [A.] PV 71 ἀλλ' ἀμφὶ πλευραῖς μασχαλιστῆρας βάλε, "Throw maschalistêres about his flanks" [part of the process of binding Prometheus to the rock]) is confused.

ἐμπίνω ("drink one's fill, guzzle"; the compound is first attested at Thgn. 1129) is absent from tragic poetry and lyric; found in prose at Hdt. 3.11.3; 4.64.1 (both ugly passages referring to drinking the blood of one's enemies); in satyr play at E. Cyc. 336; in comedy at Epich. fr. 32.7; Ar. Pax 1143, 1156; Ec. 142; Alex. fr. 25.4; and in mock-didactic at Archestr. fr. 60.6 with Olson–Sens 2000 ad loc. The word is eventually picked up by a number of Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Plu. Cim. 1.4; Luc. Nigr. 22; Merc.Cond. 18; Ael. Ep. 15), suggesting that in the Roman period it was taken to be a 5th-/4th-century colloquialism.

fr. 302 K.–A. (299 K.)

ὁ δὲ μετ᾽ Εὐδήμου τρέχων
κώμυθα τὴν λοιπὴν ἔχων τῶν † πρωων †

1 Εὐδήμου Kassel–Austin : εὐδήμου Σ : εὐόδμου Toup : εὐδέσμου Geel : fort. Εὔδημον
2 κώμυθα Meineke : κώμυθος Σ ἔχων Σ : ἔχει Callierges † πρωων † $Σ^{KUEAT}$: Τρώων $Σ^{G}$: πατρῴων Adert : πρῷων Kassel–Austin, Meineke ducente

but the man running with Eudemus holding the remaining bunch of the † prôôn †

$Σ^{KGUEAT}$ Theoc. 4.18
κώμυθα δίδωμι: κώμυς (sic $Σ^{K}$: κώμυθος $Σ^{cett.}$) ἡ δέσμη, ὡς Κρατῖνος· ——

I offer a kômytha: A kômys (thus $Σ^{K}$: komythos in the scholia to the other mss.) is a bundle, as Cratinus (says): ——

Meter Probably iambic trimeter, e. g.
× – ⏑ – × ⟩| ⏑ ⏑ ⏑ – – – ⏑ –
– – ⏑ – – – ⏑ – – † – – †

Kock took the words to be trochaic tetrameter catalectic instead and printed ὁ δὲ μετ᾽ Εὐδήμου τρέχων κώμυθ᾽ ὅσην λοιπὴν ἔχει τῶν πατρῴων

⏑⏑–– –⏑–– –⏑–– –⏑–
–⏑––

Much more improbably, Kaibel detected glyconics, i. e.

ὁ δὲ μετ᾽ Εὐδήμου τρέχων
κώμυθος τολύπην ἔχων oo ⏑–––⏑–
oo –⏑⏑–⏑–

Discussion Kock 1880 I.99–100

Text If these are iambic trimeters—always the default assumption in comedy—the paradosis κώμυθος in 2 is unmetrical and likely represents the product of a scribe's belief (apparent also in the text of the scholion in all manuscripts but K) that this is the nominative form of the word (actually κώμυς) and is to be taken with ὁ … τρέχων in 1 ("the running kômythos"). If the word is emended to the accusative (thus Meineke), εὐδήμου in 1 can be treated as a personal name, as in the text printed in Kassel–Austin and adopted here. The alternative is to assume a different meter and emend εὐδήμου to e. g. Toup's εὐόδμου ("sweet-smelling") or Geel's εὐδέσμου ("easily bound").

Callierges' ἔχει for the metrically equivalent paradosis ἔχων in 2 supplies a main verb. But the text is too troubled and obscure for there to be any point in attempting to emend away all of its peculiarities.

† πρωων † at the end of 2 is incurably corrupt and might represent e. g. a set of majuscule errors or a garbled abbreviation (thus Adert's πατρῴων). Kassel–Austin's reference to Ar. V. 264 in their notes implicitly suggests πρῷων ("early-season"; of crops). Τρώων (unmetrical if these are iambic trimeters) in Σ^{G} is seemingly an individual scribe's attempt to correct the text rather than an inherited variant.

Citation context A scholion on Theoc. 4.18 καὶ μαλακῶ χόρτοιο καλὰν κώμυθα δίδωμι ("And I offer a fine bundle of soft hay"; Corydon describes the care he supposedly bestows on one of the absent Aegeon's calves). For the textual problem in the scholion, see Text. Additional traces of the same note, but without reference to Cratinus, are preserved at – Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 709.34 (κώμυς) σημαίνει δὲ τὴν δέσμην τοῦ χόρτου ὡς παρὰ Θεοκρίτῳ ("(kômys) (The word) denotes a bundle of hay, as in Theocritus")

- Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 762.16–17 κῶμυς δέ ἐστιν ὁ δεσμὸς τοῦ χόρτου ("a kômys is a bundle of hay"; followed by remarks on the declension of the word and a citation of Theoc. 4.18)
- Hsch. κ 4841 κώμυθα· δάφνην, ἣν ἱστῶσι ⟨πρὸ⟩ τῶν πυλῶν. δηλοῖ δὲ καὶ δέσμην χόρτου, καὶ τὰ † κατολίγον τῶν δραγμάτων ("(kômys (acc.)): laurel that stands ⟨before⟩ the gates. It also designates a bundle of hay, and the (pl.) † katoligon of the sheaves")
- Lex. art. gramm. Coislin. 345 κώμυς· ἡ δεσμὶς τοῦ χόρτου ("kômys: a bunch of hay")
- Phot. κ 1315 κώμυθα· δέσμη χόρτου ("kômys (acc.): a bundle of hay")
- Suda κ 2274 κώμυθα· δέσμην χόρτου. οἱ δὲ ξυνδήσαντες τοὺς καλάμους καλῳδίοις τε καὶ τολύπαις κώμυθας πολλὰς ἀπειργάσαντο. ἡ εὐθεῖα ὁ κώμυθος ("kômys (acc.): a bundle of hay. And the men who bound the cane together with twine and yarn produced many kômythes. The nominative is kômythos")
- EM p. 532.6–7 = Epimer. Hom. κ 64 κώμυς, κώμυθος (σημαίνει δὲ τὴν δέσμην τοῦ χόρτου) ("kômys, kômythos (the word refers to a bundle of hay)")
- Σ^{Δ} Luc. Abd. 21 (κώμους) … καὶ κώμυθα δέσμη χόρτου ("(kômous) … and a kômys (acc.) is a bundle of hay")
- Σ^{PT} Theoc. 4.18b κώμυθα: τὸ δεμάτιον[15] ("kômys (acc.): a small bundle").

Interpretation Obscure. Eudemus (PAA 429235) is unidentified and—despite PAA ad loc.—is probably too early to be the φαρμακοπώλης (PAA 429232) referred to at Ar. Pl. 884; Pl. Com. fr. *214; Thphr. HP 9.17.2. The name is not particularly rare (at least twenty other 5th-/4th-century examples in LGPN II).

2 κώμυς (etymology uncertain) is attested elsewhere before the lexicographic sources cited above only at Thphr. HP 4.11.1 κώμυθας δὲ καλοῦσι οὗ ἂν ᾖ συνηθροισμένος κάλαμος καὶ συμπεπλεγμένος ταῖς ῥίζαις ("they use the term kômythes for places where there is a thick mass of reed with intertwined roots"); picked up at Ael. NA 13.25 κώμυθας, ἃς ἐμβάλλουσι ταῖς φάτναις ("kômythes (acc.), which they toss into the mangers"), presumably as an Atticism.

---

[15] Ineffectively glossed at LSJ s. v. ("Dim(inutive) of δέμα", where none of the definitions matches the use of the word here), although cf. the Supplement, where the sense "bundle" is cited in other late sources for both δέμα and δεμάτιον. This is also the sense of δεμάτιον in the Hippiatrica Berolinensia (where it is used six times); cf. $\Sigma^{U^{g}}$ Theoc. 10.44c, where the word is glossed ἀμάλαι (i. e. ἁμάλλαι), "sheaves (of grain)".

fr. 303 K.–A. (275 K.)

τῇ μάστιγι κνάψειν εὖ μάλα πρὶν συμπατῆσαι

2 πρὶν Poll.[A] : ἢ Poll.[FS] in order to card thoroughly with one's whip before trampling underfoot

Poll. 7.37–8
καὶ κναφεύειν ἔφη Ἀριστοφάνης (Pl. 166), καὶ ἀνακνάψαι Λύσιππος ὁ κωμικός (fr. 4). κνάφος δ' ἡ πρόσφορος αὐτοῖς ἀκούοιτ' ἂν ἄκανθα. τοῦ δὲ κνάπτειν ἡγεῖται τὸ συμπατῆσαι, ὡς Κρατῖνος ὑποδηλοῖ παίζων· ——

And Aristophanes (Pl. 166) said knapheuein ("to full"), and Lysippus the comic poet (fr. 4) (said) anaknapsai ("to make fresh by fulling"). And knaphos would be the name of the prickly instrument they find useful. But trampling precedes carding (knaptein), as Cratinus suggests in a joking remark: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑–⟩ –|–⏑⏑|– ––⏑–
––⏑– –|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.212; Kock 1880 I.94

Text Pollux's comment on the fragment makes it clear that he read πρίν rather than ἤ (printed by Meineke and Kock).

Citation context From a collection of words having to do with washing within a larger discussion of terms pertaining to cloth and clothing. Pollux references Lysipp. fr. 4 three times (also at 7.41, 77), in each case in connection with vocabulary connected with fulling, and all this material likely goes back to a single source. Note also Poll. 7.41 (citing fr. 98); 10.135.

Interpretation Woolen garments were cleaned by fullers (κναφεῖς), who trampled them in wooden or ceramic tubs in a mixture of water and urine (an ammoniacal detergent) to remove the dirt, and then beat the cloth with a mallet, rinsed it and dried it. The garment was then brushed with a teasel to raise its nap; trimmed to lend it a smooth finish; treated with sulphur and fuller's earth to enhance its whiteness; and folded and pressed. Cf. Plin. Nat. 35.196–8; Forbes 1987. 82–98; Biles–Olson 2015; Soriga 2017 on Ar. V. 1128. Cratinus' speaker has thus described the proper order of events backwards, and the whip is out of place. As Pollux notes, therefore, this must be a joke, in which language of fulling is appropriated to describe physical abuse of a type most common and appropriate for a slave.

1 τῇ μάστιγι Whips might be employed occasionally in Athens to maintain public order (cf. fr. 123 ap. Poll. 10.177; Ar. Th. 933–4 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; Ec. 863; Weiler 2013. 617–18, with further bibliography at 611 n. 1), and are also used to drive horses (e. g. Il. 5.226; hDem. 378; Hdt. 4.3.4; X. Eq. 8.4.2). In comedy, however, their routine and primary function is to punish slaves (e. g. Ar. Eq. 64–70 (combined with trampling); Pax 743–7; Apollod. Com. fr. 20). If a free person is the object of the treatment being contemplated here, this is thus extraordinary abuse (but note e. g. Ar. Ach. 824–5, where Dicaeopolis uses a whip to drive a sycophant away from his private marketplace). The word has no etymology and is likely substrate vocabulary.

κνάψειν The cognate noun κναφεύς ("fuller") is attested already in Mycenean in the form ka-na-pe-u. For fullers and fulling, also IG I^3 616 = DAA 49 (a late 6th-century dedication by a fuller from the Athenian Acropolis); II^2 10 B col. II.4 (in a list of men identified by occupation); A. Ch. 759–60; Hdt. 4.14.1; Ar. V. 1128; Ec. 415–16; Pl. 166; Lys. 3.15; X. Mem. 3.7.6 (a typical urban occupation); Pl. Plt. 282a. The form in kappa is normal in Athens in the 5th century; for the alternative form in gamma, see Threatte 1980. 560.

εὖ μάλα is an intensifying collocation found in early epic (Il. 23.761; Od. 4.96; 24.123; *hAp.*171; [Hes.] Sc. 355; picked up by Hellenistic poets at e. g. Theoc. 24.94; Arat. 465) and common in 4th-century prose (e. g. Pl. Cri. 49d; X. Oec. 14.8; Arist. HA 514^{b}22–3), but attested elsewhere in 5th- and 4th-century poetry only at Alex. fr. 191.6. See in general Thesleff 1954. 187. Its ample presence in Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Luc. DMort. 15.2; Ael. Ep. 14; Alciphr. 3.17.4) suggests that in the Roman period it came to be regarded as a mark of good classical style.

2 συμπατῆσαι The compound is first attested here; elsewhere in the classical period at Ctes. FGrH 688 F 1b.19.8 (p. 438) (men and horses crushed and trampled in a panicked crowd); Aeschin. 3.164 (a human being run over by cavalry horses); Thphr. HP 8.7.5 (plants ground underfoot in a field); de Pietate fr. 18 (a cow treads on offerings); Phaenias of Eresos fr. 41 Wehrli = 46C Engels (grapes crushed underfoot as part of the wine-making process). Here the prefix seems to serve the same purpose as εὖ μάλα does in 1, by qualifying the trampling as systematic and complete ("to a paste" vel sim.; cf. LSJ s. v. σύν D.I.2). For trampling as a component or emblematic of a thorough beating, cf. Ar. Eq. 69, 166; Nu. 1359; Lys. 440; Pl. Com. fr. 136.2.

fr. 304 K.–A. (282 K.)

Et.Gen. AB = EM p. 269.31–6
διαπηνηκίζω· ἀπατῶ· Κρατῖνος· τ ο ῦ τ ο ν μ ὲ ν κ α λ ῶ ς δ ι ε π η ν ή κ ι σ α ς λ ό γ ο ν. εἴρηται ἀπὸ τῆς πηνήκης, ἥ ἐστι περιθετὴ κόμη, ὡς ἡ φενάκη, ἣ τοὺς ὁρῶντας ἀπατᾷ ὡς φύσει οὖσα. τινὲς δὲ τὸ ποικίλλω ἐξηγοῦνται, ἀπὸ τῶν πηνῶν ἢ πηνίων ὄντων ποικίλων, ἵν' ᾖ πηνίζω καὶ πηνηκίζω τοῦτον μὲν καλῶς / διεπηνήκισας λόγον Kaibel τοῦτον μὲν Et.Gen. = EM : τουτουμενί Fritzsche οὖν post μέν add. Meineke σύ post καλῶς add. Bothe διεπηνήκισας Et.Gen. A : διεπηνήκισε Et.Gen. B : διεπηνίκισας EM : διεπήνισας Fritzsche : διεπήνικας van Leeuwen diapênêkizo: deceive. Cratinus: y o u (s i n g.) t o l d t h i s l i e b e a u t i f u l l y. The word is derived from pênêkê, which is a perithetê komê ("hair put about (one's head)"), like a phenakê, which deceives those who see it as if it were natural. But some authorities explain the word as meaning poikillô ("embroider"), from pênai ("threads") or pênia ("spools"), which are elaborate,[16] yielding pênizô and pênêkizo

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.184; Fritzsche 1845. 243; Bothe 1855. 58; Kock 1880 I.96; van Leeuwen 1896. 95; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text The text as transmitted is unmetrical. Most of the conjectures recorded in the apparatus represent attempts to supplement it in ways that allow the words to scan as iambic trimeter.

The variant readings in Et.Gen. B and the EM combine to suggest that the common exemplar of the Et.Gen. manuscripts read διεπηνήκισας (< διαπηνηκίζω), as in Et.Gen. A. Fritzsche and van Leeuwen emended to forms of διαπηνίζω (< πήνη, "thread"). But elsewhere in the classical and Hellenistic periods the latter verb is always middle or passive (Ar. Ra. 578; Philyll. fr. 33 (simplex);[17] Arist. HA 551^{b}14–15; Theoc. 18.32).

---

[16] Seemingly a reference to E. Hec. 470–2 ἐν δαιδαλέαισι ποικίλλουσ' ἀνθοκρόκοισι πήναις.

[17] πηνίσασθαι, taken by the source that cites the word to be < πηνίον ("moth" vel sim.) rather than < πήνη. Montanari s. v. πηνίζω mistakenly derives the verb from πῆμα. The reference "Poll. 6.69" in Montanari s. v. πηνίον "analog(y) decoration on sweets" is also wrong; read "Poll. 6.79" and "decoration on cakes". Since Pollux and Hesychius (π 2208) further specify that the decorations in question are white (λευκά), they may have resembled moths rather than threads. Further on in the same note in Montanari, "shuttle Il. 23.762; Leon. (AP 6.288.6)" is a bad gloss; the sense is "spool" in both cases (cf. Hsch. π 2212 = Phot. π 864; Gow–Page 1956. 351 on HE 2217–18; Richardson 1993 ad loc.); note that πηνίοις is only a conjecture

Citation context Related material—at least some of it drawn from the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (δ 12), according to Eustathius (quoted below)—is preserved in the various sources for fr. 398 (n.), as well as at

- Poll. 2.30 ἐκαλεῖτο δέ τι καὶ πηνήκη, καὶ προκόμιον προσθετόν, οὐ γυναιξὶ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνδρῶν τοῖς ἐνδεῶς εἰς κόμης λόγον πράττουσιν ("there was also something called a pênêkê, as well as a prokomion prostheton ('applied substitute for hair'), not only for women but also for any men who needed to show concern about their hair"; from a discussion of hairstyles)[18]
- Poll. 10.170 καὶ πηνήκην δὲ καὶ προκόμιον, καὶ ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης ἐν Γηρυτάδῃ (fr. 187) περίθεσιν· καὶ περιθέτην δέ, ὡς ἐν Ἀμφιδος Ἀλκμαίωνι (fr. 2) καὶ Μενάνδρου Ὀλυνθίᾳ (fr. 260) ("and also a pênêkê and a prokomion ('substitute for hair') and, as Aristophanes (says) in Gerytades (fr. 187), a perithesis ('putting around'); and also a perithetê ('object put around'), as in Amphis' Alkmaiôn (fr. 2) and Menander's Olynthia (fr. 260)"; from a discussion of coverings)
- Hsch. δ 1220 διαπηνηκίσαι· διακεφαλαιῶσαι. πηνήκη γὰρ γένος περικεφαλαίας, οἱ δὲ τὸ ἀπατῆσαι, ἀπὸ τῆς πηνήκης ("diapênêkisai: diakephalaiôsai; because a pênêkê is a type of perikephalaia ('object that goes around one's head'). Although others gloss it 'to deceive', from pênêkê"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus)
- Phot. δ 406 ~ Suda δ 698 διαπηνηκίσαι· ἐξαπατῆσαι· πηνήκην γὰρ οἱ ἀρχαῖοι Ἀττικοὶ τὴν ἐκ τῶν τριχῶν περιθέτην κόμην ἔλεγον (κόμην om. Phot. : ἔλεγον om. Suda). καὶ τὸ φενακίσαι δέ τινες ἀπὸ τούτου εἰρῆσθαι νομίζουσι ("diapênêkisai: to deceive; because ancient Attic-speakers called a perithêtê ('object placed around') made of hair a pênêkê. And some authorities also believe that phenakisai ('to cheat') is derived from this"; from the common source of Photius and the Suda generally referred to as Σ′′)
- Phot. δ 535 διεπηνήκισας· ἐξηπάτησας. ἀπὸ τῆς πηνήκης· τὴν γὰρ περιθέτην οὕτως λέγουσιν, ἣν ἔχοντες ἐξαπατῶσι τοὺς ὁρῶντας ("diepênêkisas: you deceived. From pênêkê; because they refer thus to a perithêtê ('object placed around'), which they wear and deceive those who see them")
- Phot. π 862 = Suda π 1529 = Synag. π 463 πηνήκη· περικεφαλαία τριχωτή· καὶ περιθετὴ κόμη· ἔνθεν καὶ πηνηκίζειν τὸ ἀπατᾶν· τῆς δὲ περιθετῆς κόμης τὸ μὲν ἔντριχον, τὸ δὲ προκόμιον, τὸ δὲ πηνήκην ἐκάλουν ("pênêkê:

---

at Thphr. HP 6.5.4 (where the manuscripts are divided between σπληνείοις and σπληνίοις) and that as a consequence the passage cannot be allowed to affect discussion of the word's meaning.

[18] Additional cognate material at Poll. 2.35, citing Amphis fr. 2.

a perikephalaia ('object that goes around the head') that was covered with hair; also a perithetê komê ('hair placed around (the head)'); whence also pênêkizein means 'to deceive'. They called one type of hair placed around (the head) an entrichon, another a prokomion, and another a pênêkê"; from the common source conventionally referred to as Σ′) – Eust. pp. 1421.64–1422.5 = i.65.28–34 καὶ ἐκπηνίζω ῥῆμα παρὰ τῷ κωμικῷ, καὶ ἐκπηνιεῖται (Ar. Ra. 578) ὅ ἐστι μηρύσεται καὶ κατὰ Παυσανίαν ἐξειλήσει εἰς πηνίον. καὶ ἔστι κατὰ τὴν ἐτυμολογίαν ταύτην τὸ Πηνελόπη, κλῆσις ἱστουργῷ γυναικὶ πρέπουσα. τὸ μέντοι διαπηνικίζειν ὅ ἐστι διακεφαλαιοῦν καὶ ἀπατᾶν, οὐκ ἐντεῦθέν ποθεν παρῆκται ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῆς πηνήκης, ἣ περικεφαλαίαν δηλοῖ περίθετον ἐκ τριχῶν, οὐ μόνον γυναιξὶν ἀλλὰ καὶ γυναικιζομένοις ἀνδράσι χρηστὴν οἳ τριχῶν ἐψίλωνται. γίνεται δὲ ἡ τοιαύτη πηνήκη κατὰ τροπὴν παρὰ τὴν φενάκην, ἐπειδὴ φενακίζει τοὺς ὁρῶντας ("And ekpênizô is a verb in the comic poet, also ekpênieitai (Ar. Ra. 578), which means 'will draw up' and according to Pausanias 'will unwind onto a bobbin'. 'Penelope' has the same etymology, an appropriate name for a woman who worked at a loom. diapênikizein, however, which means diakephalaioun and 'to deceive', is not derived from this root but from pênêkê, which refers to an object made of hair that is placed about one's head, and is useful not just for women but also for effeminate men who have gone bald. A pênêkê of this sort comes via a phonetic change from phenakê, since it cheats (phenakizei) the on-lookers").

Interpretation Praise (not necessarily ironic) of a bit of dubious behavior. μέν suggests a balancing comment to come (describing another lie the addressee must now produce, ideally as effectively pronounced as the first one?).

For lines beginning with a form of οὗτος μέν and ending with a noun modified by the pronoun, cf. A. Eu. 707–8 ταύτην μὲν ἐξέτειν' ἐμοῖς παραίνεσιν / ἀστοῖσιν ("I prolonged this advice for my / citizens"); E. Supp. 939 οὗτος μὲν ἤδη δμωσὶν ἂν μέλοι πόνος ("this toil should already be a concern for the slaves"); El. 797 τοῦτον μὲν οὖν μεθεῖσαν ἐκ μέσου λόγον ("thus they broke off this speech in the middle").

διαπηνικίζω is presumably < πηνήκη ("wig"),[19] as the sources quoted in Citation context claim; cf. πηνηκίζω (fr. 398 with n.) and πηνήκισμα[20] ("fraud"; Hsch. π 2206). πηνήκη is almost certainly to be restored in adesp. com. fr. 225

[19] LSJ s. v. διαπηνηκίζω refers the reader to the non-word πήνηξ. Montanari s. v. garbles the form of the verb attributed to Cratinus ("διηπηνήκισας") and over-translates ("having falsified the reasoning with a trick").

[20] Mistaken by Montanari s. v. for a masculine and lemmatized under πηνηκισμός (note also the false accent; correct in LSJ s. v.).

ἐγὼ διὰ ταῦτα, μὴ γέλων ὀφλὼν λάθω, / περὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν † ἐξῆμμαι † πηνίκην τινά ("I on this account, that I not fail to notice I'm being treated as a fool, † have fastened † a pênikê about my head") and Hsch. π 2211 πηνίκη· θρίξ. ἐμπλοκή ("pênikê: hair, interweaving"). The word is otherwise attested only in the lexicographic sources quoted in Citation context and at Luc. DMeretr. 5.3; 11.4; 12.5 (worn in each case by a courtesan disguising her appearance).

fr. *305 K.–A. (76[b] K.)

θύραζ' οὐκ ἔστι μῦθος ἔκφορος ἐντεῦθεν ὡς ἄφρονες

1 ⟨ἔπει⟩ θύραζ' Kaibel : θύραζε ⟨γοῦν⟩ vel θύραζε ⟨μήν⟩ Luppe : fort. ⟨ἡμῖν⟩ θύραζ' Σ : Θράιτταις Nauck 2 τοὐντεύθεν Nauck ὡς ἄφρονες Σ : ὡς ⟨τοὺς⟩ ἄφρονας Crusius : ἴσθ' ἄφωνος Nauck : ὦνδρες Kaibel no report is to be conveyed outside from here, as fools (might do)

Σ^{F} Orib. inc. 12.1 (IV p. 99.19 Raeder) ἐκφόρους, ἀντὶ τοῦ εὐτόκους. ἐκφόριον γὰρ λέγεται ἐπὶ τοῦ καρποῦ (Hdt. 4.198.2; Lev. 25:19 LXX), ὥς φησιν Εἰρηναῖος (fr. 6 Haupt). ἄλλοι ἐπὶ λογοῦ, ὡς Κρατῖνος (Nauck : κρατύνει Σ)· ——. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ ἐκκομιδῆς (Nauck : κομιδῆς Σ) εἴρηται, ὡς Εὐριπίδης (Alc. 422)· ——, καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 649)· —— ekphorous, in place of eutokous ("fertile"). Because ekphorion ("produce") is used in reference to fruit (Hdt. 4.198.2; Lev. 25:19 LXX), as Eirenaeus (fr. 6 Haupt) says. Others use it in reference to a logos, for example Cratinus (Nauck : kratynei, "confirms" Σ): ——. But it is also used in reference to a funeral procession (thus Nauck : "care" Σ), for example Euripides (Alc. 422): ——, and Aristophanes (fr. 649)· ——

Meter Iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⟩⏑– –|–⏑|– ⏑–⏑–
––⏑– ⏑⏑⟨⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

Discussion Nauck 1866 II.528; Nauck 1874 III.301; Haupt 1876 II.437; Crusius 1889. 36; Nauck 1894 VI.63; Kock 1898 III.713; Marzullo 1959. 140–1; Luppe 1967. 405–6; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Attributed to Thraittai by Nauck (emending the paradosis θύραζ(ε) to Θράιτταις). But θύραζε is a good poetic word (see Interpretation) and scans here, and there is no good reason to make the change.

Text Various attempts have been made to fill out the beginning of the line, none of them obviously any more convincing than the others.

θύραζ' … / ἐντεῦθεν seems repetitive, and Nauck accordingly proposed τοὐντεύθεν ("hereafter"; an Atticism) at the beginning of 2. But cf. Ar. V. 1444 εἴσω … ἐντεῦθεν; fr. 601 θύραζε … / … ἐντευθενί; Men. Dysc. 87 ἀπὸ τῆς θύρας ἐντεῦθεν.

The paradosis ὡς ἄφρονες (retained here; see Interpretation) is difficult, and Crusius accordingly suggested ὡς ⟨τοὺς⟩ ἄφρονας, with the definite article allowing for a normal hepthemimeral caesura. The other emendations recorded in the apparatus are further from the manuscript reading and are little more than shots in the dark.

Citation context A scholion on Oribasius (= Arist. fr. 283; on women in their eighth month of pregnancy) commenting on the use of the adjective ἔκφορος (there "productive, fertile").

Interpretation The text is difficult, but we take this to be condensed, colloquial syntax.

Whoever is speaking is engaged in a secret conversation of some sort. Crusius, comparing Orph. fr. 1 F a Bernabé ἀείσω ξυνετοῖσι· θύρας δ' ἐπιθέσθε, βέβηλοι ("I shall sing to the clever; shut the doors, profane persons!"); Plot. 6.9.11 τὸ τῶν μυστηρίων τῶνδε ἐπίταγμα, τὸ μὴ ἐκφέρειν εἰς μὴ μεμυημένους, ὡς οὐκ ἔκφορον ἐκεῖνο ὄν ("the injunction in the case of these mysteries, not to convey them to those who have not been initiated, since it is not to be conveyed"); Eust. p. 1788.2 = ii.106.46–107.1 ἐκφέρει δέ τις καὶ μυστήριον, ὅ περ ἐχρῆν εἶναι ἀνέκφορον ("a person also conveys a mystery, which ought not to be conveyed"), thought that mystery cult was in question. But the language is not so specific, and μῦθος (for which, see in general van Dijk 1997. 84–8) in particular does not appear to have the established sense "mystic tale" vel sim. it would require to make Crusius' interpretation compelling.

The fragment is assigned to Cratinus only on the basis of Nauck's emendation of the paradosis κρατύνει. The number accordingly requires an initial * (omitted in Kassel–Austin).

1 θύραζ(ε) (already at e. g. Il. 5.694; hAp. 110; Thgn. 1001) is attested in prose of the classical period only in Hippocrates (e. g. Epid. V 4 = 5.206.1 Littré) and Aristotle (e. g. GA 716^{b}35), and in tragedy only in late Euripides (E. Or. 604; Ba. 331; IA 1161); common in Aristophanes (e. g. Ach. 359; Nu. 632; Pl. 955; fr. 319) and other 5th-century comic poets (Pherecr. fr. 162.6; Eup. fr. 172.13, 15; Pl. Com. fr. 71.11). A note in Moeris (θ 10 θύραζε Ἀττικοί· ἔξω Ἕλληνες, "Athenians (say) thyraze; Greeks generally (say) exô"), combined with the repeated use of the word in Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Plu. Brut.

25.6; Luc. Trag. 61; Alciphr. 3.20.2), suggests that it came to be regarded as an Atticism.

The collocation μῦθος ἔκφορος is not attested elsewhere, although cf. Ar. Th. 472 οὐδεμί' ἔκφορος λόγου ("there's no woman who will carry a report (logos) of our discussion off [to the city's men]") with Phot. ε 536 and Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; E. Hipp. 295 εἰ δ' ἔκφορός σοι συμφορὰ πρὸς ἄρσενας ("but if (report of) your misfortune can be conveyed to men"); Pl. La. 201a οὐδεὶς … ἔκφορος λόγος (~ "this is a private conversation (logos)").

2 ἄφρων (< privative ἀ- + φρήν, "mind", and thus ~ "thoughtless, senseless, foolish, irrational") is poetic vocabulary (e. g. Il. 11.389; hAphr. 286; Thgn. 454; Pi. P. 8.74; S. El. 941; E. Heracl. 360 (lyric); in Thucydidean speeches at 5.105.3; 6.33.1); rare in comedy (e. g. [Epich.] fr. 248.3; Ar. V. 729; Demetr. Com. II fr. 2.3 (adverb)), but common in 4th-century prose (e. g. X. Mem. 1.4.14; Isoc. 15.202; Pl. Cri. 44d; R. 598c; D. 3.21).

fr. 306 K.–A. (17 Dem.)

πατρικὸς ὢν ξένος
τάδε πυνθάνομαι σου

2 τάδε πυνθάνομαι Cohn : πυνθάνομαι τάδε cod.

Since I'm your paternal guest-friend,
I'm asking you these questions

[Hdn.] Philet. 106
πατρικὸς φίλος, οὐχὶ πατρῷος (Hdn.^{V} : ὁμοίως Hdn.^{Q}). καὶ ὁ Κρατῖνος· —— a patrikos ("paternal") friend, not (thus Hdn.^{V} : "similarly" Hdn.^{Q}) a patrôios (friend). Also Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑⟩|⏑⏑ ⏑–⏑–
⏑⏑–⏑⏑– –|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

Discussion Cohn 1888. 414–15

Text In 2, the paradosis πυνθάνομαι τάδε is unmetrical, and Cohn transposed the words to make them scan.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note offering advice on correct Attic usage.

Interpretation An explanation of what would at first glance apparently have been regarded as inappropriate behavior. For the institution of xenia, including in the classical period (when it was important in the first instance for the socio-economic elite), see Herman 1987.

1 πατρικός, first attested here, is colloquial Attic vocabulary, absent from tragedy (in satyr play at S. fr. 314.71) but found occasionally in comedy (also fr. 124 † ἐν πατρικοῖσι νόμοις †; Call. Com. fr. 19 τῆς πατρικῆς ἀρίδος; Ar. Av. 142 ὧν ἐμοὶ πατρικὸς φίλος with Dunbar 1995 ad loc.) and common in 5th- and 4th-century Attic prose (e. g. Th. 1.13.1; And. 2.11; Lys. 14.40; 32.22; Isoc. 5.126; 19.50; X. HG 6.5.4; Pl. La. 180e; Men. 78d; D. 19.222; Aeschin. 1.42; Arist. EN 1134b9). Before Aristotle, πατρικός is commonly used of inherited friendships and enmities (with φίλος at e. g. Ar. Av. 142 (quoted above); X. HG 6.5.4; Pl. La. 180e; with ξένος also at And. 2.11; Th. 8.6.3; Isoc. 17.43; Pl. Men. 78d). The older form πατρῷος is first attested in Homer (e. g. Il. 6.215; Od. 1.175), and is preserved in comedy at e. g. Eup. frr. 50; 99.35; Ar. Nu. 106, 1468; Anaxandr. fr. 46.2; Alex. fr. 110.2. πατρῷος ξένος occurs in Homer at e. g. Od. 1.187 and in the classical period at E. Hec. 19, 26. As [Hdn.] rightly notes, however, the combination πατρῷος φίλος is attested nowhere before the late Hellenistic period. Adjectives in -ικός are generally rare before the end of the 5th century, when they suddenly explode in popularity; cf. frr. 166 † παλινῳδικοὶ ὕμνοι †; 363.2 ἀνθέρικος; and see in general Wackernagel (1919) 1955 I.480; Willi 2003. 139–45; Labiano Ilundain 2004. For ξένος in the sense "guest-friend" (LSJ s. v. I) in comedy, e. g. Ar. Ach. 884; Ra. 109; Archipp. fr. 8.1 ἀνδρῶν ἄριστος καὶ μάλιστ' ἐμοὶ ξένος ("an excellent man and a close xenos of mine"); Demetr. Com. fr. 1.4.

2 τάδε πυνθάνομαι σου For the verb construed with both an internal accusative and a genitive, e. g. Ar. Ach. 204; Nu. 482; Pax 693; Av. 1120; Ra. 1417; Alex. fr. 259.6-7; Il. 1.257; A. Ag. 599; E. Or. 1359; Hdt. 1.111.5.

fr. 307 K.–A. (360 K.)

ἆρά γε,
ὦ τᾶν, ἐθελήσετε;

2 ἐθελήσετε Σ Tzetzes : ἐθελήσετον Suda

Won't you (pl.), my good sir, be willing?

$\Sigma^{\text{RVEMBarbMatrLut}}$ Ar. Pl. 66
ὦ τᾶν·[R] τινὲς λέγουσιν[V] ὅτι οὐ πρὸς ἕνα μόνον φασὶ τὸ ὦ τᾶν ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς δύο. $\Sigma^{\text{RVEMBarbMatrLut}}$ ἀποκρίθητέ μοι, ὦ τᾶν.[EBarb] καὶ Κρατῖνος· ——[RVEMBarbMatrLut]

ô tân:[R] Some authorities say[V] that ô tân is used to address not only one person but also two.[RVEMBarbMatrLut] "Answer (pl.), sirs!"[EBarb] Also Cratinus: ——[RVEMBarbMatrLut]

Meter Iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑– ×⟩–⏑–
––⏑⏑– ⏑⏑|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.223; Kock 1880 I.116; Szemerényi 1987. 573, 577

Text In 2, the Suda transmits the fragment with a dual ending, whereas the scholion offers a plural. Kassel–Austin cite Tzetzes as agreeing with the Suda and print the dual. But Massa Positano 1960 (the edition to which Kassel–Austin refer) reports that Tzetzes actually has ἐθελήσετε, leaving little doubt that the reading in the Suda is a learned error under the influence of πρὸς δύο earlier on in the note.

Citation context A note on Ar. Pl. 66, which editors since Rutherford generally print in the form (Χρ.) ὦ τᾶν —(Πλ.) ἀπαλλάχθητον ἀπ' ἐμοῦ ("(Chremes) My good sir — (Wealth) The two of you get away from me!"), thus separating ὦ τᾶν from the dual verb that follows it; see Interpretation.

What is printed above is the text of the scholion as it appears in Chantry 1994; Kassel–Austin (working in the early 1980s), by contrast, appear to be relying in the first instance on Dübner 1838.[21] Suda ω 261 ὦ τάν· οὐ πρὸς ἕνα μόνον τὸ ὦ τάν ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς δύο. ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης Πλούτῳ (66). καὶ Κρατῖνος· —— ("ô tan: ô tan is used not only to address one person but also two. Thus Aristophanes in Plutus (66). Also Cratinus: ——") is drawn direct from the Aristophanic scholia and should not be treated as an independent witness to the fragment of Cratinus; see Text. Σ^{M} has Κράτης rather than Κρατῖνος. As the other witnesses are unanimously in favor of the latter reading, however, this ought probably to be treated as a careless error rather than as suggesting that a common exemplar offered only the ambiguous Κρα$^{\tau}$ (but cf. fr. 413 Citation context).

[21] The source of the words ἀποκρίθητέ μοι, ὦ τᾶν (preserved in only two manuscripts) is unknown.

Similar material, but seemingly from a different source or set of sources, is preserved at

- Hsch. ω 476 ὦ τᾶν· ὦ οὗτος. ἀντὶ τοῦ ὦ μακάριε, ὦ βέλτιστε ("ô tân: ô houtos ('O you there'). In place of ô makarie ('O blessed one') or ô beltiste ('O best')")
- Hsch. ω 477 ὦ τᾶν· ὦ σύ, ὦ ἑταῖρε, ὦ οὗτος, ὦ μακάριε. πρόσρημα τιμητικῆς λέξεως. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ εἰρωνείᾳ πολλάκις ("ô tân: ô su ('O you'), ô hetaire ('O companion'), ô houtos ('O you there'), ô makarie ('O blessed one'). A respectful form of address. But it is also often said ironically")
- Σ Pl. Ap. 25c = Suda ω 260 ὦ τάν, ὦ οὗτος, ὦ τάλαν καὶ ὦ μέλε· ταῦτα παρὰ τοῖς νεωτέροις ὑπὸ μόνων λέγεται γυναικῶν, παρὰ δὲ τοῖς παλαιοῖς καὶ ὑπ' ἀνδρῶν. πολλάκις δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ πλήθους φασὶ τὸ ὦ τάν, ὡς παρὰ † Κτησιφῶντι † ("ô tân, ô houtos ('O you there'), ô talan ('O wretch') and ô mele ('O sir'). In more recent authors these expressions are used only by women, but in the old authors also by men. And they also often use ô tan in reference to a group, as in † Ctesiphon †"; = Ael. Dion. ω 11).

Interpretation The scholion that cites this fragment believes that more than one person is being addressed with ὦ τᾶν because the verb is plural (or dual; see Text). This might be right; cf. Nicopho fr. 30 (cited by Σ Pl. Ap. 25c = Suda ω 260 = Ael. Dion. ω 11); Timocl. fr. 20.1–2 σπεύδετε, / ὦ τᾶν; S. fr. 314.104 τί δρῶμεν, ὦ τᾶν;. It is much easier, however, to believe that in all these cases one person is being asked about the intentions of a group to which he belongs (e. g. S. OC 1102 ὦ τέκνον, ἦ πάρεστον; ("O child (sg.), are the two of you here (pl.)?")—which is to say that whoever pulled these words out of the text of Cratinus misunderstood them, just as early editors of Ar. Pl. 66 misunderstood that line as well, reading (Πλ.) ὦ τᾶν, ἀπαλλάχθητον ἀπ' ἐμοῦ ("(Wealth) My good sirs, the two of you get away from me!").

A pleading and probably impatient question; see below on ὦ τᾶν. The excerptor was interested only in the combination of the vocative with a plural verb, and ἐθελήσετε likely governed an infinitive ("will you be willing (to …)") even if it had to be supplied from whatever preceded this.

1 ἆρά γε The second particle arguably adds liveliness and emphasis to the question, but here it can just as easily be understood as primarily a metrical stopgap. The combination is attested elsewhere in comedy at Ar. Nu. 466; V. 1336; Av. 668, 1221; Pl. 546; Alex. fr. 121.14; and is common in 4th-century prose (e. g. And. 1.41; X. Mem. 1.5.4; Pl. Cri. 44e; Is. 3.33); in tragedy only at E. Hec. 745 ἆρ(α) … γε, presumably because it seemed insufficiently elevated.

2 ὦ τᾶν is a colloquial form of address, polite but often conveying a sense of annoyance (e. g. Ar. Nu. 1432; V. 373; Lys. 501). Widely attested in comedy (21 times in Ar.; also e. g. Pl. Com. fr. 224; Antiph. fr. 205.10; Alex. fr.

16.11; Timocl. fr. 20.2; Men. Dysc. 247, 359, 547), but also found occasionally in tragedy (S. OT 200, 1145; Ph. 1387: E. Heracl. 321, 688; Ba. 802; in satyr play at S. fr. 314.104; E. Cyc. 536) and in Doric in the form ὦ 'τᾶν (Epich. fr. 76.2; thus Kassel–Austin) or ὦ τάν (Pi. fr. 215a.4;[22] thus Snell–Maehler). It was eventually picked up by Roman-era authors as a stylistic flourish (e. g. Plu. Mor. 73b; Luc. Gall. 17).[23] Cf. Didymus V.10 (p. 403 Schmidt) ap. Suda ω 260 (identifying the full Doric form as ἔταν, with the hypothesis rejected by the later source on which the Suda is drawing); and see in general Stevens 1976. 42–3; Szemerényi 1987. 569–78; Dickey 1996. 158–60.

fr. 308 K.–A. (276 K.)

τοὺς ἐξοδίους ὑμῖν ἵν' αὐλῶ τοὺς νόμους

so that I may pipe the exodioi nomoi for you (pl.)

Phot. ε 1250 = Suda ε 1784
ἐξόδιοι νόμοι· αὐλήματα δι' ὧν ἐξῄεσαν οἱ χοροὶ καὶ οἱ αὐληταί. οὕτως Κρατῖνος· —— exodioi nomoi: pieces of aulos-music, to the accompaniment of which the choruses and the aulos-players exited. Thus Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
— — ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ | — — ⏑ —

Discussion Kock 1880 I.95

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Suda conventionally referred to as Σ''. Related material, perhaps drawn from the same original note, is preserved at

- Hsch. ε 3934 ἐξόδιοι νόμοι· δι' ὧν πάντες ἐξελεύσονται ("exodioi nomoi: those to the accompaniment of which everyone will exit")
- Poll. 4.108 καὶ μέλος δέ τι ἐξόδιον, ὃ ἐξιόντες ᾖδον ("and a certain exodios song, which they sang while exiting"; from a brief treatment of the parts of a drama within a larger discussion of terminology associated with the Theater).

[22] Miscited in LSJ Supplement s. v. τᾶν as "Pi. fr. 215b.4". Montanari s. v. tacitly corrects the claim in LSJ s. v. (withdrawn in the Supplement) that ὦ τᾶν is absent from Aristophanes, but omits mention of the Doric form of the word (also missing from the original LSJ entry).

[23] Moer. ω 1 identifies ὦ τᾶν as an Atticism, which appears to be wrong (see above) but is nonetheless a significant part of the reception of the phrase.

Interpretation Most naturally taken as addressed to the chorus by the theatrical piper (for whom, see Taplin 1993. 69–70 and passim; Wilson 1999). But the piper seems normally to have been a mute, and this is thus more likely a metaphor (~ "so that I can see you on your way, usher you out"). If so, there may be a play on νόμος in its more common sense "law".

[Arist.] Po. 1452^{b}21–2 identifies the exodos of a drama as everything that follows the final choral ode. Here, however, the tune in question must be the music played as the chorus made its way out of the Theater at the end of the performance; cf. Ar. V. 1529–37 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Th. 1227–31 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; Pl. 1208–9 (suggesting that the chorus sang as it exited). For exodos songs, note also Ael. Dion. α 76 ἀλλὰ ἄναξ ⟨μάλα χαῖρε⟩· ἀρχὴ ἐξοδίου κιθαρῳδικοῦ, ὥσπερ κωμικοῦ μὲν ἥδε (adesp. com. fr. 181)· ——, ῥαψῳδοῦ δὲ αὕτη· ——, τραγικοῦ δέ (e. g. E. Alc. 1159)· —— ("but lord, ⟨rejoice much!⟩: the beginning of an exit song played on a kithara, like the following from a comedy (adesp. com. fr. 181): ——, and this one from a rhapsodic composition: ——, and from a tragedy (e. g. E. Alc. 1159): ——"); Hsch. ν 730 νῦν δὲ θεοὶ μάκαρες· τοῦτό φασιν ἐξόδιον εἶναι ῥαψῳδῶν ("and now the blessed gods: they say that this is a rhapsodes' finale").

ἐξόδιος is not attested elsewhere in the Classical period, but Plutarch three times uses the adjective substantivally to refer to a tragic finale (Plu. Pelop. 34.1 τῆς τυραννίδος ἐξόδιον θεατρικὸν;[24] Alex. 75.5 ὥσπερ δράματος μεγάλου τραγικὸν ἐξόδιον [i. e. serious]; Crass. 33.7 εἰς τοιοῦτόν φασιν ἐξόδιον τὴν Κράσσου στρατηγίαν ὥσπερ τραγῳδίαν τελευτῆσαι).

αὐλέω ("play the aulos") is attested already at Alcm. PMG 126. For the instrument and the music played on it, see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 862–3 (with older bibliography); Wallace 2003; Hagel 2009. 327–43; Leven 2010, and cf. fr. 449 n.

For νόμος as a generic term (LSJ s. v. II) for an astrophic musical form with a fixed traditional structure (metrical, harmonic or the like), e. g. Ar. Eq. 9, 1279; Pax 1160; Av. 210, 745; Ra. 1282 with Dover 1993 ad loc.; Ec. 741; fr. *692.2; Epicr. fr. 2.2–4; Pl. Lg. 700b; Philodem. Po. 4.118.1 = Arist. fr. *3.12 Janko with Janko 1987 ad loc.; [Arist.] Pr. 918^{b}13–16; Po. 1447^{b}26 with Janko 1987 ad loc. Cf. fr. *361.3 with n., and see in general Grieser 1937; Fleming 1977. 222–6.

---

[24] Citing Philist. FGrH 556 F 40. Despite the implication of LSJ s. v. ἐξόδιος II, however, how much—if any—of Plutarch's language goes back to Philistus is impossible to say.

fr. 309 K.–A. (227 K.)

τὴν χεῖρα μὴ ᾽πίβαλλε, μὴ κλάων καθῇ

᾽πίβαλλε VP : ᾽πίβαλε DL : ᾽πίβαλον C——καθῇ Kaibel : κάθῃ Zon.

Don't try (sing.) to lay your hand on (him/her/it/them), or you'll sit there and be sorry!

Orus fr. A 57 ap. Zon. p. 1168
Κρατῖνος· ——. λέγει γὰρ τὸ ὑποτακτικὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ κάθημαι καὶ κάθῃ καὶ κάθηται ὁριστικῶς

Cratinus: ——. For he forms the subjunctive from kathêmai ("I sit"), both kathêi ("you sit") and kathêtai ("he/she/it sits"), as if it were indicative

Meter Iambic trimeter.
— — ⏑ — ⏑ — ⏑ | — ⏑ — ⏑ —

Discussion Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text The two lambdas of the present stem of ἐπιβάλλω (vs. the aorist with a single lambda) and the epsilon at the end of the word (as in VP) are matters of metrical necessity. The confusion in the manuscripts perhaps reflects a crudely abbreviated exemplar (᾽πίβα$^{\lambda()}$ vel sim.).

For the accent of the paradosis κάθῃ (corrected by Kaibel), see Interpretation.

Citation context From a discussion of the Attic handling of κάθημαι and cognates; fr. 310 is cited shortly after this.[25] Cf. (but with no reference to Cratinus) Σ^{T} Il. 2.191a κάθησο· κάθου Ἀττικῶς ("kathêso: kathou in Attic"); Σ^{b} Il. 2.191a.

[25] The form κάθου, with which Orus' note begins, is confined before the Hellenistic period to comedy (Ar. fr. 631; Alex. fr. 226; Anaxandr. fr. 14; Diph. fr. 8; Men. Dysc. 931) and must be colloquial Attic. Contrast the more widely attested κάθησο (used metri gratia at Ar. Ach. 59; Ec. 554; Pl. 724). Moer. κ 49 κάθησο Ἀττικοί· κάθου κοινόν ("Attic-speakers [use] kathêso; kathou is the common form") expresses the opposite opinion regarding the distribution of the forms and seems to be confused; thus also [Hdn.] Philet. 90 κάθησο ἐρεῖς, οὐχὶ κάθου ("you are to say kathêso, not kathou"), and cf. Antiatt. κ 3 καθίζανε· ἀντὶ τοῦ κάθησο ("sit down!: in place of kathêso"). Cf. τίθου, which is similarly confined to Attic, but is found not only in comedy (Crates Com. fr. 16.5 παρατίθου) but also in tragedy (A. Eu. 226; E. fr. 337.1; see Veitch 1887. 347 for examples from late prose). See in general Lautensach 1918. 87–9; Willi 2003. 247.

Interpretation A threat addressed to an individual man (hence masc. κλάων): any attempt at violence on his part will be met with matching violence, and the addressee should expect to get the worst of the confrontation. That the addressee will be seated (καθῇ) after the confrontation, as also in Ar. fr. 631 (quoted below), is presumably a consequence of the fact that the speaker will have knocked him off his feet, as at Eup. fr. 99.110 κλάοντα καθέσω σ(ε) with Olson 2017 ad loc. The fundamental point in any case is that he will be sidelined and will have to sit and watch the speaker do what the speaker intended to do all along, the attempt at intervention having failed and having brought the addressee physical pain to boot.

τὴν χεῖρα μὴ (ἐ)πίβαλλε For the expression, first attested here and always with a definite article and "hand" in the singular (where colloquial English would use either the indefinite "a hand" or plural "your hands"), cf. Ar. Nu. 933 κλαύσει, τὴν χεῖρ' ἢν ἐπιβάλλῃς ("you'll be sorry, if you try to lay your hand on him"; the Better Argument threatens the Worse Argument, who is trying to lead Pheidippides away); Lys. 439–40 εἰ … ταῦτῃ μόνον / τὴν χεῖρ' ἐπιβαλεῖς, ἐπιχεσεῖ πατούμενος ("if you so much as lay your hand on her, you'll be trampled and will shit over all over yourself"; an old woman threatens one of the bowmen ordered to arrest Lysistrata); Theoc. 27.19 μὴ 'πιβάλῃς τὴν χεῖρα. καὶ εἰσέτι; χεῖλος ἀμύξω ("keep your hand off of me! Still? I'll scratch your lip"; a girl threatens the shepherd Daphnis, whose amorous advances are as yet unwelcome); Gen. 22:12 LXX μὴ ἐπιβάλῃς τὴν χεῖρά σου ἐπὶ τὸ παιδάριον ("Don't lay your hand upon the child!"; God prevents Abraham from sacrificing Isaac); and cf. Ar. Lys. 359 ἢν προσφέρῃ τὴν χεῖρά τις, 435–6

Eust. p. 1840.2–3 = ii.171.8–9, presumably drawing on some now-lost grammarian (Herodian?), attempts to explain the form: τοῦ δὲ ἧσο σύνθετον τὸ κάθησο, ὅθεν ἐνδείᾳ, φασί, καὶ συστολῇ κάθεο, καὶ συναλιφῇ κάθου παρὰ Μενάνδρῳ ("kathêso is a compound of hêso, 'be seated!', whence katheo, they say, via endeia ('loss') and systolê ('change of a long vowel to a short vowel'), and kathou via synaliphê ('contraction') in Menander"); cf. EM p. 483.39–40 (κάθου) ὁ Ἡρωδιανὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ κάθησο ἀποβολῇ τοῦ σ καὶ τροπῇ ("(kathou, 'sit!'). Herodian says that it comes from kathêso via apobolê ('loss') of sigma and tropê ('phonetic change')"). Eustathius thus envisions a development of κάθου < κάθησο via an intermediary κάθεο < κάθηο (neither attested outside of his remarks), along the same lines as τίθου < τίθεσο via an intermediary τίθεο (Archil. fr. 23.10). But the shortening of κάθηο to κάθεο is unlikely, since -ηο- in Attic typically develops via quantitative metathesis into -εω- and then often contracts to -ῶ-, e.g. Th. 4.63.1 ξυμβῶμεν, "we may come to" < -βέωμεν (cf. Hdt. 7.50.4 ἐπιβέωμεν) < -βήομεν (cf. Il. 22.431 βείομαι); cf. Schwyzer 1953 I.245. Much more likely, κάθου developed via analogy with τίθου : τίθημαι.

εἰ τἄρα … τὴν χεῖρά μοι / ἄκραν προσοίσει, δημόσιος ὢν κλαύσεται, 893 μὴ πρόσαγε τὴν χεῖρά μοι; Men. Sam. 582 μὴ πρόσαγε τὴν χεῖρά μοι.

For κλάω ("weep") in the sense "weep (because of physical violence done to one)" and thus by extension "be sorry (one performed the action that led to punishment)", e. g. fr. 171.69 (restored); Eup. frr. 99.110 (quoted above); 222.1 with Olson 2017 ad loc.; Ar. Ach. 1131; Eq. 433; Nu. 58; V. 1327; Pl. 174; fr. 631 οἰμώζων κάθου; Pl. Com. fr. 189.19; Anaxandr. fr. 40.13; Men. Mis. 220; Il. 2.263; Archil. fr. 11.1; Hippon. fr. 86.18; Archestr. fr. 39.3; Matro fr. 1.91; Herod. 5.46. See in general Stevens 1976. 15–16.

The subjunctive forms καθῇ (not otherwise attested) and καθῆται (Ar. Eq. 754; Av. 1623), as conventionally accented, are distinguished from their indicative counterparts (κάθῃ κάθηται) by accent alone, whereas other subjunctive forms (e. g. καθῶμαι καθώμεθα καθῶνται) are more formally different from their indicative counterparts (κάθημαι καθήμεθα κάθηνται).[26] But the accentuation of these subjunctive forms was a matter of uncertainty in antiquity, with grammarians and scribes handling them inconsistently; cf. Ar. Eq. 754 καθῆται, transmitted by V as κάθηται and by R without an accent; and see in general Bamberg 1874. 33–5. Orus' note thus reflects this uncertainty and suggests that either he or his source(s) took κάθῃ and κάθηται to be correctly accented subjunctives.[27]

---

[26] The subjunctive forms of athematic verbs were properly formed by the addition of -ε/ο- to the root. Although this was widely replaced with the -η/ω- proper to thematic verbs, many old athematic subjunctive forms nevertheless survived as so-called "short-vowel subjunctives" (e. g. Il. 18.409 ἀποθείομαι; 15.297 στήομεν), which ultimately underwent quantitative metathesis (e. g. Il. 11.348 στέωμεν; Od. 24.485 θέωμεν) and, in Attic, contraction (e. g. X. Smp. 2.7 ἀποθώμεθα; E. IA 598 στῶμεν). The subjunctive forms καθῶμαι καθῇ καθήται etc. are conventionally accented thus (cf. Kühner–Blass 1892 II §301; Schwyzer 1953 I.680), as though from old short-vowel subjunctives καθήομαι καθήεσαι καθήεται etc., although neither these nor the intermediate forms καθέωμαι καθέησαι καθέηται etc. are directly attested. See in general Schwyzer 1953 I.792; Sihler 1995. 593–4.

[27] A starting point for the confusion regarding the accentuation of the verb might have been the imperative κάθου (for which, see n. 25 above) and the second-person singular indicative κάθῃ (adesp. com. fr. *745.1 (the text is problematic); Hyp. fr. 115 Jensen), a contracted Ionic form, according to Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 298.14–15), in lieu of the more correct κάθησαι (X. Oec. 7.1; Cyr. 3.1.6; Arist. SE 178ᵇ25). Both κάθου and κάθῃ look as if they are from κάθομαι (actually the medieval and modern form of the verb), which presumably also lies behind optative forms such as [Pl.] Thg. 130e καθοίμην; Ar. Ra. 919 κάθοιτο (codd.). From κάθομαι, the expected subjunctive forms would be κάθωμαι κάθῃ κάθηται, the latter two being formally identical to their indicative counterparts. For the disappearance

fr. 310 K.–A. (278 K.)

εἰ πρῶτος ἔλθοις, κἂν καθίζεσθαι λάβοις πρῶτος] πρῷος Luppe καθίζεσθαι] καθιζάνειν Blaydes λάβοις] λάχοις Edmonds

If you were to come first, you would in fact get (a place) to sit down

Orus fr. A 57 ap. Zon. p. 1168
λέγουσι δὲ καὶ καθίζανε. Φερεκράτης (fr. 183)· ——. Ἄρχιππος (fr. 49)· ——. Κρατῖνος· ——

And they also say kathizane. Pherecrates (fr. 183): ——. Archippus (fr. 49): ——. Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
——⏑— —|—⏑— ——⏑—

Discussion Blaydes 1896. 11; Pieters 1946. 27, 157; Edmonds 1957 I.120 n. 3; Luppe 1967. 397

Text The paradosis πρῶτος (printed here, as in Kassel–Austin) is possible but flat—the first person to arrive at a public event will of course get a seat—and Luppe's more pointed πρῷος ("early in the day", i. e. before most other people; a simple majuscule error, ΠΡΩΤΟΣ written or read for ΠΡΩΙΟΣ) may well be right. Cf. Ar. V. 104 ἐλθὼν … πρῳ πάνυ ("arriving very early"), 689 ἥκειν … πρῴ ("to come early"; an order issued to jurors); Ec. 290–1 ὃς ἄν / μὴ πρῳ πάνυ τοῦ κνέφους / ἥκῃ ("whoever doesn't come very early, in the morning twilight"; of Assemblymen).[28]

Edmonds proposed λάχοις for the transmitted λάβοις on the ground that λαμβάνω does not typically take a complementary infinitive; cf. fr. 233. But Luppe compared E. Cyc. 561 λήψῃ πιεῖν ("you'll get [something] to drink"), to which Kassel–Austin add E. Cyc. 257 πιεῖν λαβών ("after he got [something] to drink"), and note in addition e. g. Ar. Eq. 118; Nu. 1382; Ec. 306–7; X. HG 7.2.9; Cyr. 1.3.9; 4.5.1; 7.1.1; 8.3.41, which are enough to leave little doubt that the infinitive stands in colloquially for a cognate noun.

---

of athematic verbs and their replacement with semantically equivalent thematic forms, cf. fr. 472 with n., and see in general Browning 1969. 37; Papanastassiou 2001. 615–16.

[28] Also Ar. Lys. 612–13 πρῳ πάνυ / ἥξει; X. Cyr. 6.1.1 πρῳ ἧκον.

Blaydes suggested καθιζάνειν for the paradosis καθίζεσθαι, to match Orus' καθίζανε. But Archipp. fr. 49, which comes next, has καθίζωμ(αι). Blaydes also suggested rewriting the line to read εἰ πρῶτος ἦλθες, κἂν καθίζεσθαι 'λαβες, which is arbitrary and unnecessary.

Citation context From a lexicographic discussion of verbs for sitting that also includes fr. 309 (where see Citation context). Like Cratinus, Archippus actually uses καθίζομαι rather than καθιζάνω.

Interpretation Addressed to an individual male (hence masc. sing. πρῶτος). Pieters thought the destination in question was the Theater, but it might also be the Assembly (cf. Ar. Ach. 25 with Olson 2002 ad loc.) or any other spot where seating was supplied on a first come, first served basis and the demand might eventually exceed the supply. But getting a seat is presented as only a supplemental benefit to this course of action, arriving first—or, with Luppe, arriving early—apparently already having some other, more basic appeal or significance.

Active καθίζω can have either the transitive sense "seat" (e. g. Ar. V. 305) or the intransitive sense "be seated" (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 285; Eup. fr. 194.2; Ar. Ach. 123), whereas middle-passive καθίζομαι often means something more like "find a seat, take a seat" (also e. g. Ar. Eq. 750, 785; V. 90; Th. 292, 1182), like cognate καθέζομαι (e. g. Ar. V. 611). καθιζάνω, the verb with which Orus begins this section of his discussion, is rare in comedy, being attested only at Pherecr. fr. 183 δεῖπνον παρασκεύαζε, σὺ δὲ καθίζανε ("Prepare dinner! And you take a seat!"; cited here) and Men. fr. 424 καθιζάνει μὲν ἐνίοτ' εἰς τὰ σήσαμα ("sometimes he takes a seat in the sesame-market").

fr. 311 K.–A. (279 K.)

ἐφ' ᾧτ' ἐμαυτῆς συγκαθεύδειν τῷ πατρί ἐμαυτῆς Nauck : ἐμαυτήν codd. : ἔμ' αὐτήν Kock on the condition that[29] I sleep with my own father [29] Not "while" (Rusten 2011. 214).

Orus fr. A 52 ap. Zon. p. 929
ἐφ᾽ ᾧ καὶ ἐφ᾽ ᾧτε, ἑκάτερον αὐτῶν. καὶ ὁριστικῷ συντάσσεται ῥήματι καὶ ἀπαρεμφάτῳ. Θουκυδίδης ἐν τετάρτῃ (4.30.4)[30] καὶ Κρατῖνος· —— eph᾽ ôi and eph᾽ ôite, each of them (is acceptable). It is construed both with a finite verb and with an infinitive. Thucydides in Book 4 (4.30.4) and Cratinus· ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⏑–⏑– –|–⏑– ––⏑–

Discussion Bothe 1855. 74; Kock 1880 I.95; Nauck 1880. 721; Blaydes 1890. 14; Nauck 1894. 65; Blaydes 1896. 11; Herwerden 1903. 9; Edmonds 1957. 120; Henderson 1991. 161

Text The ungrammatical paradosis ἐμαυτήν likely represents a crude attempt to supply an accusative subject for the infinitive; Nauck's ἐμαυτῆς is an easy fix. Kock's ἔμ᾽ αὐτήν ("on the condition that I myself"—sc. in contrast to someone else—"sleep with my father"; reanalysis rather than emendation of the transmitted text) might be right, but requires imagining a more complicated and arguably less likely situation. Kassel–Austin record other suggestions by Blaydes and Edmonds, all of them further from the paradosis and thus not to be taken seriously.

Citation context A brief lexicographic note, probably drawing on an Atticist source.

Interpretation A woman's (hence fem. ἐμαυτῆς) description of the key point in a proposal put to her by a third party (something else would happen or be provided to her, provided that …). The reference is almost certainly to incest, with use of the euphemism συγκαθεύδειν rather than a cruder verb such as βινεῖν serving to characterize the speaker. Bothe thought the speaker might be Pelopia, the daughter of Thyestes and mother of Aegisthus; cf. Servius on Verg. Aen. 11.262 Apollo respondit posse alio scelere illius facinoris vindicem nasci, scilicet si cum Pelopia filia sua concumberet ("Apollo responded that a revenger of this misdeed"—i. e. the death of Thyestes' sons at the hands of his brother Atreus—"could be born by means of another sin, specifically if he slept with his own daughter, Pelopia"); Σ E. Or. 14; Hyg. 87–8, 243, 252–4; Gantz 1993. 550–2. This is merely a guess, but it does point to the possibility that the play from which this fragment is drawn was mythological in character. At Ar. Nu. 1371–2; Ra. 1081, horror is expressed in regard to brother-sister incest, as also (mockingly) in Eup. fr. 221 (with Olson 2016 ad loc.). Father-daughter incest does not seem to get similar attention in comedy (although cf. Franko 1995 on Plautus' Poenulus).

[30] ἐφ᾽ ᾧ φυλακῇ τῇ μετρίᾳ τηρήσονται ("on the condition that they not be kept in strict custody"), illustrating the use of ἐφ᾽ ᾧ with an indicative.

For ἐφ' ᾧτ(ε) (attested only in comedy, prose and inscriptions) plus infinitive, e.g. Ar. Ach. 722; Th. 1162; Pl. 1000, 1141[31]; Men. fr. 602.2; Hdt. 7.154.3; Isoc. 17.19; X. HG 2.3.11; Pl. Ap. 29c; D. 41.4; IG II^2 1672.187, and see in general Denniston 1950. 528.

ἐμαυτῆς … τῷ πατρί For the separation of the reflexive genitive from the noun it modifies, the crucial word "father" here being reserved for the end of the line for maximum impact, cf. Ar. Pax 880; Lys. 116; Anaxipp. fr. 1.22. See in general Kühner–Gerth 1898 I.620.

συγκαθεύδω (literally "lie down to sleep with") is a polite euphemism for "have sex with", as also at Ar. Ec. 1009; X. Smp. 4.53, 54 (twice); 8.31, 34; Pl. Lg. 838b, and is common in this sense among Second Sophistic authors (e.g. Plu. Mor. 245f; Luc. Alex. 7.10; 41.9; DMeretr. 3.3; 6.2, 4; 8.1; 12.3, 14 (twice); 13.4, 6; 14.2; Ach.Tat. 5.20.3; Charito 1.8.1; Longus 3.30.4; Ael. Ep. 9; Alciphr. 2.25.1; X.Eph. 5.5.3; Hld. 1.16.2); see Henderson 1991 § 254. Similar euphemisms include συγκατακλίνομαι (Ar. Nu. 49; literally "recline with"); συγκαταδαρθάνω (Ar. Ec. 613, 628; literally "fall asleep with"), συγκατάκειμαι (Ar. Ec. 614; literally "lie down with"), κοιμῶμαι παρά (literally "sleep beside"), κοιμῶμαι μετά (Timocl. fr. 24.1–2; literally "sleep with"), γυναικὸς λαμβάνειν κοινωνίαν (Amphis fr. 20.3; literally "get the company of a woman"), συνεῖναι (Eup. fr. 192.100; Ar. Pax 863; Ec. 38, 619, 898; Anaxil. fr. 22.12, 24; Timocl. fr. 16.6; literally "be together with"), and perhaps συγγίγνομαι (Ar. Ra. 57 with Dover 1993 ad loc.; literally "be together with"). Note also Eup. fr. 431 ἀποκαθεύδουσιν with Olson 2014 ad loc.; σύγκοιτος at Ar. fr. 893 and adesp. com. fr. *745.7; ξύνευνος at Ar. Ec. 953. The compound is first attested at A. Ch. 906.

fr. 312 K.–A. (280 K.)

ὁ τάλαρος ὑμῖν διάπλεως ἔσται γάρου ὁ τάλαρος Ath. Poll. : ὁ κάδος ἄρ' vel ὁ γὰρ κάδος Kock ὑμῖν Poll. : ὑμῶν Ath. ἔσται Ath. : ἐστιν Poll.^{FS} : om. Poll.^{A}

Your (pl.) basket will be full to overflowing with fish-sauce

[31] Better ἐφ' ᾧ τε than Wilson's ἐφ' ᾧ γε.

Poll. 6.65
τὰ δ’ ἡδύσματα ἔλαιον, ὄξος ὡς Εὔπολις (fr. 355)· ——, τὸ δ’ ὄξος καὶ ἦδος ἐκάλουν· γάρος, ὡς Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 606) καὶ Κρατῖνος· ——

But the condiments were olive oil; vinegar, according to Eupolis (fr. 355): ——, and they also referred to vinegar as êdos; fish-sauce, according to Sophocles (fr. 606) and Cratinus: ——

Ath. 2.67b–c
γάρος. Κρατῖνος· ——. Φερεκράτης (fr. 188)· ——. Σοφοκλῆς Τριπτολέμῳ (fr. 606)· ——. Πλάτων (fr. 215)· ——. ὅτι δ’ ἀρσενικόν ἐστι τοὔνομα Αἰσχύλος δηλοῖ εἰπών (fr. 211)· ——

Fish-sauce. Cratinus: ——. Pherecrates (fr. 188): ——. Sophocles in Triptolemos (fr. 606): ——. Plato (fr. 215): ——. Aeschylus makes clear that the word is masculine when he says (fr. 211): ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⏑⏑⏑– –|⏑⏑⏑– ––⏑–

Discussion Kock 1880 I.95; Blaydes 1896. 11; Herwerden 1903. 9; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Nomoi by Kock.

Text A τάλαρος is an unlikely container for fish-sauce, and Kock accordingly proposed emending to either ὁ κάδος ἄρ’ (“your jar indeed”) or ὁ γὰρ κάδος (“for your jar”). This is heavy-handed (see Interpretation), and the paradosis should be retained.

ὑμῖν (thus Pollux) is a dative of interest, which has been driven out of Athenaeus’ version of the text by the clumsier genitive ὑμῶν (intended to modify ὁ τάλαρος).

Athenaeus’ ἔσται (“will be”) and Pollux’ ἐστιν (“is”) both scan. But filling a basket with fish-sauce seems more like an adynaton than an event from real life, and (with all modern editors) we accordingly adopt the future.

Citation context That Pollux and Athenaeus both cite this fragment as well as S. fr. 606 suggests that they are drawing independently on a now-lost source.

Interpretation A threat or prediction addressed to a group. τάλαρος (<telh*$_2$-, “bear, carry”; cognate with e. g. ταλάσσαι, τέλλω and τλήμων, as well as with Latin tollo) is used in Homer and the pseudo-Hesiodic Shield of Heracles as a generic term for a basket (for holding wool at Od. 4.125, 131; for draining cheese at Od. 9.247, as also at Ar. Ra. 560 and Theoc. 5.86; 8.70; for gathering grapes at Il. 18.568; specifically called πλεκτός, “woven” at Il. 18.568; Od. 9.247). At Dionysalexandros test. i.30, Dionysus conceals Helen in a τάλαρος to keep her out of the sight of Menelaus and the Achaeans; cf. the use of the word to mean "bird-cage" or the like at Timo SH 786.3. This is thus precisely the wrong sort of vessel to hold a liquid substance like fish sauce, making this a paradox and presumably a joke. Perhaps the basket has fish in it, and the idea is that they will be allowed to rot, producing something resembling γάρος/γάρον (see below)—allowing another character to object that the sauce will actually drain out instead; or perhaps some or all of the language is figurative.

διάπλεως is otherwise attested in the classical period only at Thphr. CP 2.1.4 and must be a colloquial formation, with διά functioning as an intensifying prefix (see LSJ s. v. D.5), as in διάμεστος, "brim-full" (Antiph. fr. 240.3); δίεφθος, "well-boiled" (Pherecr. fr. 113.14; Telecl. fr. 51); διάκοπρος, "well-manured" (Thphr. CP 4.12.3); with verbs in e. g. διαρρικνόομαι, "do the twist" (fr. 234); διαγαληνίζω, "make quite calm" (Ar. Eq. 646); διαλείχω, "lick clean" (Ar. Eq. 1034; V. 904); διατήκω, "melt entirely down" (Ar. Nu. 149).

γάρος or γάρον (etymology unknown, and taken over into Latin as garum; whether the word was properly masculine or neuter was debated already in antiquity) was a fermented sauce whose main ingredients were fish and salt. The passages preserved by Pollux and Athenaeus are almost the only references to γάρος/γάρον in the classical period (also S. fr. 799a, which may be a confused doublet of S. fr. 606, and Clearchus' anecdote (fr. 57 Wehrli ap. Ath. 1.5f–6a) about Philoxenus, who invaded other people's kitchens armed with "oil, wine, garon, vinegar and other seasonings" and took over the cooking).[32] See Corcoran 1963 (with attention to the Roman period, when the evidence is far more abundant); Curtis 1991. 6–15. We know from Herodian that Aeschylus' Proteus was a satyr play, and the reference in Sophocles' Triptolemus to γάρος/γάρον—far too undignified a substance to be mentioned onstage in tragedy—leaves little doubt that Brunck was right to argue that that play was as well.

fr. 313 K.–A. (281 K.)

ποιμὴν καθέστηκ'· αἰπολῶ καὶ βουκολῶ καθέστηκ' D.Chr.[H] : καθέστηκα D.Chr.[UBM] : καθέστηκεν D.Chr.[P] αἰπολῶ καὶ βουκολῶ von Arnim : αἰπόλω καὶ βουκόλῳ D.Chr.[U] : αἰπώλω καὶ βουκόλῳ D.Chr.[BM] : αἴπολος καὶ βούκολος D.Chr.[PH]

I'm set as a herdsman; I tend goats and cows

[32] Liberman 1993 argues that a reference to γάρος/γάρον may be concealed in the corrupt Alcm. PMG 17.6 οὔτι γὰρ † οὐ τετυμμένον † ἔσθει.

Dio Chrysostom or. 56.2
— εἴσι τινὲς ἀνθρώπων ἄρχοντες; ὥσπερ ἕτεροι μὲν αἰγῶν, ἕτεροι δὲ ὑῶν, οἱ δέ τινες ἵππων, οἱ δὲ καὶ βοῶν, ξύμπαντες οὗτοι οἱ καλούμενοι κοινῇ ποιμένες· ἢ οὐκ ἀνέγνωκας τοῦτο τὸ ἔπος Κρατίνου· ——;
— οὐκ ἂν ἔχοιμί σοι εἰπεῖν, εἰ ποιμένας ἄμεινον ὀνομάζειν σύμπαντας τοὺς τῶν ζῴων νομέας — Are there certain persons who rule human beings? Just as other individuals rule goats, others pigs, some horses, some cattle, these all being generally referred to as herdsmen? Or have you not read this verse of Cratinus: ——?

— I could not tell you whether it is better to call all those who pasture animals herdsmen

Meter Iambic trimeter.
——⏑— —|—⏑— ——⏑—

Discussion Bergk 1838. 34; Kock 1880 I.95

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Boukoloi by Bergk, to Dionysalexandros by Kock.

Text D.Chr.[UBM] have scriptio plena καθέστηκα; modern typographic conventions require the elided form καθέστηκ', as in D.Chr.[H]. D.Chr.[P] has misexpanded the elided reading preserved in D.Chr.[H] and has converted the verb into a third-person singular (καθέστηκεν).

αἰπολῶ and βουκολῶ were misunderstood as nouns at some point in the transmission of the text and were accordingly converted to a dative of advantage ("I serve as a herdsman for a goatherd and a cowherd") in the common ancestor of D.Chr.[UBM], on the one hand, and to a nominative ("I serve as herdsman, a goatherd and a cowherd") in the common ancestor of D.Chr[PH], on the other; corrected by von Arnim in his edition of Dio Chrysostom.

Citation context From the beginning of what is supposedly a conversation between the Second Sophistic author Dio Chrysostom (1st century CE) and an unnamed pupil. In his opening sentence, Dio Chrysostom proposes Agamemnon as an edifying topic, and after securing the pupil's acceptance of the theme, he quotes the fragment of Cratinus as an overture to eliciting a definition of "king" starting with the Homeric ποιμὴν λαῶν (literally "herdsman of peoples"; e. g. Il. 1.263). The conversation is punctuated by other references to and quotations of Homer (mostly from Books 1 and 2 of the Iliad).

Dio Chrysostom rarely cites the comic poets; this is his only quotation of Cratinus, and he likewise quotes Aristophanes only once (fr. 598), although he does mention Cratinus, Aristophanes and Plato Comicus together in a canned anecdote about the Athenians' supposed willingness to listen to advice offered by the comic poets but not to Socrates (or. 16.9 = Cratin. test. 31). Nor does the speaker here claim to know Cratinus' complete plays or suggest that his interlocutor might, asking only if he has read a particular—apparently famous—line.

Interpretation The first half of the line might be taken as metaphor, as in Homer; cf. fr. 317 with n. But the second half suggests that actual animal-herding is in question, the speaker seemingly being a rustic free-lancer ready to take on whatever work is available. Cf. the even broader range of advertised abilities at Eup. fr. 12 ἐπίσταμαι γὰρ αἰπολεῖν, σκάπτειν, νεᾶν, φυτεύειν ("for I know how to tend goats, dig, break fallow land and plant") with Olson 2016 ad loc. For the economic and social structures of animal herding generally, see Hodkinson 1988; Rosivach 1994. 69–106; Nixon–Price 2001 (on pastoralism); Berman 2005 (arguing that already in Homer cowherds are consistently treated as being of much higher status than goatherds, with shepherds occupying a more or less neutral position between the two); McInerney 2010. 173–95.

ποιμήν (Indo-European) is attested already in Mycenean (e. g. PY Ae 134; PY Nn 831) and normally means "shepherd" (e. g. fr. 39.2 τὰ πρόβατα καὶ τοὺς ποιμένας, "the sheep and the poimenes", with Bianchi 2016 ad loc.; Anaxandr. fr. 35.10 ὑφείλετ' ἄρνα ποιμένος, "he filched a lamb from a shepherd"; Il. 5.137; 11.106; 12.451; Hes. Th. 446; E. Ba. 714 βουκόλοι καὶ ποιμένες, "cowherds and poimenes"; [D.] 47.52). The second half of this line, however, makes it clear that the word could be used more broadly of herdsmen generally.

For καθίστημι in the sense "be set, be appointed, be established", e. g. Ar. Nu. 1400 τῶν καθεστώτων νόμων ("the established laws"); Av. 1161 φυλακαὶ καθεστήκασι ("watch-points have been set up"); Alex. fr. 153.3; LSJ s. v. B.2 (with examples from other genres).

αἰπολῶ is rare (A. Eu. 196 (metaphorical of the Furies) with Sommerstein 1989 ad loc.; Eup. fr. 12 (quoted above); Theoc. 8.84; Poll. 1.250 (in a list of verbs for herding various animals); 7.185 (in a short list of words pertaining to goats amid a larger discussion of words pertaining to herding generally)). But cognate nouns are attested already in Homer (e. g. Il. 2.474 ὥς τ' αἰπόλια πλατέ' αἰγῶν αἰπόλοι ἄνδρες; Od. 20.173). The second element in the word is < πέλομαι (~ "busy oneself about"), as is also the case with βουκολέω (below) as well as e. g. θυηπολέω ("busy oneself with sacrifice, make sacrifice"), ὀνειροπολέω ("busy oneself with dreams, dream"), πυρπολέω ("tend a fire").

βουκολῶ (for the formation, see above on αἰπολῶ) is literally "tend cows" (e. g. Od. 10.85; hAphr. 167; Theoc. 7.92), but cf. Eup. fr. 19 βουκολεῖσθαι αἶγας (literally "to cowherd goats") with Olson 2017 ad loc. The verb also has the extended meanings (1) "reverence, serve (a divinity)" (e. g. A. Eu. 78; Ar. V. 10 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Pax 153; cf. fr. 317 n. on boukoloi as followers of Dionysus) and (2) "cheat, deceive" (Ar. Ec. 81, although see Ussher 1973 ad loc.; Men. Sam. 596; Luc. Trag. 29).

fr. *314 K.–A. (283 K.) = Eup. fr. 120

ἔχων τὸ πρόσωπον καρίδος μασθλητίνης having (masc. sing.) the face of a shrimp that's red as leather

Et.Gen. AB (= EM p. 491.40–3)
καρίς· ὡς παρὰ Κρατίνῳ· ——. ἀντὶ τοῦ δερματίνης. λέγεται δὲ καρὶς παρὰ τὸ σκαίρω σκαρίς, ἢ παρὰ τὸ κάρα καρίς· καὶ γὰρ ὅλη ἡ καρὶς σχεδὸν κεφαλή ἐστι karis ("shrimp"): as in Cratinus: ——. In place of "made of leather". It is called a karis by reference to skairô ("skip, dance"), (hence) skaris, or by reference to kara ("head"), (hence) karis; for a shrimp is almost entirely head (kephalê)

Ath. 3.106b–c
συνεσταλμένως δ' εἴρηκεν Εὔπολις ἐν Αἰξὶν οὕτως (fr. 2)· ——. καὶ ἐν Δήμοις· ——. ὠνομάσθησαν δὲ καρῖδες ἀπὸ τοῦ κάρα· τὸ πλεῖστον γὰρ μέρος τοῦ σώματος ἡ κεφαλὴ ἀπηνέγκατο. καρίδες δὲ βραχέως οἱ Ἀττικοὶ ἀναλόγως· παρὰ γὰρ τὸ κάρη γέγονε διὰ τὸ μείζονι κεχρῆσθαι κεφαλῇ

But Eupolis uses (karis) with a short iota in Aiges as follows (fr. 2): ——. Also in Dêmoi: ——. They got the name karides from their head (kara); for the head occupied the largest portion of their body. Attic authors use karides with a short iota for an analogous reason; for (the word) was formed from karê ("head") because the creature has a particularly large head (kephalê)

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⏑ – ⏑⏑ – | – ⏑ – | – – ⏑ –

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.184; Kock 1880 I.96; Wilamowitz 1893 I.180 n. 84; Bechtel 1898. 42–3; Hamm 1952. 45; Telò 2007. 611–14

Citation context Athenaeus cites the verse in the course of a long discussion of crustaceans reminiscent of the catalogue of seafood in Book 7 (although without the alphabetical organization imposed by Pamphilus) and thus perhaps similarly drawn direct or indirect from Dorion's On Fish. Further speculation about the significance of the variation between long and short iota in the word follows. The Et.Gen. seems to be drawing on a similar source, but assigns the fragment to Cratinus rather than to Eupolis. The fact that Athenaeus offers the title of the play from which the line is drawn inspires some confidence in his assignment, and Κρατίνῳ in the Et.Gen. may reflect the influence of καρίς; or perhaps a line such as Cratin. Jun. fr. 13 has fallen out of the text (ὡς παρὰ Κρατίνῳ· ⟨καρῖδας ἡ ζὰψ ἐκφέρει κἰχθύδια. καὶ παρὰ Εὐπόλιδι·⟩ ἔχων τὸ πρόσωπον καρίδος μασθλητίνης). This might accordingly better have been treated as a dubium.

Interpretation It is unclear whether the face of the individual in question is red because of embarrassment, exertion or anger; as a consequence of habitual drunkenness (cf. Eup. fr. 20 with Olson 2017 ad loc.); or because he has been beaten up. Cf. Telecl. fr. 46 δοθιῆνος ἔχων τὸ πρόσωπον ("having the face of a boil", i. e. "a face as red and inflamed as a boil"); Hermipp. fr. 74 ἐγώ σου τήμερον / τύπτων τὸ πρόσωπον ⟨νὴ Δί'⟩ αἱ/μορρυγχιᾶν ποιήσω ("I'll strike your face today, by Zeus, and make it run with blood"); Alex. fr. 275 ἑόρακας ⟨ἤδη⟩ πώποτ' ἐσκευασμένον / ἤνυστρον ἢ σπλῆν' ὀπτὸν ὠνθυλευμένον / ἢ κοκκυμήλων σπυρίδα πεπόνων; ⟨—⏑—⟩ / τοιοῦτ' ἔχει τὸ μέτωπον ("Have you ever seen a cooked cow's stomach, or a roasted stuffed spleen, or a basket of ripe plums? … That's what his face looks like"); Anaxandr. fr. 23 ἐρυθρότερον καρῖδος ὀπτῆς σ' ἀποφανῶ ("I'll make you look redder than a roasted shrimp") with Millis 2015 ad loc.; P. Heidelberg 190, esp. 24–7 ap. Siegmann 1956. 27–37 (seemingly a collection of insults regarding the appearance of the interlocutor's πρόσωπον); Hesk 2007. 131–4 (on the abusive game of eikasmoi). Wilamowitz thought that the individual referred to was Kleokritos (PA 8570; PAA 576825; Stefanis #1441), seemingly for no other reason than that Kleokritos is mentioned in Eup. fr. 136.

καρίδος For shrimp, included in catalogues of seafood and the like at e. g. Ar. fr. 333.2; Cratin. Jun. fr. 13; Ephipp. fr. 12.6; Antiph. fr. 130.8, see Thompson 1947. 103–4; Davidson 1981. 170–6; Olson–Sens 2000 on Archestr. fr. 26.2. The iota is short also at Semon. fr. 15.1; Anan. fr. 5.2; Ar. V. 1521–2; fr. 333.2; the alpha is always long. Beekes 2010 s. v. takes the variation in the length of the iota as evidence of the pre-Greek origin of the word. But the two forms are not contemporary—the iota is always long in 5th-century poets, always short thereafter—and more likely the pronunciation changed for some reason around 400 BCE.

μασθλητίνης is < μάσθλης, "leather" (Hp. Morb. II 59 = 7.92.5 Littré; Ctes. FGrH 688 F 45.42 (p. 504); etymology uncertain) and thus by extension "an item made of leather" (a fancy shoe at Sapph. fr. 39.2, in the form μάσλης; a whip at S. fr. 129; figurative of a shameless rogue at Ar. Eq. 269; Nu. 449). But the combination of this fragment and the parallels cited above; a pair of glosses in Hesychius (δ 1485; μ 332 μάσθλη καὶ μάσθλης· δέρμα, καὶ ὑπόδημα φοινικοῦν, "masthlê and masthlês: leather, and a dark red shoe"); and Polemon fr. 96 (a type of shoe described as λευκὰς καὶ μασθλητίνας, "white and masth- lêtinai") has led to the word being taken to refer to a particular sort of leather with a reddish cast. See in general Hamm 1952. For the suffix, cf. fr. 334.2 σφενδάμνιναι with n.

fr. 315 K.–A. (284 K.)

ἄκουε, σίγα, πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν, δεῦρ' ὅρα

Listen! Hush! Pay attention! Look here!

Phot. α 813 = Synag. B α 808
ἄκουε σίγα· Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 815)· ἄκουε, σίγα, τίς ποτ' ἐν δόμοις βοή;

Listen! Hush!: Cratinus: ——. And Sophocles (fr. 815): Listen! Hush! What shouting is there in the house?

Phot. α 804 = Synag. B α 762
ἄκουε· ἀντὶ τοῦ σίγα. Κρατῖνος. οἷον τόπον δίδου διὰ τῆς σιγῆς τῇ ἀκοῇ

Listen!: in place of "Hush!". Cratinus. As it were, "give space for listening by means of quiet!"

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⏑–⏑– –|⏑⏑|– ––⏑–

Discussion Kock 1880 I.96

Text Kock suggested that there might be two speakers, who take turns issuing orders; but this merely makes the text more confusing without clarifying its sense in any way.

Adverbial σῖγα is also possible (cf. A. fr. 78a col. 1.4 ἄκουε δὴ πᾶς σῖγα, "Everyone listen up now in silence!"), in which case the line contains three rather than four commands.

Citation context Two versions (one much abbreviated) of a lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ‴; identified by de Borries as Phryn. PS fr. *133. The content of the second note suggests that the first—printed above as it appears in the standard editions—ought to be punctuated instead ἄκουε· σίγα. Κρατῖνος· … ("Listen!: Hush! Cratinus: …").

Interpretation A complex order addressed to a single person. If printed thus (see Text), the sequence of imperatives can be understood either as consisting of two balanced halves, each containing a pair of complementary requests (~ "Listen rather than speaking!" and then "Pay attention by looking here!"), or as a single series of logically connected demands (~ "Hey—shut up! (Now) pay attention (in general)! (Specifically) look here!"). Cf. in general Pherecr. fr. 163.3 πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν κἀκροῶ ("Pay attention and listen!"); Ar. Eq. 1014 ἄκουε δή νυν καὶ πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν ἐμοί ("Listen up now and pay attention to me!"); Th. 381 σίγα, σιώπα, πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν ("Hush! Be silent! Pay attention!") with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; Pl. 113 πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν ἵνα πύθῃ ("Pay attention so you can learn something!", i. e. "and listen!"); Plaut. Poen. 3 siletque et tacete atque animum adovortite ("Hush and be quiet and direct your attention here!"; addressed to the audience); Ter. Eu. 44 date operam, cum silentio animum attendite ("Pay attention! Give heed in silence!"; addressed to the audience).

For ἄκουε used absolutely, also e. g. fr. 316; Ar. V. 1435; Av. 1513; Th. 372; Pl. Com. frr. 188.11; 189.5; S. Ai. 1332; E. Hec. 833; Pl. Cra. 413d.

For πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν (literally "apply your mind!"), a late 5th-/4th-century idiom, e. g. (in addition to the passages cited above) Pherecr. fr. 84.1; Ar. Eq. 503; Nu. 575; V. 1015; Pax 174; Av. 688; Alex. fr. 274.2; Antiph. fr. 57.2; Th. 6.93.2; Antipho 5.31; X. An. 6.3.18; Isoc. 11.18; Pl. Ap. 18a; D. 18.178;[33] picked up by Atticist authors at e. g. Gal. I.427.15 K.; Luc. Smp. 43; Plu. Lys. 5.3. Cf. 317 (where τὸν νοῦν must be supplied) with n.

δεῦρ(ο) ὅρα Despite LSJ s. v. I.1, in colloquial spoken Attic δεῦρο and δευρί need not mean simply "hither", i. e. toward the speaker (with verbs of motion) or "here" (i. e. where the speaker is located, with the implication that he or she previously moved to that point), but can also mean "there" or "in that direction", the place in question being clear either from a gesture or from something said or done previously onstage; e. g. Ar. Eq. 162 δευρὶ βλέπε ("Look there!", i. e. toward the audience); Nu. 91 δεῦρό νυν ἀπόβλεπε ("Now look there!", i. e. toward the stage house), 323 βλέπε νυν δευρὶ πρὸς τὴν Πάρνηθ' ("Now look there, toward Parnes!"), 694 κατακλινεὶς δευρί ("after you lie down there", i. e. on the pallet Strepsiades has hauled onstage); V. 1341 ἀνάβαινε δεῦρο ("Get up there!", i. e. onto the raised stage); Av. 202 δευρὶ … ἐμβὰς … εἰς τὴν λόχμην ("after you enter the thicket there", referring to the stage house), 646 δεῦρο … εἴσιτον ("Go in there!", referring to the stage house); Lys. 738 χώρει πάλιν δεῦρ' ("Go back there!", referring to the stage house); Ra. 652 and 658 δεῦρο πάλιν βαδιστέον ("I have to go back there", i. e. to the other man being interrogated); Ec. 124 δεῦρ' … σκέψαι ("Look there!", pointing to the other women, as the plurals in 126–7 show), 496–7 δεῦρ' ἐπὶ σκιᾶς / ἐλθοῦσα πρὸς τὸ τειχίον ("going there toward the shade in the direction of the wall"), 1106 δεῦρ' εἰσπλέων ("when I sail in there", referring to the Hags' house); Pl. Lys. 203b δεῦρο, ἔφη, δείξας μοι ἐν τῷ καταντικρὺ τοῦ τείχους περίβολόν τέ τινα καὶ θύραν ἀνεῳγμένην. διατρίβομεν δὲ … αὐτόθι ("There," he said, pointing out just opposite the wall an enclosed area and an open door; "we pass our time there"); Prt. 311a ἀλλὰ δεῦρο ἐξαναστῶμεν εἰς τὴν αὐλήν ("Let's get up and move to the courtyard there") and Phdr. 229d δεῦρ' ἐκτραπόμενοι κατὰ τὸν Ἴλισὸν ἴωμεν ("Let's turn aside and go in that direction along the Ilissus").

[33] Contrast the late Athenio fr. 1.8 πρόσεχε, κἀγώ σοι φράσω ("Pay (attention), and I'll tell you!"), by which point τὸν νοῦν has dropped out of the idiom.

fr. 316 K.–A. (285 K.)

ἄκουε νῦν καὶ τήνδε τὴν ἐπιστολήν

Hear this order now as well!

Orus fr. A 42 ap. Zon. p. 804
ἐπιστολὴν καὶ τὴν ἐντολὴν λέγουσι. Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ ὁ Πλάτων (Ti. 71d)· ——. ⟨τὸ δὲ⟩ ἐπίσταλμα βάρβαρον ἐπιχωριάζον Ἀλεξανδρεῦσιν. καίτοι οὐ μόνον τὸ ἐπιστεῖλαι καὶ ἐπεσταλκέναι ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἐπεστάλθαι ἐστὶ παρὰ τοῖς παλαιοῖς. Θουκυδίδης (5.37.1)· ——

They also refer to an order as an epistolê. Cratinus: ——. Also Plato (Ti. 71d): ——. ⟨But⟩ epistalma is a barbarous rusticism fashionable among the Alexandrians. In fact, one finds not only episteilai ("to enjoin"; aor.) and epestalkenai ("to have enjoined"; perf.) but also epestalthai ("to have been enjoined"; perf. pass.) in ancient authorities. Thucydides (5.37.1): ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⏑–⏑– –|–⏑|– ⏑–⏑–

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ′, which must itself be dependent on some lost Atticist authority. Plato is cited for his use of ἐπιστολή in the sense "admonition", while Thucydides is cited for his use of the perfect passive of ἐπιστέλλω. The much abbreviated and citation-less Phot. ε 1729 = Suda ε 2632 = Synag. ε 746 = Σ Pl. Ep. 7 337e ἐπιστολή· ἐντολή, ἐπίσκεψις ("epistolê: an order, an injunction") may be drawn from the same source. Related material is preserved at – Σ^{L} S. OC 1601 ἐπιστολάς· ἐντολάς, πράξεις ("epistolas: orders, actions")
– Σ^{LFsl} S. Ai. 781 ἐπιστολάς· ἐντολάς ("epistolas: orders")

– Hsch. ε 5255 ἐπιστολαί· ἐντολαί, ἐπιταγαί. Αἰσχλύλος Προμηθεῖ (3). διαγράμματα. καὶ ἐπιστάλσεις ("epistolai: orders, impositions. Aeschylus in Prometheus (3). Regulations. Also commands"); traced to Diogenianus by Latte
– Σ^{MD} [A.] PV 3 ἐπιστολάς· διχῶς φασὶν Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐπιστολὰς καὶ ἐντολάς ("epistolas: the Athenians said it in two ways: epistolas and orders")
– Eust. p. 29.12–14 = I.47.14–16 ἐπιτέλλειν δέ φησι τὸ προστάσσειν καὶ ἐντέλλεσθαι, ὅπερ καὶ παθητικῶς λέγεται ἐν τῷ 'μή μοι ταῦτ' ἐπιτέλλεο'. ἐξ αὐτοῦ δὲ προσθέσει τοῦ σ παρ' Αἰσχύλῳ ἐπιστολὴ ἡ ἐντολή ("epitellein means to command and to give orders, which is used in the passive in the phrase 'Don't give me these orders!' From it via addition of sigma is the use of epistolê to mean entolê (order) in Aeschylus"); in condensed form also at p. 312.5–6 = I.484.29–30 and p. 829.54–5 = III.149.12–13.

Interpretation A command or plea directed to a single person. Cf. A. fr. 293 ἄκουε τὰς ἐμὰς ἐπιστολάς ("Hear my orders!", i. e. "the orders I'm issuing").

For ἄκουε νῦν, see fr. 315 n.

The earliest attestations of ἐπιστολή (< ἐπιστέλλω, and thus literally "something sent to" another person) are in the plural and mean "orders" (A. Supp. 1012; Pers. 783; = LSJ s. v. 1; subsequently in the plural in this sense at S. Ai. 781; OC 1601; [A.] PV 3; E. Ba. 442); tragedy never uses the word in the singular, although Euripides eventually has the plural in the sense "letter(s)" (e. g. Hipp. 858; = LSJ s. v. 2). This is the earliest example of ἐπιστολή in the singular, and Cratinus presumably uses it to mean "order" here (as Orus believes), as also at Hdt. 4.10.1; 6.50.3, rather than "letter", in which sense the singular is first secure in Thucydides (e. g. 7.10). See also fr. 243 (the only other attestation of the word in 5th-century comedy, although no text is actually preserved).

fr. 317 K.–A. (286 K.)

καὶ μὴ πρόσισχε βαρβάροισι βουκόλοις

And don't pay attention to barbarian cowherds!

Phot. π 1331 = Suda π 2702
προσίσχε· τὸ πρόσεχε. Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 381)· ——. καὶ Θουκυδίδης τρίτῃ (3.22.8)· —— prosische: it means proseche. Cratinus: ——. Also Eupolis (fr. 381): ——. And Thucydides in Book III (3.22.8): ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.

– – ⏑ – ⏑ | – ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ –

Discussion Bergk 1838. 34; Kock 1880 I.96

Attribution to known comedies Tentatively assigned to Boukoloi by Bergk, to Dionysalexandros by Kock.

Citation context A lexicographic note on compounds of ἴσχω traced by Wenzel 1895. 378–81 to Aelius Dionysius (π 67) on the ground that the observation is followed by a citation from Thucydides, whom Pausanias—the other obvious candidate as a source—cites only once and then in connection with Herodotus.

Interpretation A prohibition—preceded by some other remark, hence καί—issued to a single individual. The content of the command is odd enough to raise the possibility that it may be intended metaphorically, e. g. of political leaders (cf. Ar. V. 32, where the Athenians in Assembly are compared to sheep), in which case the line plays on the trope of Athenian politicians as illegitimate citizens (for which, cf. perhaps fr. 32, and see in general Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 61), or of religious celebrants or authorities, in which case the reference is to an exotic cult like the one that played a central role in Eupolis' Baptai.[34] μὴ πρόσισχε sc. τὸν νοῦν; cf. fr. 315 n.; Th. 7.4.4; LSJ s. v. προσέχω I.4 (with numerous other examples of the omission combining to show that the idiom was well-established by this period). For the verb (a reduplicated present of προσέχω) elsewhere in poetry, cf. Eup. fr. 42.1; E. Or. 362; fr. 374.2; A.R. 3.150[35]. Other reduplicated presents with attested simplex counterparts include ἴσχω, "get" (cf. ἔχω, "have"); ἵζω, "sit; seat" (cf. ἕζομαι, "sit"); μίμνω, "remain" (cf. μένω, "stay"); πίπτω, "fall" (cf. πέτομαι, "fly"); τιταίνω, "stretch" (cf. τείνω, "stretch"); see in general Schwyzer 1953 I.690. Although the semantic distinction between these doublets is not always clear, the reduplicated forms generally have an added perfective aspect (cf. Vendryes 1916. 117–23; Giannakis 1991). Thus πρόσισχε τὸν νοῦν may be approximately "pay attention (in this particular instance)", as opposed to πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν, "pay attention (generally)"; cf. Eup. fr. 381 πρόσισχε τὸν νοῦν τῇδε, "pay attention (in particular) to this", as opposed to e. g. Isoc. 12.27 προσέχειν τὸν νοῦν ἅπασι τούτοις, "to pay attention (generally) to all these matters". Herodotus' use of the word in variation with aorist forms of προσέχω also points to the perfective aspect of προσίσχω.[36]

[34] For βούκολος (lit. "cowherd") in the sense "worshipper of Dionysus manifested as a bull", cf. E. fr. 203.1; Luc. Salt. 79; Bianchi 2016. 114–15 (on the title Boukoloi).

[35] ποτισχομένη, with Homeric ποτι- instead of προσ-, although neither προσέχω nor προσίσχω are attested in Homer.

βαρβάροισι For barbarians (i. e. non-Greeks) in comedy, see Long 1986, and more generally Hall 1989. For the Ionic form of the word, e. g. Ar. V. 1089; Pax 408; Ra. 724. The long dative plural endings -οισι(ν), -αισι(ν) and -ῃσι(ν) are rare in 5th-century Attic inscriptions, with the last securely dated examples in public documents appearing around 420 BCE; cf. Dover 1981. 4, 14 n. 10; López Eire 1993. 49; Threatte 1996. 25–32. The presence of the endings in comedy is due to their convenience as metrical alternatives, but perhaps also to some extent to the conservatism of literary convention. The fragments of Cratinus include 24 examples of -οισι(ν) versus 45 of -οις, and 5 examples of -αισι(ν) and 2 of -ῃσι(ν) versus 12 of -αις. Similar patterns obtain in Eupolis (-οισι(ν) 14x vs. -οις 22x; -αισι(ν) 3x vs. -αις 10x) and Pherecrates (-οισι(ν) 16x vs. -οις 58x; -αισι(ν) 8x vs. -αις 24x). While all such statistics must be taken with a grain of salt, given the small size of the samples, this accords roughly with the figures Willi 2003. 241 reports for Aristophanes' Acharnians, Knights and Clouds. By way of contrast, the long forms are proportionally even fewer in Alexis (-οισι(ν) 14x vs. -οις ~100x; -αισι(ν) 4x vs. -αις 35x) and virtually absent from Menander.

For βούκολος (lit. "cowherd"), see fr. 313 n.

fr. *318 K.–A. (287 K.)

ἡ παῖς γὰρ ἔμπαις ἐστίν, ὡς ἠνδρωμένη ἔμπαις Hsch. Poll. : ἔκπαις Kock

For the child (fem.) is with child, as having been with a man

Hsch. η 577
ἠνδρωμένη· ἀνδρὸς πεπειραμένη· ——. ἀντὶ τοῦ συνελθοῦσα ἀνδρί

---

[36] As well as—in Herodotus, at least—a terminative aspect. Contrast e. g. 4.76.2 ἐπείτε γῆν πολλὴν θεωρήσας καὶ ἀποδεξάμενος κατ' αὐτὴν σοφίην πολλὴν ἐκομίζετο ἐς ἤθεα τὰ Σκυθέων πλέων δι' Ἑλλησπόντου προσίσχει ἐς Κύζικον ("when, after seeing many a land and getting a great reputation for wisdom, he was on his way back to the peoples of Scythia, he finally put in at Cyzicus by sailing through the Hellespont") with 6.119.1 ὡς προσέσχον ἐς τὴν Ἀσίην πλέοντες, ἀνήγαγον ἐς Σοῦσα ("when they put in at Asia by ship, they led [them] inland to Susa").

êndrômenê: having experience of a man: ——. In place of synelthousa andri ("after coming together with a man")

Poll. 3.14
καὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ ἔμπαις (Poll.[FSC] : εὔπαις Poll.[AB]), πολύπαις, πολύτεκνος, εὔπαις, εὔτεκνος and empais ("with child"; thus Poll.[FSC]: "blessed with children" Poll.[AB]) in Cratinus, polypais ("having many children"), polyteknos ("bearing many children"), eupais ("blessed in regard to children"), euteknos ("blessed in regard to offspring")

Meter Iambic trimeter.
——⏑— —|—⏑|— ——⏑—

Discussion Kock 1880 I.97

Text Kock proposed the unattested ἔκπαις ("no longer a child") for the paradosis ἔμπαις on the ground that ἔμπαις is out of place in Pollux' list of words. But Pollux is simply offering a catalogue of compounds and derivatives of παῖς and τέκνος, in which context ἔμπαις is entirely appropriate; the reading is confirmed by Hesychius; and it is bad practice in any case to replace a rarity with a word not actually known to exist.

Poll.[AB] transmit εὔπαις as coming from Cratinus, which must be wrong, since the word recurs shortly thereafter.

Citation context A lexicographic note probably also to be associated with Hsch. ε 2407 = Phot. ε 730 ἔμπαις· ἔγκυος ("empais: enkyos ('pregnant')", given that ἔμπαις is attested nowhere else. Note also

- Poll. 2.18 γυνὴ ἠνδρωμένη[37] ("a woman who is êndrômenê"; followed by ἀνδρὶ μεμιγμένη, "one who has had intercourse with a man", which looks like it originated as a gloss on the preceding words; from a long list of terms for men and women at various stages of life)
- Hsch. η 282 ἠκάδα· ἠνδρωμένην γυναῖκα ("êkada[38]: a woman who is êndrômenê")
- Phot. η 196 ἠνδρωμένη· παρθένος ἡ γεγαμημένη ("êndrômenê: a young married woman").

Interpretation The assignment of the verse to Cratinus depends on the overlap between Hesychius' quotation of it (with no mention of an author) and Pollux' attribution of the word ἔμπαις to him. This is thus a conjectural assignment, even if a likely one, and requires an asterisk (omitted in Kassel–Austin) before the number.

[37] Seemingly better punctuated thus than Bethe's γυνή, ἠνδρωμένη.
[38] Obscure, but treated by Hesychius as an accusative.

An explanation of some previous remark about the young woman in question, hence γάρ. The jingle παῖς … ἔμπαις suggests that this is witticism, with the second half of the line glossing the obscure adjective used in the first.

Elsewhere in the 5th century, ἀνδρόω is generally used in the passive to mean "become a man, attain manhood" (LSJ s. v. II, and add to the citations there Pl. Smp. 192a; R. 498b; Arist. EN 1180ᵃ2; [Arist.] Pr. 903ᵃ34, as well as numerous other examples in Herodotus), but Hp. Virg. 1 = 8.470.1–2 Littré τῶν δὲ ἠνδρωμένων γυναικῶν (omitted by LSJ s. v. III, along with the fragment of Cratinus) also has the perfect middle or passive in the sense "sexually experienced".[39]

fr. 319 K.–A. (288 K.)

οὐδ' ὑδατοπωτῶν, οὐδὲ κοιλοφθαλμιῶν ὑδατοπωτῶν Porson : -ποτῶν Poll.

not being a water-drinker (masc.), and not having hollow eyes (masc.)

Poll. 4.184–5
τάχα δὲ καὶ τὸ κοιλοφθαλμιᾶν, οὐκ ἴδιον μὲν γινόμενον ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς νόσημα, συμβαῖνον δὲ κοιλαίνεσθαι τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ἐξ ἄλλου νοσήματος. ——, φησὶν ὁ Κρατῖνος. Φρύνιχος δ' ὁ κωμικὸς (fr. 82) καὶ τὴν κοιλοφθαλμίαν εἴρηκεν

And perhaps also koilophthalmiân ("to suffer from hollow eyes"), which is not a specific affliction of the eyes but something that happens when the eyes become sunken as a result of another disease. ——, says Cratinus. The comic playwright Phrynichus (fr. 82) also uses the term koilophthalmia ("hollowness of the eyes")

Meter Iambic trimeter.
–⏑⏑⏑– –|–⏑|– ––⏑–

[39] This would also seem to be the sense intended at Hsch. α 4778 = Phot. α 1775 ἀνδρώσασθαι· συγγενέσθαι (included as an exceptional use in LSJ s. v. II), "to be together with", being a common euphemism for "to have sex with". If so, the form of the word in Cratinus and Hippocrates is likely middle rather than passive.

Discussion Porson 1812. 284; Kock 1880 I.97; Fraenkel 1910. 115; Marzullo 1959. 149

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Pytinê by Kock (who took Cratinus to be referring to himself).

Text Porson's -πωτῶν for the paradosis -ποτῶν is a matter of metrical necessity. For the form, see Interpretation.

Citation context From a small collection of words for diseases of the head. Cf. Poll. 2.62 κυλοιδιῶν καὶ κοιλόφθαλμος καὶ κοιλοφθαλμιῶν ὁ ἐξόφθαλμος ("someone with protruding eyes is suffering from infra-orbital edema and hollow-eyed and suffering from hollowness of the eyes"; terms for eye-diseases).

Interpretation "To drink water" is "to be a bore" or the like (cf. fr. 299 n.; Ar. Eq. 88–94; Phryn. Com. fr. 74.2 (of a bad musician)), while according to Arist. Phgn. 811^{b}22–3, hollow—i. e. sunken—eyes are characteristic of villains or troublemakers (οἱ δὲ κοίλους ἔχοντες κακοῦργοι· ἀναφέρεται ἐπὶ πίθηκον, "and those who have sunken (eyes) are kakourgoi; applied to a monkey"). These are thus two parallel entries in a list of obliquely described undesirable personal characteristics (in reference to an individual man).

ὑδατοπωτῶν -πότης is expected in such compounds (cf. ἀκρατοπότης, "drinker of unmixed wine", and γαλακτοπότης, "drinker of milk"). But αἱματοπώτης ("drinker of blood") appears at Ar. Eq. 198 (from an oracular response in dactylic hexameter); Poll. 6.20 appears to treat ὑδροπότης and ὑδροπώτης[40] as acceptable alternative forms (thus also ἀκρατοπότης and ἀκρατοπώτης); and a number of Atticist lexicographers go so far as to insist that the Athenians normally used omega rather than omicron in such words,[41] which goes well beyond what can be extracted from the evidence we have, but nonetheless suggests that -πώτης should be understood here as a legitimate, metrically convenient form, as also at Macho 46. See in general Fraenkel 1910. 36, 113–17 (identifying this as an Ionicism, apparently on the basis of Hdt. 6.84.1, where two manuscripts have ἀκρατοπώτης rather than ἀκρατοπότης), and cf. fr. 427 with n.

[40] Metrically impossible here, hence Cratinus' resort to the less common ὑδατο-.

[41] Moer. υ 12 ὑδροπωτεῖν ἐν τῷ ω Ἀττικοί· ἐν τῷ ο Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers [use] hydropôtein with omega, Greeks generally [use the form of the verb] with omicron"); [Ammon.] Diff. 399 πόμα καὶ πῶμα διχῶς λέγουσι τὸ ἁπλοῦν· ἐν δὲ συνθέτοις μόνον διὰ τοῦ ω μεγάλου, οἷον γαλακτοπωτεῖν καὶ ὑδροπωτεῖν ("They say poma and pôma in the simple form; but in compounds exclusively with ômega, for example galaktopôtein ('to drink milk') and hydopôtein ('to drink water')"); Phot. α 595 (= Ael. Dion. α 53) αἱματοπώτης· οἱ Ἀττικοὶ μηκύνοντες τὸ ο προφέρουσι τὴν λέξιν, ὥσπερ καὶ τὸ οἰνοπώτης καὶ ὑδροπώτης, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ πόμα οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι διὰ βραχέος τοῦ ο γράφουσιν, Ἀττικοὶ δὲ ἐπεκτείνοντες ("haimatopôtês: Attic authors offer the word with a long o, like oinopôtês and hydropôtês, since the other [Greeks] also write poma with a short o, whereas Attic authors lengthen it", i. e. to produce pôma).

κοιλοφθαλμιάω is not attested elsewhere until the 2nd century CE (e. g. Gal. 6.444.6–7 K.), but cf. the abstract noun κοιλοφθαλμία at Phryn. Com. fr. 82 (cited by Pollux along with this fragment) and the adjective κοιλόφθαλμος at X. Eq. 1.9. Desiderative verbs in -άω or -ιάω refer to bodily or mental states; see Rutherford 1881. 153–4; Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 467 μαστιγιᾶν (with numerous other examples from comedy); and cf. fr. 334.1 γαυριῶσαι with n.

fr. 320 K.–A. (289 K.)

τούτου δ' ἁπάσας ἀποτεμῶ τὰς μηχανάς

But I´ll cut off every one of this fellow's devices

Phryn. PS p. 50.16–17
ἀποτεμεῖν μηχανάς. Κρατῖνος· —— to cut off devices: Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
——⏑– –|⏑⏑⏑– ——⏑–

Citation context An isolated Atticist gloss.

Interpretation A threat or promise in regard to some previously mentioned third party (a man, hence masculine τούτου).

Whether τούτου is a genitive of separation to be taken with the verb or a possessive genitive to be taken with the direct object (as in the translation offered above) is unclear; cf. Poultney 1936. 119–21. The word is any case lent emphasis by its position at the beginning of the line, as at e. g. Ar. Ach. 431; A. Th. 1013; S. Ph. 284; E. IT 1002. For other line-initial forms of οὗτος, e. g. frr. 32.1 (dat.); 55 (nom./voc.); 77 (nom.); 255 (nom.); 272 (acc.); 351 (acc.); Eup. frr. 8 (acc.); 109.2 (nom.); 167 (acc.).

The use of ἅπας rather than πᾶς is generally a matter of metrical convenience. But here δὲ πάσας would have done just as well as δ' ἁπάσας, and the use of the latter suggests that the comprehensive nature of the promise is important (not just "all" but "every single one" vel sim.). Cf. fr. 250.1 πρῶτον ἁπάντων (where πρῶτον πάντων would also scan); Hermipp. fr. 48.2 δ' ἅπας (where δὲ πᾶς would also scan).

ἀποτεμῶ τὰς μηχανάς The verb is often used of severing body parts (e. g. Phryn.Trag. TrGF 3 F 14.2 ἀποτεμεῖν ὀξέι χαλκῷ κεφαλάν, "to cut off his head with sharp bronze"; Hdt. 5.114.1 ἀποταμόντες τὴν κεφαλήν, "after cutting off his head"; X. HG 3.4.25 ἀποτέμνει αὐτοῦ τὴν κεφαλήν, "he cuts off his head"), and the stratagems are thus described as if they were a portion of their conceiver's person that might be separated from him physically. Cf. Pl. R. 348d τοὺς τὰ βαλλάντια ἀποτέμνοντας (literally "those who cut off purses"), which also makes it clear that a βαλλαντιοτόμος ("purse-cutter"; e. g. Teleclid. fr. 16; Ar. Ra. 772; Pl. R. 552d) did not slice a money-bag open in order to covertly drain its contents, but instead physically removed the purse from the belt or strap from which it was suspended; cf. Dikaiopolis' warning to his daughter about having gold jewelry snipped off of a necklace or the like in the press of a crowd at Ar. Ach. 257–8 with Olson 2002 ad loc. The noun seemingly appears para prosdokian at the end of the line; cf. the similarly unexpected δημοθρόους τ' ἀρὰς / ἀπέδικες ἀπέταμες; ("Did you reject and cut away the curses voiced by the people?"; punctuation and sense obscure) at A. Ag. 1409–10, on the one hand, and ἐξάνοιγε μηχανὰς τὰς Σισύφου (literally "Open up the devices of Sisyphus!", i. e. "Try any tricks you like!") at Ar. Ach. 391, on the other.

fr. 321 K.–A. (290 K.)

ἀνδρῶν ἀρίστων πᾶσα γαργαίρει πόλις ἀνδρῶν ἀρίστων Σ^{RE} : ἀνδρῶν κρατίστων Σ^{Γ} πᾶσα γαργαίρει Σ^{RE} : πᾶσα μάρμαιρε $\Sigma^{\Gamma 1}$: πᾶσα κάρκαιρε $\Sigma^{\Gamma 2}$: πᾶσ' ἐγάργαιρ' ἡ Kaibel : πᾶσα γάργαιρεν Marzullo : πᾶσ' ἐγάργαιρεν Luppe every city swarms with excellent men

Σ^{RE} Ar. Ach. 3
τὸ δὲ γάργαρα καὶ αὐτὸ ἐπὶ πλήθους λαμβάνεται διὰ τὴν συγγένειαν τοῦ γ τὴν πρὸς τὸ κ· εἴρηται δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦ ἄφατα καὶ ἀναρίθμητα. τὸ δὲ κάρκαιρε παρὰ τῷ ποιητῇ (Il. 20.157). μέμνηται καὶ Κρατῖνος· ——, οἷον πλήθει

But gargara is itself used in place of plêthos ("multitude") because of the kinship of gamma with kappa; it is used in place of aphata ("inexpressible") and anarithmêta ("countless"). Also karkaire ("quaked") in the poet (Il. 20.157). Cratinus too mentions it: ——, i. e. plêthei ("is full")

Σ^{Γ} Ar. Ach. 3
εἴρηται δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦ ἄφατα καὶ ἀναρίθμητα. μέμνηται καὶ Κρατῖνος· —, οἷον πλήθει

But (gargara) is used in place of aphata ("inexpressible") and anarithmêta ("countless"). Cratinus too mentions it: —, i. e. plêthei ("is full")

Meter Iambic trimeter.
– – ⏑ – – | – ⏑ | – – – ⏑ –

Discussion Kock 1880 I.97; Crusius 1889. 40; Newman 1902 IV.170; Pieters 1946. 111; Marzullo 1959. 149–50; Luppe 1967. 397–8; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Assigned to Ploutoi by Pieters.

Text Either ἀρίστων (Σ^{RE}) or κρατίστων (Σ^{Γ}) might be right, although ἀνὴρ ἄριστος is something like a set phrase (see Interpretation) and is probably to be preferred. Kock argued that no city is full of excellent men, on which basis he attempted to emend the text further. But the objection is easily disposed of on the assumption that the remark is either ironic (thus Crusius and Newman) or hyperbolic.

Marzullo, Kaibel and Luppe all emend γαργαίρει to an imperfect in light of Σ^{Γ}'s μάρμαιρε/κάρκαιρε, converting the remark into a reminiscence rather than a statement of fact. It is easier to retain the reading in Σ^{RE}. Kaibel also added a definite article, making the sense unambiguously "the entire city"; see Interpretation.

Citation context The fragment is preserved in two versions of the same scholion on the fanciful Aristophanic hapax ψαμμοκοσιογάργαρα ("sand-hundred-heaps") at Ach. 3. Eup. fr. 308 ἀριθμεῖν θεατὰς ψαμμακοσίους ("spectators sand-hundreds in number"; see Olson 2016 ad loc.), Ar. fr. 375, Aristomen. fr. 1, Sophr. fr. 29 and adesp. tr. fr. 442 (the latter four all quoted in Interpretation) are drawn from the same source. Hsch. ψ 59 ψαμμακοσιογάργαρα· πολλὰ, ἀναρίθμητα, ἀπὸ τῆς ψάμμου καὶ τῶν γαργάρων ("psammakosiogargara: many, numberless; from psammos ('sand') and gargara ('heaps')") and Macrobius 5.20.11–13 are other versions of the same note, but omit the reference to Cratinus. Suda ψ 22, on the other hand, is taken straight from the Aristophanic scholia and should not be treated as an independent witness to the tradition. Note also Hsch. γ 166 γαργαίρειν· λάμπειν, πληθῦναι, κινεῖσθαι, σπαίρειν ("gargarein: to shine, be full, be moved, quiver"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus) and Hsch. ε 1246 ἐκάρκαιρεν· ἐπλήθυεν ("ekarkairen: was full").

Interpretation See Text. πᾶς without a definite article is most easily taken to mean "every" (LSJ s. v. A.III; cf. Ar. fr. 375 ἀνδρῶν ἐπακτῶν πᾶσα γαργαίρει στοά, "every stoa swarms with foreign men"), although the article is sometimes omitted even when the sense is "the entire" (e. g. frr. 151.2; 246.2; Hermipp. fr. 77.9). Although ἄριστος and κράτιστος are to some extent synonyms, the comic poets generally use the latter to mean "most powerful, most effective, most useful" (e. g. Eup. frr. 99.117; 102.1; Ar. Eq. 30; V. 635; fr. 381), whereas the former refers to excellence more broadly defined.[42]

The phrase ἀνὴρ ἄριστος, already found in Homer (e. g. Il. 11.288, said by Hector of Agamemnon; 24.384, said by Hermes of Hector; Od. 15.521, said by Telemachus—ironically?—of the suitor Eurymachus), typically denotes a man who is peerless by virtue of birth and personal merit, and is often used in eulogies (e. g. S. Ai. 1380; E. El. 1066; Tr. 395; Ph. 1267; Th. 2.46.1). Attested elsewhere in comedy at Eup. fr. 193.8; Ar. Eq. 873; Nu. 1048; Eub. fr. 66.2. Cf. Lat. vir optime, a laudatory form of address (e. g. Ter. Ad. 983; Cic. Fam. 11.21.3; Stat. Silv. 2.pr.) used ironically at e. g. Cic. Q. Rosc. 104.

γαργαίρει is < γάργαρα, "swarm, heap, load" (etymology uncertain); cf. Aristomen. fr. 1 ἀνδρῶν γάργαρα ("a swarm of men"); Alc. Com. fr. 19.3 γάργαρ' ἀνθρώπων ("a swarm of people") with Orth 2014 ad loc.; adesp. tr. fr. 442 χρημάτων τε γάργαρα ("a heap of money"); and note Hsch. γ 171 γαργαρίς· θόρυβος ("gargaris: uproar"). The verb is first attested here; subsequently at Ar. fr. 375 (quoted above); Sophr. fr. 29 τῶν δὲ χαλκωμάτων καὶ τῶν ἀργυρωμάτων ἐγάργαιρεν ἁ οἰκία ("the house was jammed full of bronze and silver vessels"); Timoth. PMG 791.96 ἐγάργαιρε σώμασιν ("[the sea] was overwhelmed with bodies").

fr. 322 K.–A. (291 K.)

ἀλλ' οὖν θεῷ σπείσαντ' ἄμυστιν δεῖ πιεῖν

θεῷ / σπείσαντ' ἄμυστιν Dindorf : θεὸν πείσαντες μῦστιν A : θεὸν σπείσαντ' ἄμυστιν Kaibel

But it's necessary, then, to pour a libation to the god and take a long drink

[42] This is true even at Ar. Ra. 763 (the chair of honor for any skill in the Underworld goes to τὸν ἄριστον ὄντα τῶν ἑαυτοῦ συντέχνων, "the man who is the best of his fellow-craftsmen"), 770 (Sophocles claims the chair of tragedy ὡς ὢν κράτιστος τὴν τέχνην, "on the grounds of being most accomplished in the craft"), despite Dover 1993 on 770; the claim in 770 is more concrete and specific than the general principle articulated in 763.

Σ^{A} E. Rh. 419
ἄμυστιν· οἱ μὲν ποτηρίου εἶδος ἐπιτηδειότητα ἔχον πρὸς τὰς ἀμυστὶ πόσεις, ὡς ἐν Αὔγῃ (Philyll. fr. 6 K.)· ——. ἄλλοι δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς ἀπνευστὶ πόσεως τάττουσι τὸ ὄνομα, ὡς Κρατῖνος· —— amystis (acc.): some authorities say that it is a kind of cup suitable for drinks at a single draft, as in Augê (Philyll. fr. 6 K.): ——. But others define the word as referring to a drink in the course of which one does not take a breath, as Cratinus (says): ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩ ––⏑–
––⏑– –|–⏑– ⟨×–⏑–⟩

Discussion Meineke 1889 I.225; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Pytinê by Meineke.

Text Printed by Kassel–Austin as a single line with no caesura.

The scholion offers πείσαντες μῦστιν, but ἄμυστιν is wanted, as is an accusative subject for the infinitive, and Dindorf accordingly suggested σπείσαντ' ἄμυστιν (likely a product of misdivision of words, followed by abbreviation and subsequent clumsy misexpansion of the participle). Dindorf's θεῷ in place of the paradosis θεόν provides an indirect object for σπείσαντ(α), although Kaibel noted that the accusative could stand, if the god himself was imagined pouring the libation and doing the drinking. θεὸν πείσαντ' ἄμυστιν δεῖ πιεῖν ("it's necessary to persuade the god and take a long drink") would preserve even more of the transmitted text, but fails to produce a single synthetic thought, as Dindorf's proposal does.

Citation context A note on [E.] Rh. 419 πυκνὴν ἄμυστιν ὡς σὺ δεξιούμενοι. Closely related material, but without mention of Cratinus, is preserved at – Poll. 6.97 τὸ δ' ἄλεισον τὸ Ὁμηρικὸν (e. g. Od. 3.50) μέγα ἦν ἔκπωμα, κληθὲν ἐκ τοῦ ἅλις πιεῖν, ὡς ἡ ἄμυστις· καὶ γὰρ τοῦτο οὐ μόνον τὴν ἀθρόαν πόσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκπώματος σχῆμα δηλοῖ ("the Homeric aleison (e. g. Od. 3.50) was a large drinking vessel that got its name from halis piein ('to drink plenty'), like amystis; for the latter term in fact denotes not only a drink consumed in a single gulp, but also a type of drinking vessel"; cf. Et.Gen. AB α 443 (citing Ar. fr. 634) (ἄλεισον) οἱ μὲν γὰρ λέγουσιν ὅτι παρὰ τὸ ἅλις, ἐξ οὗ ἔστι πιεῖν δαψιλῶς καὶ ἀθρόως ("(aleison) Some authorities say that it derives from halis, that from which one can drink in large quantities and in a single gulp"))

– Ath. 11.783d–e ἄμυστις. καλεῖται μὲν οὕτω πόσις τις, ἥν ἐστιν ἀπνευστὶ πίνειν μὴ μύσαντα. καλοῦσι δ' οὕτω καὶ τὰ ποτήρια, ἀφ' ὧν ἐστι πιεῖν

εὐμαρῶς. καὶ τὸ ῥῆμα δ' ἐξημύστισε φασί, τὸ ἐφ' ἓν πνεῦμα πιεῖν, ὡς ὁ κωμικὸς Πλάτων (fr. 205)· ——. ἔπινον δὲ τὴν ἄμυστιν μετὰ μέλους, μεμετρημένου πρὸς ὠκύτητα χρόνου. ὡς Ἀμειψίας (fr. 21)· —— ("amystis: this is a term for a style of drinking, specifically when someone drinks with his mouth wide open without stopping to take a breath. They refer thus to cups from which one can drink easily. In addition, people use the term exêmystise, meaning 'to drink without pausing for a breath', for example the comic poet Plato (fr. 205): ——. They drank this way to music, keeping track of who drank the fastest. For example Amipsias (fr. 21): ——")

- [Hdn.] Philet. 89 ἄμυστιν ἔλεγον φιάλην ἣν δεῖ ἄπνευστον πιεῖν πρὶν καταμύσαι· οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ μὴ μεμυκέναι τὰ χείλη τὸ ἔκπωμα πλατὺ ὄν ("they used the term amystis for a libation-vessel one needed to drain before closing one's mouth (katamysai). But others derive the word from the fact that the cup does not have closed (mê memykenai) lips, being broad")
- Hsch. α 3875 ἄμυστιν· τὴν συνεχῆ πόσιν ("amystis (acc.): a continuous drink"; traced by Latte to the scholia on Rhesus)
- Hsch. α 3877 ἄμυστις· τὴν ἀπνευστὶ καὶ ἀθρόαν πόσιν Τίμαρχός φησιν οὕτως λέγεσθαι ("amystis: Timarchus says that a drink consumed without taking a breath and at a single gulp is referred to thus")
- Phot. α 1279 ἄμυστις· ἡ ἀπνευστὶ γινομένη πόσις ("amystis: a drink that occurs without a breath being taken")
- Σ^{EG} Ar. Ach. 1229 ἄμυστιν· τὴν ἀθρόαν πόσιν οὕτως ἔλεγον. ἔστι δὲ καὶ εἶδος ποτηρίου φιαλώδους ("amystis (acc.): they referred to a drink consumed in a single gulp this way. But it is also a kind of cup that resembles a libation-bowl")
- Et.Gen. AB α 696 ἄμυστις· ἡ ἀπνευστὶ πόσις· παρὰ τὸ μὴ μύειν, ὅ ἐστι χανδὸν πιεῖν ἐπὶ πολὺ μὴ μύοντα καὶ συνάγοντα τὰ χείλη. ἢ παρὰ τὸ ἅμα πιεῖν χωρὶς τοῦ διαπνεῦσαι, ὅ ἐστιν ἀπνευστί. ἔστι δὲ καὶ φιάλης εἶδος μεγάλης. Μεθόδιος ("amystis: a drink consumed without taking a breath; derived from mê muein ('not to close'), i. e. to drink greedily for a long time without closing one's mouth or bringing one's lips together. Or derived from drinking at one go without respiration (diapneusai), i. e. without a breath (apneusti). It is also a kind of large libation-vessel. Methodius"; seemingly traced to the Aristophanic scholia at Orion p. 8.24–5).

Note also

- Plu. Mor. 750b τοὺς … ἄθρουν καὶ ἀπνευστὶ πίνοντας, ὅπερ ἀμυστίζειν ὠνόμαζον οἱ παλαιοί ("those who drink in a single gulp and without pausing to breath, which the ancients used to refer to as amystizein")
- Gal. XIX.78.3 K. ἀμυστί· ἀθρόως ἄνευ τοῦ μῦσαι τοῖς χείλεσι ("amysti: continuously, without closing one's lips")

– Poll. 6.25 ἀμυστὶ πίνειν, ἀμυστίζειν, χανδὸν πίνειν ("amysti pinein, amystizein, to drink greedily"; cf. Od. 21.294 ὅς ἄν μιν χανδὸν ἕλῃ μηδ' αἴσιμα πίνῃ ("who takes [wine] greedily and drinks too much")) – Phot. α 1278 ~ Suda α 1687 ἀμυστὶ πιεῖν· ἐπιρρηματικῶς. λέγεται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀπνευστὶ καὶ ἄνευ τοῦ ἀναπαύεσθαι πινόντων, οἱονεὶ μηδὲ μυσάντων. τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἔχεται καὶ τὸ ἐξαμυστίσαι. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἀμυστίζειν καὶ τὰ ἐξ αὐτοῦ. καὶ ἀμυστὶ Φερεκράτης (fr. 217) εἶπεν ("to drink amysti: adverbial. The word is used in reference to those who drink without taking a breath or a pause, as it were without closing their mouths (mêde mysantôn). examystisai comes from the same root. amystizein is also used, along with its derivatives. Pherecrates (fr. 217) used amysti as well"; traced by Erbse to Aelius Dionysius (α 102)).

Interpretation An alternative to or expansion of some previously expressed suggestion or argument. ἀλλ(ὰ) οὖν can introduce an objection, protest or the like ("But anyway …"), counter the speaker's own words ("But all the same …"), respond to a rejected suggestion ("Well then …") or mark an attempt to return to the main topic ("Well anyhow …"); see in general Denniston 1950. 441–4.

θεῷ σπείσαντ(α) Cf. fr. 132; Ar. Eq. 106 (a libation to the Good Deity); Nu. 426, 578 (libations to the gods generally); and for libation rituals generally, Tolles 1943; Simon, ThesCRA I.237–53.

An ἄμυστις is an—implicitly extended—draft in the course of which one does not close (μύω) one's mouth, and (without a definite article) functions as an internal accusative with πίνω and similar verbs.[43] To the citations of the word in this sense in LSJ s. v. I and Montanari s. v., add [E.] Rh. 419 with Liapis 2012 ad loc. and Ar. Ach. 1229 ἄκρατον ἐγχέας ἄμυστιν ἐξέλαψα (where, pace LSJ s. v. II and Montanari s. v., the word does not refer to a drinking vessel, for which meaning see Amips. fr. 21.3 and the lexicographers cited in Citation context). Cf. the cognate adverb ἀμυστί, which is attested in the classical period only at Pherecr. fr. 217, but is picked up by the arch-Atticist Lexiphanes at Luc. Lex. 8 and also appears at Luc. Tox. 45; Ael. NA 6.51; 14.16; 17.47; Anacreont. 9.2; 18.2, making it clear that this was regarded as a good Attic word.

[43] At Epich. fr. 31.4 ἄμυστιν ὥσπερ κύλικα πίνει τὸν βίον, τὸν βίον is the external object of the verb, ἄμυστιν the internal object ("he drinks down his livelihood in a single gulp").

fr. 323 K.–A. (292 K.)

ὅνπερ Φιλοκλέης τὸν λόγον διέφθορεν which very plot Philocles has destroyed

$\Sigma^{vet.}$ S. Ant. 404–5
ὃν σὺ τὸν νεκρὸν / ἀπεῖπας· τὸ ἑξῆς, τὸν νεκρὸν ὃν σὺ ἀπεῖπας θάπτειν· οὕτω δὲ χρῶνται οἱ παλαιοὶ ὥστε δύο ἄρθρα, προτακτικόν τε καὶ ὑποτακτικόν, κατὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ὀνόματος παραλαμβάνειν. Κρατῖνος· —— which corpse you forbade: i. e., the corpse that you forbade to bury. This was the usage of the ancient authorities, making it possible to use two articles—one prepositive, the other postpositive—in connection with the same noun. Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
— — ⏑ ⏑ | — ⏑ — | ⏑ — ⏑ —

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.226; Conti-Bizarro 1999. 90–1; Bagordo 2001. 169–73

Citation context Similar material is preserved at Eust. p. 148.33 = I.227.33 (citing S. Ant. 404) περιττὸν εἶναι τὸ τον ἄρθρον ("the article ton is superfluous"), likely drawing on the same source.

Interpretation An attack on the tragic poet Philocles for allegedly mishandling the basic plot-line in one of his plays (i. e. for turning it in an unexpected, non-traditional direction); most likely an incidental comment unconnected with the central action in Cratinus' comedy.

ὅνπερ … τὸν λόγον For an antecedent taken over in the same case as the relative pronoun and typically with the article, as here, into a relative clause in order to clarify what is being said, e. g. fr. 300; Ar. Pax 676; Av. 437; Lys. 834; fr. 403.2; A. Th. 553; S. OC 334, 907; Pl. Chrm. 173e; Tht. 181a; R. 344a; 382c; Prt. 359d; Grg. 448e. See in general Kühner–Gerth 1904 ii.420; Smyth 1956 § 2540.

Φιλοκλέης (PA 14529; PAA 935590; TrGF 24) was the father of the tragic poets Melanthius (TrGF 23) and Morsimus (TrGF 29) and a nephew of Aeschylus (T 2; cf. Böhme 1985. 55). He composed approximately 100 plays, the titles of only nine of which are known (T 1), and placed first in competition against Sophocles' Oedipus the King (T 3a), a fact Aelius Aristides found shameful (T 3b). For the family, which included many other tragic poets as well, see Sutton 1987. 12–14. Despite—perhaps because of—his achievements, Philocles is ridiculed in comedy for his dubious literary abilities (Ar. V. 461–2 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Th. 168 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; cf. Av.

281–2, 1295 with Dunbar 1995 ad loc.), and Σ^{VT^2} Ar. Av. 281 (= T 2) and Suda φ 378 (= T 1) claim that his allegedly harsh style earned him the nicknames Briny (Ἁλμίων) and Bile (Χολή). Suda φ 379 adds that he was ugly, a claim that ought similarly not to be taken at face value.

For the λόγος as the raw material (the Proppian fabula) underlying the plot and action of a drama (the Proppian syuzhet), e.g. frr. 151.2; 193.1 with Olson 2007 ad loc. (= B1); Ar. V. 54 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Pax 50, 148; Ra. 1052; Metag. fr. 15.1; Crates Com. fr. 28 with Bonanno 1972 ad loc. (= fr. 29); Antiph. fr. 189.2; adesp. com. fr. 51; Hsch. λ 1216.

διέφθορεν This form of the perfect is largely confined in the classical period to poetry (also e.g. Pherecr. fr. 155.15; Eup. fr. 50; Ar. fr. 579; Il. 15.128; E. Med. 349), where it is useful for metrical reasons.

fr. 324 K.–A. (293 K.)

Aristid. or. 2.72
τί οὖν, ὦ μ ε γ ί σ τ η σ ὺ γ λ ῶ τ τ α τ ῶ ν Ἑ λ λ η ν ί δ ω ν, ἔφη Κρατῖνος ποιῶν κτλ

What then, o y o u, g r e a t e s t of G r e e k t o n g u e s, (as) Cratinus said in his poetry etc.

Aristid. or. 3.51
οὐκοῦν τῶν μαρτύρων ἡμῖν τῶν εἰς τοὺς λόγους κεκλημένων τῷ Π ε ρ ι κ λ ε ῖ καὶ οἷς οὐκ ἐλάχιστον μετεῖναι φαίημεν ἂν τῆς περὶ ταῦτα ἐμπειρίας ὁ μὲν (supra ὁ μὲν add. R^2 ὁ Εὔπολις, κατὰ δὲ ἄλλους Κρατῖνος) τ ῶ ν Ἑ λ λ η ν ί δ ω ν μ ε γ ί σ τ η ν τὴν ἐκείνου γ λ ῶ τ τ α ν εἴρηκε, λέγων μὲν ἴσον τι καὶ φωνήν, ἀναμίξας δέ τι τῆς παρὰ τῆς τέχνης πικρίας τοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας. ὅμως δ' οὐκ ἐξέφυγε τὸ μὴ οὐ τὰ πρῶτα δοῦναι τῷ ἀνδρὶ, μηδ' ἐνδείξασθαι τὴν μεγαλοπρέπειαν τὴν περὶ τοὺς λόγους αὐτοῦ

Then one (R^2 adds above this "Eupolis, but according to other authorities Cratinus") of our witnesses, who had been summoned to speak for P e r i c l e s and who we should say had not the least amount of experience in these matters, called his t o n g u e t h e g r e a t e s t o f t h o s e b e l o n g i n g t o t h e G r e e k s, by which he meant something like the power of speech, and mixed a bit of the bitterness of his art into what derives from the truth. But all the same he did not shrink from giving the first prize to the man, or from pointing out his magnificent oratorical style Meter Unknown, but on Meineke's understanding of the text (see Text) an iambic trimeter with both penthemimeral and hepthemimeral caesura.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.173–4; Kock 1880 I.98; Coppola 1936 I.40; Edmonds 1957. 124

Assignment to known plays Coppola assigned the fragment to Cheirônes, while Luppe in his unpublished dissertation gave it to Thraittai.

Text Treated by Kassel–Austin (unlike Meineke and Kock) as a rough paraphrase of Cratinus rather than a direct quotation. Why Kassel–Austin take Περικλεῖ in or. 3.51 to come direct from Cratinus (as the expanded spacing in their version of the text suggests) is unclear.

Meineke (followed by Kock) took σύ as not being from Cratinus and proposed writing ἰθ(ί) ὦ (cf. S. OC 107 ἴτ', ὦ μεγίστης Παλλάδος καλούμεναι), while Kock suggested ἀλλ(ά) ὦ (cf. E. Heracl. 597 ἀλλ', ὦ μέγιστον ἐκπρέπουσ' εὐψυχίᾳ). Edmonds proposed instead σὺ δ(έ) (cf. S. fr. 305 σὺ δ' ὦ μεγίστων τυγχάνουσα πενθερῶν).

Citation context Aristides cites the fragment twice in speeches addressed to Plato, the first speech being a defense of oratory generally, the second a defense of Miltiades, Themistocles, Pericles and Cimon, who were allegedly maligned in the Gorgias. In the second case, a paraphrase of Eup. frr. 102.3, 5 and Ar. Ach. 531 follow. The line is likely drawn from a pre-existing collection of material having to do with Pericles rather than from a full text of Cratinus; cf. fr. 326 with n.; Eup. fr. 221 with Olson 2016 ad loc. Aristides cites Cratinus elsewhere at or. 3.154 (fr. 229, without attribution[44]); 28.91 (fr. 255); 34.51 (fr. 364).

Phot. Bibl. 247 p. 411^{b}25–6, 248 p. 424^{a}19–22 is simply quoting Aristides, and the variants and intrusive comments in his text recorded by Kassel–Austin are of no significance for the fragment of Cratinus.

Interpretation Nominal praise of Pericles (for whom, see fr. 326 n.), but probably insincere. For Pericles' rhetorical abilities, cf. Ar. Ach. 530–1 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; adesp. com. fr. 701; [Luc.] Dem.Enc. 20.

For γλῶττα used via synecdoche for a person, Ar. fr. 638; Aeschrio SH 4.8. For the word used metonymically of rhetorical skill or even rhetoric itself (frequently pejorative), e. g. fr. 327.1 with n.; Ar. Eq. 637–8 νῦν μοι θράσος καὶ γλῶσσαν εὔπορον δότε / φωνήν τ' ἀναιδῆ ("Now grant me boldness and a nimble tongue and a shameless voice!"); Nu. 424, 1013, 1018. See in general Denniston 1927. 120.

For the adj. Ἑλληνίς elsewhere in comedy, Ar. Th. 907–8; Men. Asp. fr. 2; Kith. 39; adesp. com. fr. 247.1.

---

[44] Kassel–Austin omit the reference, citing the word in question (ἀριστεροστάτης) only from a complex of closely related lexicographic notes (Phot. α 2810 = Synag. B α 2119; cf. Hsch. α 7241; Poll. 2.161; 4.106) in which it is attributed to Cratinus.

fr. 325 K.–A. (294 K.)

ἄρχων ⟨⏑⟩ εἰμι νῦν Ἀθηναίοις ἐγώ

⟨γάρ⟩ Pierson : ⟨ἄρ'⟩ Luppe : fort. ⟨μὲν⟩ ἄρχων Ἀθηναίοισίν εἰμι νῦν ἐγώ Austin

I'm now an archon for the Athenians

[Hdn.] Philet. 32
ἄρχει Ἀθηναίοις. καὶ ὁ Κρατῖνος· ——, ὅτι καὶ κατὰ τοὺς νόμους ἡ ἀρχή

He holds office for the Athenians. Also Cratinus: ——, since the office is in fact in accord with the laws

Meter Iambic trimeter.
——⟨⏑⟩— ⏑|—⏑— ——⏑—

Discussion Pierson 1759. 441; Meineke 1839 II.195; Leo 1873. 43; Kock 1880 I.98; Crusius 1889. 40; Herwerden 1903. 9; Luppe 1967. 398; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Kock (expanding on Meineke's suggestion that the archon mentioned here might be identified with the one in fr. 17 who declined to award a chorus to Sophocles, but gave one to Cleomachus) attributed the fragment to Boukoloi, while Crusius and Herwerden (both comparing Bacch. fr. 20B.12 and Ar. Eq. 92–4) assigned it to Pytinê.

Text A short syllable is missing after ἄρχων; various supplements have been suggested. Austin deals with the problem in a different way, by reshuffling the words and emending to Ἀθηναίοισιν.

Citation context An isolated entry in an Atticist lexicon apparently concerned with the use of the dative.

Interpretation Emphatic ἐγώ suggests a contrast with someone else. For the word in line-final position adding emphasis, e. g. Eup. fr. 236; Ar. Ach. 325; Theopomp. Com. fr. 33.4; Pl. Com. fr. 46.7; Anaxandr. fr. 40.1; Dionys. Com. fr. 3.4; Men. Dysc. 271.

An ἄρχων is any magistrate, of whom the Athenians had about 700 at any one time; see Hansen 1980 for a catalogue. But the word is most easily taken to refer to the nine chief archons chosen annually by lot to administer the state's affairs ([Arist.] Ath. 8.1–2; 22.5), and in particular to the eponymous archon, who lent his name to the year; see in general Stockton 1990. 108–11. For the dative of interest Ἀθηναίοις, e. g. Hdt. 8.51.1 Καλλιάδεω ἄρχοντος Ἀθηναίοισι ("when Calliades was archon for the Athenians"); Th. 2.2.1 Πυθοδώρου ἔτι δύο μῆνας ἄρχοντος Ἀθηναίοις ("When Pythodorus still had two months left as archon for the Athenians").

fr. 326 K.–A. (300 K.)

πάλαι γὰρ αὐτὸ
λόγοισι προάγει Περικλέης, ἔργοισι δ' οὐδὲ κινεῖ

2 προάγει Reiske : προσάγει Plu.(1–2)

Because Pericles has been promoting it verbally for a long time, but making no actual progress

Plu.(1) Per. 13.7
τὸ δὲ μακρὸν τεῖχος, περὶ οὗ Σωκράτης (Pl. Grg. 455e) ἀκοῦσαί φησιν αὐτὸς εἰσηγουμένου γνώμην Περικλέους, ἠργολάβησε Καλλικράτης. κωμῳδεῖ δὲ τὸ ἔργον Κρατῖνος ὡς βραδέως περαινόμενον· πάλαι γὰρ αὐτό, φησί, λόγοις — κινεῖ

As for the long wall, about which Socrates (Pl. Grg. 455e) says that he personally heard Pericles introduce a proposal, Kallikrates was the contractor. Cratinus makes fun of the work for proceeding slowly; because for a long time, he says, verbally — progress

Plu.(2) Mor. 351a
καίτοι καὶ τοῦτον ὡς βραδέως ἀνύοντα τοῖς ἔργοις ἐπισκώπτων Κρατῖνος οὕτω πως λέγει περὶ τοῦ διὰ μέσου τείχους· λόγοισι γὰρ αὐτὸ προάγει — κινεῖ

Yet Cratinus, mocking (Pericles) for being slow to accomplish his undertakings, speaks more or less as follows about the Middle Wall: for verbally he moves it forward —— progress Meter Iambic tetrameter catalectic.

⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑– ×–⟩⏑– ⏑––
⏑–⏑⏑ –⏑⏑⏑– | ––⏑– ⏑––

Discussion Reiske 1774. 620; Meineke 1839 II.218–20; Conwell 2008. 72–4

Text The fragment has been slightly reworked in Plu.(2), rendering the version of it offered there unmetrical.

In 2, Plutarch's προσάγει scans but gives the wrong sense, and Reiske's προάγει is an easy correction. The confusion is a common one; see Barrett 1964 on E. Hipp. 496.

Citation context Plutarch cites the fragment twice, in his biography of Pericles and in Whether the Athenians were More Famous in War or in Wisdom. The topic in each case is the Periclean building program (the length of which is contrasted in Whether the Athenians … with the length of time Isocrates took to revise a single work, his Panegyricus). The quotations are essentially decorative, and the fact that Plutarch cites the same passage twice suggests that he has drawn it (like fr. 73) from a pre-existing collection of material hostile to Athenian statesmen similar to the pseudo-biographical screed On Themistocles, Thucydides and Pericles by Stesimbrotos of Thasos (FGrH 107; see Stadter 1989. lxii–lxiii, and in general Delvaux 1996).

Interpretation An explanation of some preceding remark (hence γάρ) in reference to one of the Long Walls (already a topic of conversation and accordingly referred to simply as αὐτό); the combination of meter and content suggests an agôn. Plutarch or his source seems to take the point of the observation to be that construction of the wall in question (for which, see below) proceeded slowly, despite Pericles' promises, i. e. that the project had been approved by the Assembly but was being executed badly. But what the speaker is saying might actually be that Pericles argued for the wall for a long time, but got nowhere with the people (sc. because the project cost so much? or because it was part of a grand military strategy with which the Assembly generally was not yet in agreement?), in which case Plutarch's source must have inherited it already out of context and have mistaken its significance.

Pericles (PA 11811; PAA 772645) was the dominant figure in Athenian politics from the 440s BCE until his death in 429 BCE. He is attacked elsewhere in comedy inter alia for his allegedly tyrannical power and for embroiling the Athenians in the Peloponnesian War; cf. frr. 73; 258; Teleclid. fr. 18; Ar. Ach. 530–1 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; Schwarze 1971; Banfi 2003. 2–43, esp. 9–43; and note Th. 2.65.8–9. The Long Walls were built in several phases in the 450s and 440s BCE to link the Themistoclean wall that surrounded the city of Athens itself with the harbors at Phaleron and Piraeus, where the fleet was; here the reference is to the final wall constructed, the so-called "Middle Wall", which ran to the Piraeus. See also Ar. fr. 569 ap. Harp. p. 92.7–10 = Δ 44 Keaney; IG I^3 440.127 (a reference to funds allotted for wall-building in 443/2 BCE); Th. 1.107.1, 108.3; 2.13.7; Aeschin. 2.172–3; Plu. Cim. 13.6; Garland 1987. 167–9; Conwell 2008. 37–105, esp. 65–78 (but putting the initial construction phase earlier than most scholars would accept, in the time of Cimon).

For the architect Kallikrates (PA 7938; PAA 556340), who according to Plutarch was in charge along with Iktinos of construction of the Parthenon in the 440s and early 430s BCE, see IG I^3 35 (ca. 448 BCE); 45 (ca. 445 BCE).

1–2 πάλαι with a present-tense verb is used of actions that began in the past but continue into the present[45] (e. g. Ar. Ach. 1088; Eq. 236, 314; Aristopho fr. 5.2–3; Ephipp. fr. 26.1; cf. Kühner-Gerth 1898 I.134–5).

2 The antithesis between word (λόγος) and deed (ἔργον) is a 5th- and 4th-century trope (e. g. Hdt. 5.24.1; 6.38.2; S. OC 782; fr. 314.152; E. Alc. 339; Supp. 908; fr. 360.13; [A.] PV 336; Th. 1.39.1, 78.3; in comedy at e. g. Ar. fr. 544; Antiph. fr. 193.13; Anaxipp. fr. 4.2–3; Men. fr. 827.2) and lends the remark a rhetorical flavor, supporting the notion that the lines come from an agôn.

For the personal name in the form Περικλέης rather than the expected Περικλῆς (a matter of metrical convenience), cf. fr. 73.2; Ar. Ach. 530; Eq. 283; Nu. 859 with Dover 1968 on 70; Pax 606; Alex. fr. 25.12 with Arnott 1996. 830.

For κινέω (literally "move") in the more abstract sense "advance (an agenda), get (something) done" or the like, cf. fr. 327.4 with n.

fr. 327 K.–A. (20 Dem. = adesp. com. fr. 37 K.)

γλῶττάν τε σοι δίδωσιν ἐν δήμῳ φορεῖν καλῶν λόγων ἀείνων, ᾗ πάντα κινήσεις λέγων

1 γλῶτταν Synag. : γλῶσσαν Phot. 2 ⟨θησαυρὸν⟩ post δίδωσιν add. Naber 4 κινήσεις Phot. Synag. : νικήσεις Meineke

he/she/it offers you a tongue to wield in public ever-flowing with persuasive words, with which you will accomplish everything when you speak

Phot. α 414 = Synag. B α 404 (= Phryn. PS fr. *91) ἀείνως γλῶττα καὶ ἀείνως φωνή καὶ ὀργή καὶ ἐπιθυμία καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ὁμοίων, χρῶ. Κρατῖνος (om. Synag.)· ——. ἐρεῖς δὲ καὶ τὸ ἀείνως ποταμὸς καὶ ἀείνως κρήνη διὰ τὸ ἐγκεῖσθαι τῇ λέξει τὸ νάειν, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ῥεῖν. ἴδιον δὲ ὕδατος τὸ ῥεῖν. τὸ δὲ γλῶττα ἀείνως πάνυ καινὸν καὶ ἐναργῶς εἴρηται ἐπὶ τῆς δεινῆς εἰπεῖν an ever-flowing tongue (aeinôs glôtta) and an ever-flowing voice and anger and desire and in reference to the like; use (these). Cratinus (Synag. omits the name)· ——. You are also to use the expression an ever-flowing river and an ever-flowing spring, because the word naein, i. e. "to flow", is part of the word; and flowing is a distinctive quality of water. But the expression glôtta aeinôs ("an ever-flowing tongue") is said in a quite novel and striking way in reference to a (tongue) that is clever at speaking Meter Meineke (followed by Kassel–Austin and in the text printed here) took this to be iambic dimeter (as in frr. 328–9), with 3 catalectic.

[45] Thus not "Pericles proposed it long ago", as at Storey 2011. 407, as if this were a simple past.

⟨×–⏑–⟩ ––⏑–
⏑–⏑– ––⏑–
⏑–⏑– ⏑––
––⏑– ––⏑–

Naber, by contrast, added ⟨θησαυρὸν⟩ between δίδωσιν and ἐν δήμῳ and interpreted the words as the remains of three iambic tetrameters catalectic, like fr. 326.

⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩ | ––⏑– ⏑––
⟨––⏑⟩– ––⏑– | ⏑–⏑– ⏑––
––⏑– ––⏑– | ⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

This is a more complicated explanation of the situation and is thus not to be preferred on methodological grounds.

Discussion Meineke 1841 IV.609; Cobet 1858. 507; Naber 1879. 75; Naber 1880b. 433; Reitzenstein 1907. xvii–xviii; Pieters 1946. 126–7; Gelzer 1960. 182; Luppe 1966. 173; Bakola 2010. 205 n. 52, 293

Assignment to known plays Pieters (followed by Gelzer, Luppe, Storey and Bakola) tentatively assigned the fragment to Dionysalexandros.

Text Outside of lyric (e. g. fr. 181; Ar. Ra. 827, 898) and certain exceptional but well-defined contexts (e. g. a foreigner's speech at Ar. Th. 1192; see Willi 2003. 237), comedy uses the Synagoge's Attic γλῶττα rather than Photius' common γλῶσσα (preferred in tragedy); cf. fr. 324. For γλῶσσα similarly transmitted for γλῶττα, e. g. fr. 181; Eup. fr. 342; Ar. Eq. 637; Pl. Com. fr. 51.1.

In 2, Naber's supplement (needed to make the words scan as tetrameters) requires that ἀείνων in 3 be construed as a genitive plural (thus Cobet and LSJ s. v.) agreeing with καλῶν λόγων, all of which must then be dependent on θησαυρόν ("a tongue as a treasure-house of fine, ever-flowing words"). The alternative (adopted here) is to take ἀείνων as a contracted form of ἀείναον (fem. acc. sg. of ἀείναος, agreeing with γλῶτταν).

In 4, Meineke, comparing Ar. Nu. 432 (quoted in Interpretation), proposed νικήσεις ("you will be victorious", with πάντα as an internal accusative) for the paradosis κινήσεις ("you will sway"). For the collocation, e. g. fr. 52 νικῷ μὲν ὁ τῇδε πόλει λέγων τὸ λῷστον ("He who says what is best for this city is victorious"); Ar. Nu. 114–15 τὸν ἥττονα / νικᾶν λέγοντά φασι τἀδικώτερα ("they allege that the Worse Argument wins cases even when what he says is quite wrong"), 1444–5 τί δ' ἢν ἔχων τὸν ἥττω / λόγον σε νικήσω λέγων; ("What if I have the worse case but defeat you with my argument?"). For νικάω alone used in reference to winning court cases, successfully proposing motions in the Assembly or the like, e. g. fr. 353; Eup. fr. 129.3; Ar. Ach. 626; Eq. 93; Nu. 99, 432, 1210–11; V. 581, 594; Pl. 487. But fr. 326.2 (where see Interpretation) supports the transmitted reading.

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ´´, and traced to Phrynichus by de Borries. Related material is preserved at Phot. α 413 = Suda α 631 = Hsch. α 1291 ~ Synag. B α 408 ἀείνων· τὸ ἀένναον. Ἀριστοφάνης τρισυλλάβως Βατράχοις (146) καὶ ἄλλοι πολλοί ("aeinôn: ever-flowing. Aristophanes has it in trisyllabic form in Frogs (146), as do many others"); Moer. α 40 ἀείνων Ἀττικοί· ἀένναον Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers [use] aeinôn, whereas Greeks generally [use] aennaon").

The Synagoge omits Cratinus' name, hence Kock's treatment of the fragment as an adespoton.

Interpretation A description of a promise by a third party of the bestowal of fine rhetorical skills (γλῶτταν) in addition to some other benefaction (hence τε in 1), reliance on which will allow the potential recipient (an individual man, hence masc. sing. λέγων in 4) to argue successfully on a routine basis in the Assembly. The bestower of the benefit might well be a deity; cf. Ar. Eq. 634–8 ἄγε δὴ Σκίταλοι καὶ Φένακες, ἦν δ' ἐγώ, / Βερέσχεθοί τε καὶ Κόβαλοι καὶ Μόθων, / ἀγορά τ' ἐν ᾗ παῖς ὢν ἐπαιδεύθην ἐγώ, / νῦν μοι θράσος καὶ γλῶσσαν εὔπορον δότε / φωνήν τ' ἀναιδῆ ("Come, gods of rascals and braggarts, I said, gods of fools and rogues and upstarts, and thou too, market-place, in which I was raised as a boy—grant me now audacity, a well-armed tongue and a shameless voice!"); Nu. 429–32 (Στ.) ὦ δέσποιναι, δέομαι τοίνυν ὑμῶν τουτὶ πάνυ μικρόν, / τῶν Ἑλλήνων εἶναί με λέγειν ἑκατὸν σταδίοισιν ἄριστον. / (Χο.) ἀλλ' ἔσται σοι τοῦτο παρ' ἡμῶν· ὥστε τὸ λοιπόν γ' ἀπὸ τουδὶ / ἐν τῷ δήμῳ γνώμας οὐδεὶς νικήσει πλείονας ἢ σύ ("(Strepsiades) My ladies, I ask then of you this one itty-bitty thing—that I be the best speaker among the Greeks by a hundred stades. (Chorus) You'll accordingly have this from us, so that in the future, from this time on, no one will offer more successful motions in the Assembly than you"); E. Supp. 201–4 αἰνῶ δ' ὃς ἡμῖν βίοτον ἐκ πεφυρμένου / καὶ θηριώδους θεῶν διεσταθμήσατο / πρῶτον μὲν ἐνθεὶς σύνεσιν, εἶτα δ' ἄγγελον / γλῶσσαν λόγων δούς ("I praise whichever of the gods brought us to live by rule from chaos and brutishness, first by instilling reason, and next by granting us a tongue as a messenger of our words"). But it might be a professional teacher of rhetoric instead. Reitzenstein (comparing Ar. Eq. 214) and Bakola argued that the addressee is Pericles, who is criticized in fr. 326 as all talk and no action. Gelzer, by contrast, thought that the speaker was Athena, and the lines part of Cratinus' parody of the Judgment of Paris, while Pieters (followed by Luppe) took the speaker to be Hermes detailing one of the prizes the goddesses were prepared to offer. All we actually know is that the addressee is imagined by the speaker as an aspiring orator, like Strepsiades at Ar. Nu. 431–2 (quoted above)—who immediately rejects the gifts offered by the Clouds, however, in favor of the ability to swindle other people in court.

1 For "the tongue" and rhetoric, see fr. 324 n.

2 For ἐν δήμῳ or ἐν τῷ δήμῳ meaning "in the Assembly", see fr. 378 with n.

φορέω is common in comedy in reference to body-parts, generally with the implication that the situation is somehow unusual or noteworthy (e. g. fr. 161 (two heads); Telecl. fr. 33 (an udder); Eup. fr. 158.2 (a lung well-washed with wine) with Olson 2016 ad loc.; Ar. Lys. 800 (a hairy crotch); Pl. 1059 (a single molar in one's mouth); Pl. Com. frr. 51.1 (a "tongue" as part of one's sandals); 200.3 (legs as thin as reeds); Anaxil. fr. 11 (a pig's snout); Antiph. fr. 46.4 (Spartan-style facial hair); Ephipp. fr. 23.2 (an awkward tongue); Eub. fr. 97.7 (gray facial hairs); Alex. fr. 103.21 (a nice mouth); adesp. com. fr. 512.2 (a lecherous eye).

3 καλῶν λόγων For the phrase in the sense "persuasive arguments", e. g. [Epich.] fr. 280.4; Men. Phasm. 352, 1269; E. Hipp. 487, 984 with Barrett 1964 ad loc.; Isoc. 12.90, 243; Pl. Mx. 249e; R. 442a; D. 19.303.

ἀείνων For the form, see Text. The adjective (< ἀεί, "always" + νάω, "flow") is primarily poetic vocabulary[46] and is used not only of water (e. g. Od. 13.109; Hes. Op. 550, 595, 737; Simon. PMG 581.2; A. Supp. 553 (lyric); Bacch. fr. 20E.16; E. fr. 856.1; cf. Ar. Ra. 146, of a river of shit) but by extension of anything fluid and changeable (e. g. Ar. Nu. 275 (the clouds; lyric); Simon. PMG 531.9 (kleos); Pi. P. 1.6 (fire); fr. 119 (wealth); E. Or. 1299 (power)).

4 κινήσεις See fr. 326 n.

[46] In 5th-century prose only at Hdt. 1.93.5, 145.

fr. 328 K.–A. (296 K.)

ὃς τὴν πίτυν ἔκαμπτεν ἑστὼς χαμᾶθεν ἄκρας
τῆς κόμης καθέλκων

1 OC THN ΠΙΤΥΝ Priscian.[VMO] : OC TEN ΠΤΤΥΝ Priscian.[L] : OC TEN ΤΙΙ[X] Priscian.[r] : ὅστ' ἐν πυτίνῃ Scaliger : ὅστις ἐν Πυτίνῃ Meineke τὰς πίτυς Cobet 2 ⟨ῥᾳδίως⟩ post ἑστὼς add. Cobet χαμόθεν Scaliger 2–3 κλίνή τ' (κἀμήτ' V.C. nomen proprium) ἐνεστὼς χαμόθεν ἄκρας τῆς κόμης καθεῖλκεν Scaliger 3 τῆς del. Cobet

(he) who used to bend the pine, as he stood on the ground, drawing it down from its uppermost foliage

Priscian. Instit. Gramm. 18.306 (Grammatici Latini III pp. 376.20–377.6)
χαμᾶθεν, quod est a loco, Cratinos (thus Priscian.[V] : Cratinus Priscian.[rMol] : GR̃ Priscian.[DN]) pro in loco posuit: —— . melius tamen distinguendum ἑστώς, et iam bene a loco accipitur χαμᾶθεν, ab humo. nos genetiuo quidem in loco, ablatiuo uero de loco et accusatiuo ad locum utimur[47]

Cratinus used chamathen, properly a loco ("from which place"), for in loco ("in which place"): ——. It is nonetheless preferable that ἑστώς ("standing") be set off (sc. with a comma), and chamathen is now rightly taken to refer to the place from which, i. e. from the ground. We (Latin-speakers), however, use the genitive for the place at which, the ablative in fact for the place from which, and the accusative for the place to which Meter Nauck (comparing S. El. 148; E. El. 1214; HF 5; fr. 530.6, and followed hesitantly by Kassel–Austin) took this to be lyric (ia ba, ia ba, cr ba), on the assumption that ἄκρας scans —— (i. e. without Attic correption; cf. frr. 75.4; 175.4; 360.1).

——⏑— ⏑——
——⏑— ⏑——
—⏑— ⏑——

Alternatively, Bakola (comparing E. Andr. 139; Supp. 73–5 = 81–3, 779 = 787; Ar. Nu. 1207–8; cf. West 1982. 99; Parker 1997. 209) analyzed the fragment [47] Krehl ap. Meineke, unhappy with the apparent nonsense melius tamen … ab humo, emended to melius tamen distinguendum χᾶμαι humi, χαμόθεν ab humo, χαμᾶζε in humum ("it is better nevertheless to distinguish between chamai ('on the ground') and humi ('on the ground'), chamothen ('from the ground') and ab humo ('from the ground'), and chamaze ('to the ground') and in humum ('to the ground')").

as an iambic dimeter followed by two ithyphallics, on the assumption that 1–2 divides ὃς τὴν πίτυν ἔκαμπτεν ἐσ– / τὼς χαμᾶθεν ἄκρας and that ἄκρας scans ——(i. e. without Attic correption).

——⏑– ⏑–⏑–
–⏑–⏑––
–⏑–⏑––

Cobet, by contrast, took the lines to be iambic tetrameter, like frr. 4; 27; 45; 326, although this requires positing lacunae in the second line (hence his ῥᾳδίως and Edmonds' τοῖν χεροῖν) and deleting τῆς, and is therefore best regarded as a last-ditch solution.

⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩ | ––⏑– ⏑––
––⏑– –⟨–⏑–⟩ | ––⏑– ⏑––

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.217; Cobet 1858. 150; Leo 1878. 411; Kock 1880 I.98–9; Nauck 1894. 65–6; Edmonds 1957. 125 n. c; Luppe 1969. 206; Bakola 2010. 154–5

Assignment to known plays Meineke, accepting Scaliger's emendation in 1, attributed the fragment to Pytinê. Leo (comparing fr. 53, and followed by Storey and Bakola), by contrast, gave it to Drapetideis on the assumption that the reference is to Sinis, another bandit Theseus killed.

Text In 1, the manuscripts of Priscian contain numerous majuscule errors due to the scribes' limited familiarity with Greek.

Cobet suggested τάς for the paradosis THN/TEN in 1, in the belief that Sinis always used two trees to carry out his punishment; but see Interpretation.

In 2, χαμᾶθεν is the correct 5th-century form (see Interpretation), making Scaliger's χαμόθεν unnecessary.

The various additions and emendations of Scaliger and Cobet in 2–3 are intended to convert the fragment into iambic trimeter; see Meter.

Citation context An isolated note from a discussion of Latin and Greek nouns of place used without prepositions, with the fragment of Cratinus apparently drawn from some now-lost Atticist lexicon. See in general Sonnino 2014 with bibliography.

Interpretation The imperfect in 1 (describing habitual action) suggests that the reference is to Sinis, also known as πιτυοκάμπτης ("pine-bender"; adesp. tr. fr. 197d; Str. 9.391; Plu. Thes. 8.3; [Apollod.] Bib. 3.218; Luc. VH 2.35; JTr. 21; Bis. Acc. 8; Σ^{rec} Ar. Ra. 966b; Σ^{NAgB} E. Hipp. 977), a bandit who accosted and murdered travelers at the Corinthian Isthmus. He himself was eventually killed by Theseus in the same manner in which he did away with his victims (e. g. Bacch. 18.19–21; E. Hipp. 977–8; Plu. Thes. 8.3; [Apollod.] Bib. 3.218; Ov.

Met. 7.440–2). Ancient sources disagree about how Sinis killed those who fell into his hands, with some claiming that he bent two pine-trees to the ground, tied his victims' limbs to both, and let them go, ripping the unfortunate person in two (D.S. 4.59.3; Paus. 2.1.4), while others (Hyg. fab. 38; Σ Luc. JTr. 21) claim that Sinis and the victim together bent a pine-tree to the earth, and that as the other man was struggling to keep the tree down, Sinis released his hold on it, catapulting the victim to his death. Plutarch (Thes. 6–12) claims that Theseus killed Sinis on his journey from Troezen to Athens. According to the Marmor Parium (FGrH 239 A 20), on the other hand, the encounter occurred when Theseus returned to the Isthmus after becoming king of Athens, and afterward he celebrated the Isthmian games. If the reference is to Sinis, this is one of the earliest preserved mentions of him in literary sources, along with Bacch. 18.20. The vase-painting evidence, however, begins already a little before 500 BCE. See Herter 1973. 1069–71; Neils 1987. 131–51 (a general discussion of the evolution of visual depictions of Theseus' adventures in the late 6th and 5th centuries BCE); LIMC VII.1.929–30 Theseus #62–81 (for Sinis in particular); Gantz 1996. 249–51.

The fragment has plausibly been connected with fr. 53, where the speaker mentions killing the bandit Cercyon and must thus be Theseus (e. g. Plu. Thes. 11.1). Bakola suggests that both fragments are from an epirrhematic passage in which the chorus responded in lyric meter to Theseus, who spoke in iambic trimeter.

1 πίτυς is abundantly attested in scientific and philosophical prose from the 4th century BCE on, but is otherwise confined to elevated poetry (Il. 13.390 = 16.483; Od. 9.186; A. fr. 251; in the Hellenistic period Theoc. 1.1; 3.38; 5.49; Moero fr. 3.4, p. 22 Powell; Call. Aet. fr. 59.8; Dian. 201; Euph. fr. 84.1, p. 45 Powell; Nic. Th. 842; Al. 301; Mosch. fr. 1.8 (all of which guarantee that the final syllable naturally scans short). The collocation πίτυν ἔκαμπτεν, first attested here (also at D.S. 4.59.3 πίτυς κάμπτων ("bending pines"), might be either a form of the syntagm that underlies the compound πιτυοκάμπτης or alternatively a poetic "decomposition" of it and thus a riddling, periphrastic way of referring to Sinis.

ἔκαμπτεν For the verb used of bending wood and trees, e. g. Il. 4.486 (a falloe); E. Ba. 1064–9 with Dodds 1960 ad loc.; Theoc. 24.120 (the nave of a wheel); 25.250–1 (a wild fig tree); ep. 4.1–2 (a fig tree); Men. fr. 19.1–2 ὡς δὲ τὴν ἄκραν / κάμπτοντας ἡμᾶς εἶδον ("when they saw us bending the top").

2 Moer. χ 22 calls χαμᾶθεν—attested only in 5th-century BCE comedy (Eup. fr. *157b.2; Ar. V. 249; fr. 691.2) and Herodotus (2.125.2; 4.172.4) before the Roman period, when it is picked up by Second Sophistic authors (D.Chr. 42.5; Luc. Ind. 9; Philops. 7)—a distinctly Attic form for common χαμόθεν (e. g.

X. HG 7.2.7; Arist. Rh. 1395ᵃ2). For the accent, see Lejeune 1940. For the suffix (Indo-European and well attested already in Homer, even if this particular adverb is not), see Schwyzer 1953 I.627–8, and cf. fr. 32.1 ὄπισθεν.

2–3 ἄκρας / τῆς κόμης For the use of the genitive, see Poultney 1936. 86. κόμη (properly "hair", as in fr. 10) is attested in the sense "foliage" at Od. 23.195, and the "etc." in LSJ s. v. II implicitly identifies this as a commonplace image; cf. hDem. 454 κομήσειν with Richardson 1974 ad loc.; E. Hipp. 210 κομήτης (of a meadow); OLD s. v. coma 3. There appear in fact to be only a limited number of additional examples in the archaic or classical periods, including (in compounds) Ar. Av. 215, 742 (both φυλλόκομος in lyric); fr. 718 ὄρεα βαθύκομα; Il. 14.398; 23.118; Od. 9.186; 12.357; 14.328 = 19.297; Hes. Op. 509 (all ὑψίκομος); Il. 17.677 θάμνῳ ὑπ' ἀμφικόμῳ; E. IT 1099; Ion 920 (both ἁβροκόμης); E. Ph. 1516 ἀκρόκομος; Thphr. HP 3.8.4 περίκομος, and cf. φόβη at e. g. fr. 105.6 (lyric; corrupt); S. Ant. 419; χαίτη at Archestr. fr. 37.2 (seemingly the earliest attestation of the word in this sense, although omitted at LSJ s. v. A.5); Nic. Al. 410 λάχνη; Poll. 1.229 ἄλση εὔκομα, … ἀμφίκομα, … αὐλῶνας ἐλαιοκόμους. For words meaning "hair" or the like used cross-linguistically in the sense "foliage" or to refer to a part of a plant, cf. uelḱ–*, "hair" > Hitt. uelku–, "grass"; Skt. válśa–, "sprout; twig"; OCS vlasъ, "hair"; Rus. volos, "hair"; Plin. Nat. 21.33 (capillus); 26.36; 27.25 (both cirrus); Swinburne Erectheus 1148 "fields aflower with winds and suns, woods with shadowing hair".

fr. 329 K.–A. (297 K.)

ἀλλ' εἴσιθ' εἴσω καὶ πιοῦσα χυλὸν ἀναπαύου κακῶν

But come in inside and drink some chylos and get some rest from your cares

Poll. 6.61
Κρατῖνος δὲ καὶ χυλὸν πιεῖν εἴρηκεν· ——

But Cratinus also says "to drink chylos": ——

Meter Probably iambic dimeter.
– – ⏑ – – – ⏑ –
⏑ – ⏑ ⏑ – – ⏑ –

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.211; Kock 1880 I.99

Citation context From a brief discussion of legumes and porridge-like substances made from them or various grains, within a series of catalogues of foodstuffs.

Interpretation A sympathetic invitation extended to an individual woman (note fem. sing. πιοῦσα) who finds herself in a difficult situation. εἴσω likely means "into the stage-house", as regularly in comedy (e. g. Ar. Eq. 1249; Nu. 508; Pl. 768, and see below). Present and aorist participles and infinitives of πίνω seem to be used interchangeably in comedy, depending on the metrical circumstances, since the iota is long in the present but short in the aorist, so that one form of the verb can often stand at a point in the line where the other cannot. It is accordingly unclear whether the addressee is first to drink the chylos and then find rest from cares (as use of the aorist participle would normally signal) or if drinking the chylos will itself serve a therapeutic purpose.

1 For ἀλλ' εἴσιθ' εἴσω, cf. Ar. Pl. 1088 (Chremylus to the young man); Men. Sam. 658; S. El. 802 (Clytemnestra to the tutor); E. Heracl. 698 (Iolaos to a servant); Andr. 876 (the nurse to Orestes); and for ἀλλ' εἴσιθ' alone in a similar context of hospitality, Ar. Ra. 503, 507, 512, 517.

2 χυλός is "juice" or "extract", i. e. the thick liquid that remains when a vegetable substance is soaked, pressed, boiled or the like; cf. Ar. Ra. 943 χυλὸν διδοὺς στωμυλμάτων, ἀπὸ βιβλίων ἀπηθῶν ("offering [Tragedy] chatter-juice, pressing it from books"); Ephipp. fr. 13.6 (in a catalogue of after-dinner dainties); Pl. Criti. 115a χυλῶν στακτῶν ("chyloi that trickle out"). The verb for consuming it is accordingly πίνω, whereas for thicker but still pourable substances λείχω (e. g. Ar. V. 737–8, of eating porridge, with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.) or ῥοφέω (e. g. Ar. V. 811–12, of eating lentil soup, with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Antiph. fr. 185.5, of eating lentil soup; Nicom. Com. fr. 3.3, of eating an egg) is used. Hippocrates speaks repeatedly of barley-chylos, but also of e. g. lentil- and chickpea-chylos (Aff. 27 = 6.238.15–16 Littré), and Pollux' discussion is too dense and chaotic to show precisely what substance he thought was in question here.

fr. 330 K.–A.

ἀπόδυθι τὴν στολήν

Take off (sing.) your outfit!

Phot. α 2489 = Synag. B α 1835
ἀπόδυσαι· μᾶλλον δὲ ἀπόδυθι οἱ Ἀττικοὶ λέγουσιν. καὶ ἀποδύντες καὶ † ἀπόδυσις † καὶ † ἀποδεδυμένοι † καὶ ἀποδεδυκότα καὶ ἀποδύειν, οὐχ ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ ἀποδεδυμένον καὶ ἀποδύεσθαι. παρατηρητέον δὲ ὡς οὕτω τὰ ῥήματα λέγοντες οὐκ ἐπισυνάπτουσι τὰ ἱμάτια ἢ τῶν ἱματίων ἀρκούμενοι μόνῃ τῇ ῥηματικῇ φωνῇ δηλῶσαι τὸ νόημα. πλὴν Κρατῖνος φησί· ——. διόπερ ⟨χρὴ⟩ ἐννοεῖν τὴν διαφοράν[48]

apodysai ("take off!"): Athenians say apodythi instead. Also apodyntes ("taking off") and † apodysis † and † apodedymenoi † and apodedykota ("having taken off"; masc. acc. sing.) and apodyein ("to take off"), not, as most people (say), apodedymenon ("having taken off oneself") and apodyesthai ("to take off oneself"). It should be noted that when using the words thus, they do not add mention of the himatia ("cloaks"), but instead avoid (reference to) the himatia and express the thought with the verbal form alone. Except that Cratinus says: ——, on which account ⟨one must⟩ note the distinction

Meter Probably iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⟩⏑⏑ ⏑|–⏑– ⟨×–⏑–⟩

Citation context A lexicographic note on the use of the verb ἀποδύω drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ′′′ and traced by Theodoridis to the Atticist lexicographer Phrynichus. Related material, all heavily condensed and without mention of Cratinus, is preserved at Moer. α 47 ἀπόδυθι Ἀττικοί· ἀπόδυσαι Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (say) apodythi; Greeks generally (say) apodysai"); Poll. 7.43–4 τὸ δὲ … ἀποδῦναι ἐρεῖς, καὶ … ὁ ἀποδὺς καὶ ὁ ἀποδεδυκώς, … καὶ ἀποδῦσαι ("you are to say apodynai, and … in regard to a man apodys and apodedykôs … and apodusai"); Hsch. α 6322 ἀπόδυθι· ἀπόδυσαι ("apodythi: apodysai").

Interpretation An order addressed to an individual person (gender unknown). Similar demands elsewhere in comedy include Socrates telling Strepsiades to strip before he enters the Phrontisterion (Ar. Nu. 497), Bdelycleon telling Philocleon to remove his old tribôn in order to put on something more luxurious (Ar. V. 1131), Peisetaerus telling his slave to give up his robe to the anonymous freezing poet (Ar. Av. 933–4), and Dionysus ordering Xanthias to give up the Heracles-style lion-skin that Dionysus himself had been wearing at the beginning of the play (Ar. Ra. 528).

According to Moer. α 47 (quoted in Citation context), ἀπόδυθι—attested only in 5th-century comedy (Ar. Av. 934, 947; Th. 214, 731) until the Roman period, when it is picked up by Lucian (Cat. 24, 28; Vit.Auct. 6; DMort. 20 (twice))—is a distinctly Attic form for the more common ἀπόδυσαι. For the ending (Indo-European, and well attested already in Homer), cf. frr. 145 πῖθι; 237.3 ἴσθι, and see Schwyzer 1953 I.800.[49] στολή (< στέλλω, "make ready, furnish") refers not just to inner and outer garments ("clothing") but to a person's entire costume, including anything he or she carries with him or wears on his or her head. Cf. fr. 40 "(A.) What sort of stolê did he have? Tell me this! (B.) A thyrsus, a saffron-colored inner garment, a patterned outer garment, a drinking cup"; Ar. Th. 136–40 (Agathon's stolê includes his musical instrument, head-gear and mirror); Arar. fr. 4.2 "wearing (masc.) saffron-colored inner garments and women's stolê"; E. Ba. 830–6 (Pentheus' stolê includes how he will wear his hair and the thyrsus he will carry). The word is common in 5th-century tragedy, but is rare and mostly restricted to high-style contexts in comedy (also Ar. Th. 92 (Euripides is speaking), 136 (paratragedy), 851 (a paratragic atmosphere); Ra. 590 (lyric); Ec. 846 (a herald's speech); Antiph. fr. 38.1 τοὺς δ' ἐνδυτοῖς στολαῖσι τετραγῳδημένους, "men lent tragic style via donned stolai" vel sim.). Although it is also found in prose (e. g. Hdt. 4.78.4; X. HG 4.1.30; An. 1.2.27), it is tempting to think that it had an elevated sound, like English "raiment" or "garb".

[48] Synag. B adds additional cognate material (omitted by Photius), including adesp. com. fr. 446, shortly after this.

fr. 331 K.–A. (363 K.)

θράττει μ' ὄντως τοὐνύπνιον sic van der Valk : τὸ ἐνύπνιον Σ^{P11}, unde θράττει με τοὐνύπνιον Meineke : θράττει μὲν τὸ ἐνύπνιον Σ^{Ag} : θράττει με Σ^{T} : † δραπετεύοντος τοῦ ἐνυπνίου † Σ^{BL} : θράττει μ' εὕδοντ' ἐνύπνιον Marzullo : θράττει μ' ἐνύπνιον Luppe : εὕδοντα θράττει τοὐνύπνιον Meineke

The dream is in fact disturbing me

[49] Why Phrynichus objects to the forms ἀποδεδυμένον (no middle-passive participles of the verb are attested elsewhere, but Lys. 10.10 uses the perfect middle-passive infinitive) and ἀποδύεσθαι (attested at X. Smp. 2.18; Pl. Tht. 169a, b; R. 452d), as well as to the use of a direct object with the verb (cf. Ar. Th. 214; Lys. 10.10; later at Ael. VH 12.22; Luc. Cat. 28; DMort 20.3, 5) is unclear. Perhaps he had only a restricted set of quotations before him and on that basis generalized a rule, dealing with the usage in the Cratinus fragment—unexceptional, although by comparison with the other material before him seemingly unparalleled—by identifying it as eccentric.

Σ^{Th} Il. 2.56
θεῖός μοι ἐνύπνιον (ἦλθεν ὄνειρος)· ὀνοματικὸν ἐπίρρημα, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐνυπνίως. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὄνομα. Κρατῖνος· ——

a divine (dream came to me) in my sleep (enypnion): an adverb formed from a noun, in place of enypniôs. But there is also a noun. Cratinus: ——

Meter If the text printed here is correct, the words scan ————⏑⏑× and are probably anapaestic. But see Text.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.227; Marzullo 1959. 153; Erbse 1960. 200–1; van der Valk 1963. 524; Luppe 1967. 402–3

Assignment to known plays In place of Κρατῖνος κτλ in Σ^{Th} Il. 2.56 (quoted above), Σ^{BL} reads the patently corrupt † δεῖ κρατεῖν ὡς δραπετεύοντος τοῦ ἐνυπνίου †. Meineke suggested that this might be corrected to read either Κρατῖνος Δραπέτισιν ("Cratinus in Drapetides") or Κρατῖνος Θρᾴτταις ("Cratinus in Thraittai"), followed by the fragment. But see Text.

Text The text of the fragment is extremely unstable. Σ^{P11} and Σ^{Ag} (the two witnesses for the h-scholia) treat ἐνύπνιον as a noun; Σ^{T} omits the word along with the definite article that precedes it. με τὸ ἐνύπνιον in Σ^{P11} is easily interpreted as scriptio plena for με τοὐνύπνιον (Meineke; printed by Kassel–Austin), producing something that can be understood as e. g. the central part of an iambic trimeter; see Meter. μὲν τὸ ἐνύπνιον—once again scriptio plena—in Σ^{Ag} yields the more problematic ————⏑⏑⏑ and leaves θράττει without an object, and is thus seemingly less appealing than the alternative, although see below. Luppe suggested θράττει μ' ἐνύπνιον (e. g. ——⏑⏑ ⏑|⟨—⏑— ×—⏑—⟩), "a dream is disturbing me".

Luppe, followed by Kassel–Austin, argued that Σ^{BL} (quoted in Assignment to known plays) was more likely the remains of a citation of another poet omitted by Σ^{Th} in the same way that Σ^{BL} omitted Cratin. fr. 331. But ΚΡΑΤΕΙΝΩΣΔΡΑΠΕΤ … ΤΟΥΕΝΥΠΝΙΟΝ in Σ^{BL} looks a great deal like ΚΡΑΤΙΝΟΣΘΡΑΤΤΕΙ … ΤΟΕΝΥΠΝΙΟΝ in Σ^{h}, supporting the notion that these are in fact two different versions of the same note, one somewhat more corrupt than the other. In the central portion (omitted immediately above) of what must on this theory be the fragment of Cratinus, Σ^{h} has ΜΕ or ΜΕΝ while Σ^{BL} offers ΕΥΟΝΤΟΣ, which must represent confusion of some other sort. van der Valk combined the two readings to produce θράττει μ' ὄντως τοὐνύπνιον (printed here).

Citation context Closely related material is preserved at Et.Gud. ε 481 ἐνύπνιον· ἐπίρρημα· ἀπὸ γὰρ ὀνόματος μετήχθη εἰς ἐπίρρημα, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐνυπνί-ως ἢ ἐν ὕπνῳ ("enypnion: an adverb. Because it was changed from a noun into an adverb, in place of enypniôs ('in dreams') or en hypnôi ('in sleep')") ~ EM p. 345.50 ἐνύπνιον· κατὰ τοὺς ὕπνους· ὀνοματικὸν ἐπίρρημα, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐνυπνίως ἢ ἐν ὕπνῳ. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὄνομα· ἀπὸ δὲ ὀνόματος μετήχθη εἰς ἐπίρρημα ("enypnion: during one's sleep. An adverb formed from a noun, in place of enypniôs ('in dreams') or en hypnôi ('in sleep'). There is also a noun, and it was changed from a noun into an adverb"). Note also Phot. ε 1060 ἐνύπνιον· καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ ὄνειρον καὶ τὸ ἐν τοῖς ὕπνοις ὡς παρ' Ὁμήρῳ. χρῆται δ' οὕτως καὶ Μένανδρος (Pk. 359) ("enypnion: both the dream itself and 'in dreams', as in Homer; Menander as well uses it this way (Pk. 359)"); Suda κ 1086 κατ' ὄναρ· οὐ χρὴ λέγειν· βάρβαρον γὰρ παντελῶς· ἀλλὰ ὄναρ καὶ κατὰ τοὺς ὕπνους καὶ ἐνύπνιον ("kat' onar: One ought not to say this, since it is utterly barbaric; rather onar ('in one's dreams') and kata tous hypnous ('during one's sleep') and enypnion"; = Orus fr. B 84).

According to the Roman-era commentator Aristonicus on Il. 2.56, the debate over the adverbial use of ἐνύπνιον dates back at least to Zenodotus, the first Librarian in Alexandria (early 3rd century BCE), who emended the text at Il. 2.56 to convert the word into a noun: θεῖός μοι ἐνύπνιον ἦλθεν ὄνειρος: ὅτι Ζηνόδοτος γράφει "θεῖόν μοι ἐνύπνιον"· οὐ λέγει δὲ ὡς ἡμεῖς ἀλλ' ἀντὶ τοῦ κατὰ τοὺς ὕπνους, ἐνυπνίως ("a divine dream came to me in my sleep: Zenodotus writes theion moi enypnion ('a divine enypnion [came] to me [as a dream]').[50] He does not use the word as we do, but in place of kata tous hypnous ('during one's sleep'), enypniôs").

Interpretation Dreams depicting either past events unknown to the dreamer or things to come are a common feature of both tragedy (e. g. A. Pers. 176–214; Ag. 12–15; Ch. 523–33; S. El. 417–25; E. Hec. 703–7; Ph. 1545) and comedy (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 43; Ar. Eq. 1090–1; V. 13–53; Ra. 1332–40; Alex. fr. 274; Plaut. Cur. 253–73; Rud. 593–614). For dreams and how they were interpreted, see in general Kessels 1978; Näf 2004; Harris 2009; Biles–Olson 2015 on Ar. V. 15–53.

θράττω (cognate with τραχύς, "rough") is attested before the Imperial period only in Pindar (O. 6.97; I. 7.39), in 5th-/4th-century Athenian drama (Pherecr. fr. 43.3 θράττει μ', seemingly another reaction to an odd and disturbing dream; Mnesim. fr. 4.57; S. frr. 177.1; 1055; [A.] PV 628; [E.] Rh. 863; Crit. TrGF 43 F 14), in philosophical prose (Pl. Phd. 86e; Tht. 187d; Prm. 130d; Phdr. 242c; Arist. Rh. 1412ᵃ35), and once in Hippocrates (Mul. 70 = 8.146.23 Littré).

---

[50] Thus nominally LSJ s. v. 1 "thing seen in sleep, in appos(ition) to ὄνειρος", which nonetheless retains θεῖος in its citation of the text.

Moeris θ 14 identifies it as an Attic alternative for the common ταράσσω (also a cognate).[51] ὄντως ("actually, in fact"; not merely a mild adverbial intensifier like English "really") is absent from lyric poetry, Aeschylus and Thucydides; found once in Sophocles (fr. 681.2) and a handful of times in Euripides (HF 610; Ion 223; IA 1622; fr. 248.2 (from Archelaos, 408/7 BCE)); and common in comedy (also e. g. Ar. Ach. 646; Anaxil. fr. 29.2; Antiph. fr. 210.7) and prose (e. g. X. HG 4.8.4; Pl. Phlb. 37b; D. 21.90), all of which combines to mark it as colloquial.

ἐνύπνιον (attested elsewhere in comedy at e. g. Ar. V. 25, 38; Alex. fr. 274.1; Men. Dysc. 407, 409; Pk. 359) is a prosaic (e. g. Hdt. 1.107.1; Pl. Cri. 44a–b; Hp. Morb.Sacr. 15 = 6.390.4–5 Littré; Aeschin. 3.219; Thphr. Char. 16) equivalent of the more elevated ὄνειρος (used in tragedy, and thus in the mock-Euripidean lament at Ar. Ra. 1332, 1340). The word is not unambiguously attested as an adverb outside of Il. 2.56 = Od. 14.495, although see Gomme–Sandbach 1973 on Men. Dysc. 407 and Pk. 359; Ar. V. 1218 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.

fr. 332 K.–A. (345 K.)

ῥοθίαζε κἀνάπιπτε

ῥοθίαζε κἀνάπιπτε Ath.[E] : ῥιθίαζε κἀνάπιπτε Ath.[C] : ῥοθιάζει καὶ ἀναπίπτει Eust.

Make a splash and lie back!

Ath. 1.23b
ὅτι τὸ ἀναπίπτειν κυρίως ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἐστιν, οἷον ἀθυμεῖν, ὀλιγοδρανεῖν. Θουκυδίδης πρώτῃ (1.70.5)· νικώμενοι ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον ἀναπίπτουσι. Κρατῖνος δ' ἐπὶ ἐρετῶν χρᾶται τῇ λέξει· ——. καὶ Ξενοφῶν ἐν Οἰκονομικῷ (8.8)· διὰ τί ἄλυποι ἀλλήλοις εἰσὶν οἱ ἐρέται; ἢ ὅτι ἐν τάξει μὲν κάθηνται, ἐν τάξει δὲ προνεύουσιν, ἐν τάξει δὲ ἀναπίπτουσιν

The verb anapiptô ("fall back") is properly used of a person's spirit, in the sense "be discouraged, be fainthearted." Thucydides in Book I (1.70.5): they are minimally discouraged (anapiptousi) when defeated. But Cratinus uses the word to refer to rowers: ——. Also Xenophon in the Oeconomicus (8.8): Why do the rowers not hamper one another? Isn't it because they are seated in order, bend forward in order, and lie back (anapiptousin) in order?

---

[51] Note also Phryn. PS p. 75.6–7 θράττει· οἷον ταράττει, κατὰ συγκοπὴν καὶ τροπὴν γεγενημένον ("thrattei: i. e. tarattei, formed via syncopation and phonetic change").

Eust. p. 1641.8 = i.358.31–2
Κρατῖνος εἰπών· ῥοθιάζει καὶ ἀναπίπτει

Cratinus, when he says: he/she/it makes a splash and lies back

Suda α 2019
ἀναπίπτειν τὸ ἀθυμεῖν λέγεται παρὰ τοῖς παλαιοῖς. ἀναπίπτειν ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἐστιν, οἷον ἀθυμεῖν, ὀλιγωρεῖν. Κρατῖνος δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἐρετῶν κέχρηται τῇ λέξει ἐρεσσόντων καὶ ἀνακλινομένων. καὶ ἀναπεσεῖν, ἀνακλιθῆναι anapiptein ("to fall back") is used in the sense "to be discouraged" by ancient authors. anapiptein refers to the spirit, in the sense "to be discouraged, be fainthearted." But Cratinus uses the word in reference to rowers as they pull the oars and fall back. Also anapesein ("to fall back"), anaklithênai ("to recline")

Meter Probably iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑–⟩ ⏑⏑–⏑|– ⏑–⏑⟨–⟩

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.176–7; Kock 1880 I.113; Körte ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Assigned to Odysseis by Körte.

Text The manuscripts of the Epitome of Athenaeus diverge slightly, C having misspelled the first verb. The text as transmitted by Eustathius—drawing on his own copy of the Epitome or his memory of it, but in any case not to be thought of as an independent witness to the text—is written scriptio plena and with the verbs in the more common indicative rather than imperative. The Suda often draws on Athenaeus, as probably in this case (not obviously from the complete version of the text rather than the Epitome).

Citation context From a discussion of verbs for drinking, reclining at symposia and eating; related material is preserved at 10.422e–3a. In the completely preserved Books of Athenaeus, such discussions are routinely sparked by an objection put forward by Ulpian against a lexical item used by one of the other banqueters, requiring a demonstration that the word is in fact acceptable "ancient usage", frequently accompanied by a treatment of other, more or less closely related matters. Cf. Phot. α 1602 = Suda α 2018 ἀναπίπτειν· οὐ τὸ κατακλίνεσθαι ἀλλὰ τὸ μεταμέλεσθαι καὶ μετατίθεσθαι καὶ ἀποκνεῖν. Θουκυδίδης πρώτῃ (1.70.5)· καὶ νικώμενοι ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον ἀναπίπτουσιν ("anapiptein: not kataklinesthai ('to recline') but metamelesthai ('to change one's conduct') and metatithesthai ('to change') and apoknein ('to hesitate'). Thucydides in Book 1 (1.70.5): and they are minimally discouraged (anapiptousin) when defeated"), which Erbse traces to Ael. Dion. α 123. Similar material is preserved at – Phryn. Ecl. 186 ἀναπεσεῖν· οὐ καλῶς ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀνακλιθῆναι τάττεται· ἐὰν δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ τὴν ψυχὴν ἀδημονῆσαι, καλῶς· ἀνέπεσεν ἄνθρωπος ἤγουν τὴν ψυχὴν ἠθύμησεν ("anapesein ('to fall back'): Misused in reference to lying back. But if (it is used) in reference to feeling spiritually anguished, this is fine. anepesen anthrôpos ('a person fell back'), i. e. he was spiritually dejected") – Phot. α 1600 ἀναπίπτειν· τὸ ἀθυμεῖν λέγεται παρὰ τοῖς παλαιοῖς ("anapiptein: used to mean 'to be discouraged' in ancient authors"; traced to Paus.Gr. α 114 by Erbse, to Orus fr. B 17 by Alpers).

That ἀναπίπτω can properly be used, however, of reclining at table is eventually demonstrated at 1.23e via quotation of E. Cyc. 410 and Alex. fr. 295, and this appears to have been the opinion of the Antiatticist as well (α 8 ἀνέπεσεν· ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀνεκλίθη, "he/she/it fell back: in place of he/she/it reclined").

Interpretation A command addressed to a single person and taken by Athenaeus as a reference to someone actually preparing to row a boat, like Dionysus at Ar. Ra. 197, 201–3. Meineke (comparing Ar. Eq. 761–2) suggested that the language might be figurative instead and be intended to encourage someone "ut fortiter adversarium adoriatur ('to attack the enemy bravely')".

ῥοθιάζω (cognate with ῥοθέω, "make noise") is used of any (generally chaotic) movement accompanied by (generally incoherent) noise, here apparently the splash and effort as the oars are dropped at the end of the backstroke and driven through the water; cf. Hermipp. fr. 54.1–2 ὥρα τοίνυν μετ' ἐμοῦ χωρεῖν ⟨τὸν⟩ κωπητῆρα λαβόντα / καὶ προσκεφάλαιον, ἵν' ἐς τὴν ναῦν ἐμπηδήσας ῥοθιάζῃς ("It's time, in fact, to get your oar-thong and a cushion[52] and to come with me, so that you can jump into the ship and rhothiazô"); Ar. fr. 85 ("Come to land as you rhothiazô!", i. e. "Drive the ship into the harbor with your rowing!"); Hsch. ρ 409 ῥοθιάζειν· ἐλαύνειν, ἀπὸ τοῦ ψόφου τῆς εἰρεσίας. οἱ δὲ τὴν ἀνακοπὴν τοῦ ὕδατος ῥόθον φασίν ("rhothiazein: to row, from the sound of the rowing. But others say that rhothos is the response of the water"); Phot. ρ 143 ≈ Suda ρ 216 ῥοθιάζειν τὸ ἐρέσσειν εὐτόνως ("rhothiazein is to row vigorously"; citing Ar. frr. 85–6). The verb is attested only in comedy (also Hermipp. fr. 54.2; Ar. Ach. 807) and must be colloquial.

For ἀναπίπτω, see Citation context. For the prefix in the sense "back, backward", cf. ἀνακείμαι and ἀνακλίνω, as well as e. g. ἀναρροφέω (frr. 158–*9)[53] and ἀνακάμπτω (Antiph. fr. 13), and see LSJ s. v. ἀνά F.4.

---

[52] i. e. a ὑπηρέσιον to place beneath one's buttocks. For προσκεφάλαιον in this sense, see fr. 295.

[53] Colloquial English would say "gulp down"; but cf. "toss back [a beer vel sim.]".

fr. 333 K.–A. (354 K.)

ὕλιζε τὰς ῥῖνας

sic Poll.[A] : ἀπεμυτέλιζε τ. ῥ. Poll.[S] in ras. : ἀπεμυττέλιζεν Poll.[F]

He/she was wiping his/her nostrils

Poll. 2.78
τὸ δ' ἀπεμύττετο· ——, ἔφη Κρατῖνος
Cratinus said —— in the sense apemytteto ("he/she was wiping his/her nose")

Meter Probably iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑–⟩ ––⏑|– ––⟨⏑–⟩

Discussion Meineke 1839 V.23; Kock 1880 I.115

Text Poll.[FS] (apparently dealing unsuccessfully with a corrupt or confusingly abbreviated exemplar) have garbled the text, running the gloss and the first word of the fragment together.

Citation context From a brief discussion of vocabulary having to do with runny noses and the like that also preserves Men. frr. 383; 615.

Interpretation Pollux' gloss shows that ὕλιζε is not an imperative (as at Storey 2011. 411 "Blow your nose[!]") but an imperfect, making this a—patently unflattering—description of a third party's condition or behavior at some point in the past. The verb (< ὕλη, "matter excreted from the human body", LSJ s .v. IV.2) is attested nowhere else in this sense, and it is tempting to think that Pollux or his source has got the meaning slightly wrong and that what is actually being said is "he/she was producing a moist bodily discharge in regard to his/her nostrils", i. e. "he/she had a runny nose".

For ῥῖς (properly "nose") in the plural with the sense "nostrils", see LSJ s. v. 2 (tracing the use back as far as Homer), and in comedy Epich. fr. 18.4; Ar. Av. 1081; Ra. 620; Nicostr. Com. fr. 13.5; Alex. frr. 129.17; 195.2. The proper term is μυκτήρ (e. g. Ar. V. 1488; Antiph. fr. 216.6; Eub. fr. 75.9).

fr. 334 K.–A. (301 K.)

γαυριῶσαι δ' ἀναμένουσιν ὧδ' ἐπηγλαϊσμέναι μείρακας φαιδραὶ τράπεζαι τρισκελεῖς σφενδάμνιναι

1 ὧδ' Ath.[CE] : ὡς Bothe : αἵδ' Kaibel 2 μείρακας Desrousseaux : μείραξ C : μίρξ E : μείρακες Valckenaer τράπεζαι σφενδάμνιναι Ath.[CE] Eust. : τραπέζας σφενδαμνίνας Valckenaer and resplendent tables, thus decked-out, gladsome await young women, three-legged, made of maple-wood

Ath. 2.49a
τράπεζαι ἐλεφαντόποδες τῶν ἐπιθημάτων ἐκ τῆς καλουμένης σφενδάμνου πεποιημένων. Κρατῖνος· —— ivory-footed tables with their tops made of what is referred to as "Montpellier maple". Cratinus: ——

Meter Trochaic tetrameter catalectic.
–⏑–– ⏑⏑⏑–⏑ | –⏑–⏑ –⏑–
–⏑–– –⏑–– | –⏑–– –⏑–

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.177; Kock 1880 I.100; Blümner 1891. 45; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Henderson 1991 § 362

Text The sense of the fragment as Kassel–Austin print it is difficult (see Interpretation), hence the conjectures in regard to 2 recorded in the apparatus. Valckenaer emended the paradosis μείραξ (thus C, which often expands abbreviations more aggressively than E does, suggesting that the latter's μίρξ may be closer to what was found in the exemplar) to match the feminine nominative plurals with which the word is surrounded. In addition, Valckenaer converted the paradosis τράπεζαι σφενδάμνιναι into τραπέζας σφενδαμνίνας, which thus becomes the object of ἀναμένουσιν rather than its subject—or one of its subjects. Desrousseaux read μείρακας (printed here) instead, which is both a less substantial change (since the word is an emendation in any case) and makes better sense, because the tables, which cannot move under their own power, are more likely to be doing the waiting than the young women, who must then be on their way to the party. This in turn sets up a different joke, for which see Interpretation.

The sense of ὧδ' in 1 is difficult to establish (see Interpretation), and Bothe's ὡς and Kaibel's αἵδ' represent methodologically dubious attempts to dispose of the problem by emending it away.

Citation context From a discussion of tables with particular attention to how many feet they have in literary sources, as part of a larger discussion of banquet furniture. The Epitome manuscripts C and E—the two chief witnesses to the text of the Deipnosophists at this point—preserve only φαιδραὶ τράπεζαι τρισκελεῖς σφενδάμνιναι at 2.49b, but then under the rubric "From Book Two" offer the complete text as given above and preceded by the lemma at the end of Book 13 (in the case of C) and at the end of Book 15 (in the case of E), preceded by Men. frr. *186; 435, and followed by Antiph. frr. 242–3; Panyas. frr. 17–18, pp. 181–2 Bernabé. Apparently all this material fell out of the Epitome exemplar and was subsequently collected in a supplementary section, although how this happened and why similar material is not preserved for most of the other fourteen Books of Athenaeus is unclear.

Eustathius p. 1398.22 = I.30.16 cites the final three words of 2, but has drawn them direct from the Epitome of Athenaeus and ought not to be treated as a separate witness to the text.

Hsch. κ 2686 κιλλίβαντες· τραπεζῶν βάσεις καὶ ὑποθέματα, ἢ τρισκελεῖς τράπεζαι ("killibantes: bases and supports of tables, or three-legged tables") may in its original, non-epitomized form have contained another reference to this fragment.

Interpretation In the text as Kassel–Austin print it, with no accusatives, the humor must be that what seem at first to be attractive young women—i. e. prostitutes, implicitly awaiting the arrival of male revelers at a party—are abruptly revealed by means of the second word in 2 to be tables, whose proud and cheerful appearance has to do with the food piled on top of them. But μεῖραξ is not an ambiguous word that might under certain circumstances be understood to mean "table" rather than "girl", making the remark something more like nonsense than a witticism. τρισκελεῖς, on the other hand, could be either nominative or accusative, and—assuming that Desrousseaux' μείρακας is right—what is perhaps being set up here is the puzzled response "Three-legged girls?", which might then to be followed, once the first point is clarified, with further quibbling about whether it is possible for a τράπεζα (literally "four-footer") to have only three feet (as in Epich. fr. 147 and Ar. fr. 545, both quoted by Athenaeus shortly after this).[54] How Athenaeus (or his source) knows that the tables in question had legs made from (i. e. inlaid with) ivory is unclear, but the detail might well go back to the original text.

[54] Henderson suggests that the joke has to do instead with sexual penetration from behind (the girls are imagined leaning over forward and thus resembling tables);

Much of the vocabulary is distinctly high-style, lending the description a somewhat over-the-top character. Kaibel thought the style ("dicendi genus") better suited to so-called "Middle Comedy" and suggested that the Cratinus in question might be Cratinus Junior. That the thesis is impossible to falsify does not make it true.

1 γαυριάω (< γαῦρος, "haughty"; perhaps related to γάνυμαι and γηθέω, both "be glad") is rare poetic vocabulary (also Semon. fr. 10a.1; E. fr. 848 = Ba. fr. 1 Dodds; subsequently at Theoc. 25.133; Sopat. fr. 12.1); in 4th-century Attic prose at X. Eq. 10.16 (see below on φαιδρός); D. 18.244.

ὧδ(ε) does not normally mean "here, in this spot" (LSJ s. v. II.2), although Photius = Suda takes it that way in citing fr. 59, and the word might just as easily be equivalent to οὕτως (LSJ s. v. I.1) in both places, as routinely elsewhere. If so, it is most naturally taken with ἐπηγλαϊσμέναι here and must refer back to some earlier description.

ἐπαγλαΐζω (< ἀγλαός, "splendid") is attested before this only at Il. 18.133 and subsequently before the lexicographers and Church Fathers only at Ar. Ec. 575 (lyric); fr. 700 (anapaests).[55]

2 μεῖραξ is confined to comedy (fr. 55; Ar. Th. 410; Ec. 611, 696, 1138; Pl. 1071, 1079; Xenarch. fr. 4.3; Men. Pk. 134)[56] and is picked up as an Attic colloquialism by various Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Luc. Gal. 13; Sol. 5; [Luc.] As. 52; Charito 1.4.2; 2.10.7). Most ancient grammarians agree that the word is properly applied only to women (Poll. 2.18; Ael. Dion. μ 12; Phryn. Ecl. 183; Orus fr. A 64; Hsch. μ 609), although it eventually came to be used of young men as well (e. g. 4 Ma. 14:6, 8 LXX; D.S. 30.15.1; Hld. 4.19.4; 10.23.4; cf. Paus.Gr. μ 10; Moer. μ 15; Hsch. μ 610).

φαιδρός ("bright" and thus by extension "beaming [with joy], cheerful"; LSJ s. v. I.2) is elevated poetic vocabulary, attested elsewhere in comedy only at Ar. Eq. 550 (lyric); Pax 156 (paratragic lyric); Alex. fr. 124.1 (paratragic) with Arnott 1996 ad loc., and absent from Attic prose until the late 4th century with but in that case one would expect a reference to four legs (i. e. two legs and two arms), not three. Henderson also garbles the context in Anaxil. fr. 22.25–6 (cited in support of his reading of Cratinus), where the speaker is actually a courtesan extorting presents from a lover, not a man asking for sexual favors.

---

55 Conjectural at Antiph. fr. 294.

56 Bianchi 2016 ad loc. mistakenly claims that μεῖραξ is also attested in 4th-century prose, citing Lys. 3.4 and Pl. Ap. 17c, in both of which (as elsewhere) the word in question is instead μειράκιον ("adolescent boy"; see Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 333.2).

the exception of Xenophon (e. g. HG 3.4.11; Mem. 3.10.4), who seems oblivious to such distinctions.

τρισκελεῖς is attested elsewhere in the sense "three-legged" only at Poll. 7.129 (of an artist's easel); Σ$^{REI^3}$ Ar. Ach. 1122 = Suda κ 1604 (of a shield-stand).[57] In the 5th century, other compounds in -σκελής are confined to the tragic poets (e. g. βαρυσκελής ("heavy-legged, slow") at adesp. tr. fr. 250.2; βραχυσκελής ("short-legged") at S. fr. 314.304 (satyr play); φοινικοσκελής ("red-legged") at E. Ion 1207; μακροσκελής ("long-legged") at A. fr. 62), suggesting that the use of one here evokes an elevated stylistic level.[58] σφενδάμνιναι is < σφένδαμνος, "Montpellier maple" (Acer monspessulanum), the dense wood of which was, according to Thphr. HP 5.3.3, 5.7.6, used to produce fine furniture.[59] The adjective is attested only here and at Ar. Ach. 181, where it metaphorically describes tough old Marathon veterans. For the suffix (Indo-European and already well attested in Homer) used inter alia to form adjectives of material, see in general Chantraine 1933. 200–3; Probert 2006. 270–6, and cf. e. g. frr. 75.2, 3 (both ξύλινος, "wooden"); 96 (βρύτινος, "made of fermented barley"); 110 (σπάρτινος, "made of Spanish broom"); 132 (σχοίνινος, "made of reeds"); 283 (μασθλήτινος, "made of leather"); 318 (μολύβδινος, "made of lead"); Crates Com. frr. 32.1 (σκύτινος, "made of leather", and ἐλεφάντινος, "made of ivory"), 2 (πεύκινος, "made of pine"); 41 (τριμίτινος, "made with three threads"); Pherecr. frr. 113.25 (μύρρινος, "made of myrtle"); 138.2 (μελιλώτινος, "made of melilot"); Eup. frr. 183 (μολύβδινος, made of lead"); 417 (σάρκινος, "fleshy"); 418 (σκύτινος, "made of leather"); Ar. Eq. 1171 (πίσινος, "made of peas"); Ra. 295 (βολίτινος, "made of cow-shit"); Ec. 1035 (κήρινος, "made of wax"); Pl. Com. frr. 50 (κεράτινος, "made of horn"); 71.7 (ἴρινος, "made of iris"); 122.2 (ὀστράκινος, "made of clay"); 200.3 (καλάμινος, "made of reeds"); Eub. frr. 104.1 (ἑρπύλλινος, "made of thyme"), 2–3 (both μύρτινος, "made of myrtle"); 107.3 (ἀμαράκινος, "made of marjoram"); Antiph. frr. 37.3 (κινναμώμινος, "made of cinnamon", and νάρδινος, "made of nard"); 105.4 (φοινίκινος, "made of date-palm"), 5 (σισύμβρινος, "made of mint"), 6 (ἀμαράκινος, "made of marjoram"), 7 (ἑρπύλλινος, "made of thyme"); 120.4 (σύκινος, "made of fig-wood"[60]); 151.1 (ἀμόργινος, "made of mallow stalks"); 164.4 (λίθινος, "made of stone"); 181.7 (πίσινος, "made of peas"); 225.11 (πρίνινος, "made of oak"); Anaxil. frr. 4 (κέραμινος, "made [57] Gow emends the paradosis τρισκελές at Theoc. ep. 4.3 to ἀσκελές.

[58] Note also anon. dor. fr. 11 ἐγκαλοσκελής ("having his legs in the stocks"; undated).
[59] Note also Poll. 10.35, where one of the adjectives recommended for describing couches is σφενδάμνινος.
[60] Used metaphorically of sophists in the sense "worthless".

of clay"); 22.17 (ἐλάτινος, "made of pinewood"); Men. Asp. 353 (πέτρινος, "rocky"); fr. 210.2 (νάρδινος, "made of nard").

fr. 335 K.–A. (302 K.)

ὡς ⟨δὲ⟩ μαλακὸν καὶ τέρεν τὸ χρωτίδιον ⟨ἦν⟩, ὦ θεοί· καὶ γὰρ ἐβλίμαζον αὐτήν, ἡ δ' ἐφρόντιζ' οὐδὲ ἕν

1 ⟨δέ⟩ et ⟨ἦν⟩ add. Elmsley : ⟨δὲ⟩ … ⟨ἐστ'⟩ Meineke χρωτίδιον codd. : χοιρίδιον Meineke 2 ἐφρόντιζ' Meineke : ἐφρόντιζεν codd.

And how soft and tender her sweet skin was! Ye gods!
Because I was in fact running my hands all over her, and she was paying no attention whatsoever

Et.Gen. AB β 146 = EM p. 200.37–49
βλιμάζειν· τὸ τιτθολαβεῖν, ἤγουν τὸ ψηλαφᾶν τὰ στήθη καὶ τοὺς μαστοὺς καὶ καταμανθάνειν τῇ ἁφῇ, ἅπτεσθαι δὲ τῶν ἀπορρήτων μελῶν τῶν γυναικείων καὶ διεγείρειν τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, ὥς φησιν Κρατῖνος· ——. λαμβάνεται δὲ ἡ λέξις καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ τὰ κηρία τῶν μελισσῶν τρυγᾶν blimazein: to take hold of breasts, i. e. to grope someone's chest and her breasts and examine them by feel, and to touch women's private parts and arouse their desire, as Cratinus says: ——. The word is also understood in reference to harvesting honeybee-combs

Et.Sym. I pp. 448.30–451.26
βλιμάζων· ἀποστάζων τοῦ μέλιτος, οἷον (adesp. com. fr. 776 K.)· ἡμεῖς δὲ καθάπερ οἱ ὀπωρίζοντες τοὺς Ἀττικοὺς ὀλύνθους βλιμάζομεν. εἴρηται δὲ βλιμάζειν τὸ ψηλαφᾶν τὰ στήθη καὶ τοὺς μαστοὺς καταμανθάνειν τῇ ἁφῇ, ὥς φησι Κράτης. λαμβάνεται τρυγᾶν, ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης (Eq. 794)· ——. καὶ Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 778)· —— blimazôn: draining off honey, for example (adesp. com. fr. 776 K.): "we blimazô, just like those who harvest the sterile Attic figs". blimazein is used to mean to grope someone's chest and to examine her breasts by feel, as Crates says. It is taken to mean "to harvest", as Aristophanes (Eq. 794) (says): ——. Also Sophocles (fr. 778): ——

Meter Trochaic tetrameter catalectic.
–⟨⏑⟩⏑⏑– –⏑–⏑ | –⏑⏑– –⏑–
–⏑–⏑ –⏑–– | –⏑––– –⏑–

Discussion Elmsley 1811. 76; Meineke 1839 II.183; Meineke 1847 I.60; Bonanno 1972. 159–60

Text 1 as transmitted is metrically deficient, and Elmsley (comparing Ar. V. 895) offered a pair of simple but effective supplements. Meineke proposed present ἐστ' rather than imperfect ἦν after χρωτίδιον, but the imperfects in 2 argue in favor of the latter.

Meineke half-heartedly proposed replacing the paradosis χρωτίδιον (a hapax form) in 1 with the crude χοιρίδιον ("her sweet little pussy" vel sim.), but there is no reason to emend.

In 2, Meineke proposed ἐφρόντιζ' for the paradosis ἐφρόντιζεν. The latter scans, but the elided form ought nonetheless to be adopted on the ground that it eliminates an unnecessary resolution. ἐφρόντιζεν must represent scriptio plena ἐφρόντιζε with the moveable nu added at some point to avoid what appeared to be hiatus.

Citation context One of a large cluster of ancient lexicographic notes, many referring in one way or another to Ar. Av. 530 οἱ δ' ὠνοῦνται βλιμάζοντες ("and they feel them over and make a purchase"; of people buying fresh-caught wild birds in the marketplace), but citing in addition not just Cratinus but also S. frr. 484; 778; Ar. Eq. 794; Pherecr. fr. 232, and various grammarians, and repeatedly confusing and conflating βλίμαζω (for which, see Interpretation) and βλίττω ("extract honey"; < μέλι). Cf. (without reference to Cratinus)

- Harp. β 13 = Phot. β 169 βλιμάζειν· τὸ ταῖς χερσὶ διαθλίβειν. καὶ τὸ τὰ κηρία θλῖψαι βλίσαι λέγεται ("blimazein: to fondle with one's hands. blisai is also used to mean 'to squeeze honeycombs'")
- Hsch. β 710 βλιμάζειν· ὑποθλίβειν τοὺς μαστούς ("blimazein: to discretely fondle someone's breasts")
- Hsch. β 741 βλιμάζειν· τὸ τιτθολαβεῖν. οἱονεὶ θλίβειν [ἢ † βαστάζειν,] καὶ τὸ τοὺς ὄρνιθας ἐκ τῶν στηθῶν πειράζειν. Ἀριστοφάνης Ὄρνισιν (530) ("blimazein: to take hold of breasts, i. e. to squeeze [or † to evaluate] (them), and testing birds/chickens by their chests. Aristophanes in Birds (530)")
- Erot. fr. 16 (on Hp. Epid. V 1 = 5.204.5 Littré) ἐβλιμάσθη· † ἐπτίσθη †, ἐμαλάχθη, ἐθλίβη. εἴρηται δὲ παρὰ τὸ βλίσσειν, ὅ ἐστι μαλάττειν, ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης ἐν Ὄρνισί φησιν (529–30). ὁμοίως καὶ Σοφοκλῆς μέμνηται τῆς λέξεως ἐν Πανδώρᾳ ("eblimasthê: † was winnowed †, was softened, was rubbed. It is derived from blissein, i. e. malattein ('to soften'), as Aristophanes says in Birds (530). Sophocles likewise mentions the word in Pandora (fr. 484)")
- Tim. Lex. β 8 βλιμάζειν· πειράζειν ("blimazein: to make a pass at")
- Phot. β 168 βλιμάζειν· τὸ πειράζειν καὶ ψηλαφᾶν καὶ ἅπτεσθαι τῶν ἀπορρήτων μελῶν τῶν γυναικείων καὶ διεγείρειν τὰς ἐπιθυμίας ("blimazein: to make a pass at and to grope and to touch female private parts and to arouse their desire")

- Phot. β 170 βλιμάζειν· τὸ ἐκθλῖψαι καὶ τὸ τιτθολαβεῖν καὶ ψηλαφᾶν. οὕτω Φερεκράτης (fr. 232) ("blimazein: to massage, and to take hold of breasts and grope. Thus Pherecrates (fr. 232)")
- Phot. β 171 = Synag. β 59 = Et.Gen. β 145 ~ Suda β 341 βλιμάζων· ἀποστάζων τοῦ μέλιτος ("blimazôn: draining off some of the honey")
- Suda β 341 βλιμάζειν· κυρίως τὸ τοῦ ὑπογαστρίου καὶ τοῦ στήθους ἅπτεσθαι· ὅπερ ἐποίουν οἱ τὰς ὄρνιθας ὠνούμενοι … βλιμάζειν· τὸ ταῖς χερσὶ διαθλίβειν. καὶ τὸ τὰ κηρία θλίψαι βλίσαι λέγεται ("blimazein: properly to touch the underbelly and the chest; what people buying birds used to do … blimazein: to rub with one's hands. And blisai is also used to mean 'to press honeycombs'")
- Suda β 343 βλίττειν· ἀφαιρεῖν τὸ μέλι ἀπὸ τῶν κηρίων, πειράζειν καὶ τὸ ψηλαφᾶν. καὶ τὸ ἐκπιέζειν τὰ κηρία τῶν μελισσῶν. θλίβειν. ἀλλὰ καθείρξας αὐτὸν βλίττεις. οὕτως Ἀριστοφάνης (Eq. 794) ("blittein: to remove the honey from the combs, to make a pass at and to grope. Also to squeeze honeybee-combs. To rub. 'But you've surrounded him and you blitteis him'; thus Aristophanes (Eq. 794)")
- Et.Gud. β p. 274.4–6 βλιμάζειν· τὸ ἀποστάζειν τὸ μέλι καὶ τὸ στηθολαβεῖν, ἤγουν τὸ ψηλαφᾶν τὰ στήθη καὶ τοὺς μαστοὺς καταμανθάνειν τῇ ἁφῇ· ἢ τὸ ψηλαφᾶν τὰς ὄρνεις διὰ τὰ ὠά ("blimazein: to drain off honey and to grab someone's chest, i. e. groping the chest and examining the breasts by touching them; or to grope birds looking for eggs")
- Σ Ar. Av. 530 βλιμάζοντες· ὅτι νεωτερικὴ ἡ λέξις. Καλλίστρατος ἀντὶ τοῦ ψηλαφᾶν. ἔοικε δὲ πλέον τι σημαίνειν, τὸ μετὰ συντονίας ("blimazontes: the word is a neologism. Callistratus (says that it is used) in place of 'to grope', but it seems to mean something more, the involvement of intensity"; going on to cite Didymus)
- Lex.Rhet. AB I p. 221.17–21 βλιμάζειν· τὸ πειράζειν καὶ ψηλαφᾷν, ἐπεὶ οἱ προσκνώμενοι ταῖς γυναιξὶ βλιμάζουσι καὶ ψηλαφῶσι τοὺς τιτθοὺς καὶ τὰς πυγὰς καὶ τὰ ἄλλα μέρη ἐγείροντες τὰς ἐπιθυμίας. ("blimazein: to make a pass and grope, since those who rub themselves up against women squeeze (blimazousi) and grope their breasts and their buttocks and their other parts as a way of arousing their desire").

χρωτίδιον (1) is attested nowhere else, and Comm. on Dion. Thrax Grammatici Graeci I.3 p. 539.29–30 γίνονται δὲ καὶ ἀπὸ ἀρσενικῶν ὑποκοριστικὰ εἰς ον, ὡς ἀπὸ τοῦ χρώς χρωτίδιον, καὶ ἀπὸ θηλυκῶν, ὡς ἀπὸ τοῦ ψυχή ψυχίδιον ("Hypocoristic forms in -on derive both from masculine nouns, as chrôtidion from chrôs, and from female nouns, as psychidion from psychê") is probably a reference to this fragment.

Interpretation As often (cf. frr. 414; 424; 446; 472), the witnesses—patently dealing with an exemplar reading simply Κρα$^{\tau}$ vel sim. and expanding ad libitum—are divided between assigning the fragment to Cratinus (Et.Gen. = EM) and Crates (Et.Sym.). This might therefore better have been treated as a dubious fragment of Cratinus and/or also have been dubiously attributed to Crates (as in Meineke and Bonanno).

An exultant report on the speaker's successful groping of a woman, with a two-part explanation in 2 regarding how the information about the quality of the woman's flesh in 1 was obtained (actual physical touching was involved, and the touching was possible because no objection was registered). The description of the woman's non-reaction in the second half of 2 means either that she was oblivious to what was being done to her (sc. because she thought the hands on her body represented a stranger's helpful attempt to steady her in a treacherous situation in the street or the like), or that she was aware of the assault but failed to react to it (sc. in order to avoid being publicly shamed as a slut who had deliberately drawn attention to herself or the like). This is in any case less likely a report of a mutually satisfying romantic encounter than of what would today be described as low-level sexual assault. But the speaker shows no sign of being ashamed of himself, and it is unclear that a 5th-century Athenian theatrical audience would have thought he should, this more likely falling into the general category of "Nice work if you can get it." For other groping scenes in comedy, Ar. Ach. 1199 (Dicaeopolis seemingly gropes one of the prostitutes' breasts); Pax 875–6, 879–80 (the slave gropes Theoria's buttocks); Lys. 83–4 (Lysistrata gropes Lampito's breasts), 1162–4 (the Spartan describes his people's desire for Reconciliation's ass/Pylos as attempts at groping, βλιμάδδομες); Th. 1187 (the Scythian gropes the dancing girl's breast); Pl. 1067–8 πειρᾷ μὲν οὖν ἴσως σε καὶ τῶν τιτθίων / ἐφάπτεταί σου ("Perhaps he's making a pass at you and feeling up your tits!"; the Young Man mockingly imagines Chremylus' true motives with the Old Woman); Plaut. Bac. 480; Cas. 848; Rud. 423 (followed by a rebuff of the groper), and cf. the leering exchange between Peisetairos and Euelpides regarding what they would like to do with the Nightingale at Ar. Av. 667–74.

1 ὡς is exclamatory, as in frr. 6.2; 116.1; *195.3 οἴμ' ὡς ἁπαλὸς καὶ λευκός ("Damn! How soft and white!"; of an appealing young wine, but with sexual overtones); 205. See in general LSJ s. v. D.I.

In an erotic context, μαλακός is always a positive characteristic of the object of desire; cf. Ar. Nu. 979 μαλακὴν φυρασάμενος τὴν φωνὴν πρὸς τὸν ἐραστήν ("kneading his voice soft to speak to his lover"; of a boy); Ec. 1058 ἕπου, μαλακίων, δεῦρ' ἀνύσας ("Hurry up and follow this way, Softie!"; the second Hag to the Young Man); Pl. 1022 τὸ βλέμμα θ' ὡς ἔχοιμι μαλακὸν καὶ καλόν ("that I had a soft, pretty glance"; a report of flattery of a woman by a man); Antiph. fr. 101.4 μαλακαῖς καλαῖς τε χερσὶ τριφθῆναι πόδας ("and to have one's feet rubbed by soft, pretty hands"; one of the services provided by a courtesan); Philetaer. fr. 5.1 ὡς τακερόν, ὦ Ζεῦ, καὶ μαλακὸν τὸ βλέμμ' ἔχει ("Zeus! What a languishing, soft glance she has!"; of a courtesan); S. Ant. 782–4 Ἔρως … / ὃς ἐν μαλακαῖς παρειαῖς / νεάνιδος ἐννυχεύεις ("Eros, you who sleep upon the soft cheeks of a young girl"). For soft skin, also E. Med. 1403 μαλακοῦ χρωτὸς ψαῦσαι τέκνων ("to touch the soft skin of my children").

τέρην is exclusively poetic vocabulary (paired with μαλακός at Sapph. or Alc. fr. 16.3 πο⟨ί⟩ας τέρεν ἄνθος μάλακον μάτεισαι, "treading upon the delicate, soft bloom of the grass"). Also in erotic contexts at e.g. Hes. Op. 522 τέρενα χρόα ("soft skin"; of a lovely, marriageable young woman); Archil. fr. S478(a).6 καλὴ τέρεινα παρθένος ("a pretty, tender young woman"); Thgn. 261 παρὰ παιδὶ τερείνῃ ("beside a tender girl"); Hippon. fr. 120 εἴ μοι γένοιτο παρθένος καλή τε καὶ τέρεινα ("If only I could have a pretty, tender young woman!").

The diminutive χρωτίδιον is attested only here and in the commentary on Dionysius Thrax noted in Citation context. Petersen 1910. 237 includes the word in a very small subclass of diminutives that supposedly add the sense "soft", citing as a second example πιλίδιον ("little hat") at Antiph. fr. 35.4. But πιλίδιον is modified in Antiphanes by ἁπαλός ("soft"), just as χρωτίδιον is here modified by two adjectives with approximately the same sense, making it clear that in this case the diminutive ending has some other function. Most likely it signals the speaker's longing for the woman's skin, implicitly capturing his reaction to his discovery that it was μαλακὸς καὶ τέρην to the touch; cf. τὼφθαλμιδίω ("your two sweet little eyes") at Ar. Eq. 909 and κλινίδιον ("a nice little κλίνη") at Ar. Lys. 916. The form is typical of colloquial Attic; see in general López-Eire 1996. 137–44.

Although ὦ θεοί looks like a bland colloquial oath, this specific formulation is in fact entirely confined in the classical period to Athenian tragedy (e.g. S. Ph. 779; fr. 874.1; E. Hel. 72; Or. 385) and comedy (e.g. Chionid. fr. 5; Ar. Ach. 1058; Eq. 1309; Th. 905; Antiph. frr. 59.3; 161.2; 181.6; Alex. fr. 168.7; Men. Epitr. 489).

2 For καὶ γάρ, see Denniston 1950. 108–9.

The uses of βλιμάζω (etymology uncertain) at Ar. Av. 530 (quoted and translated in Citation context) and Hp. Epid. V 1 = 5.204.5 Littré (a physician massages a patient's abdomen), along with some of the lexicographic notes collected in Citation context, combine to suggest that the word can refer to exploratory palpitations of any sort and does not have a specifically sexual meaning, even if much "groping" is inevitably sexual in character (also Ar. Lys.

1164, of the Spartans groping after Reconciliation's ass/Pylos).[61] 5th-century Athenian vocabulary and accordingly picked up by one of the characters in Lucian's Lexiphanes (12), who appears to use it to refer to masturbation.

οὐδὲ ἕν is adverbial. οὐδὲ ἕν, οὐδὲ εἷς, μηδὲ ἕν and μηδὲ εἷς are generally taken to be emphatic forms (for οὐδέν, οὐδείς, μηδέν and μηδείς, respectively), and their absence from tragedy suggests that they were felt to be colloquial. See in general Moorhouse 1962. 245–6.

fr. 336 K.–A. (303 K.)

γλαῦκον οὐ πρὸς παντὸς ⟨ἀνδρός⟩ ἐστιν ἀρτῦσαι καλῶς πρός del. et γλαῦκον post ἐστιν transp. K.–A. ⟨ἀνδρός⟩ add. Casaubon

Not every ⟨man⟩ can season a glaukos well

Ath. 2.67f–8a
(ἀρτύματα) τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα κεῖται παρὰ Σοφοκλεῖ (fr. dub. 1112)· ——. Κρατῖνος· ——. Εὔπολις (fr. 365)·——

(artymata, "seasonings") And the verb is found in Sophocles (fr. dub. 1112): ——. Cratinus: ——. Eupolis (fr. 365): ——

Meter As printed above, trochaic tetrameter catalectic.
–⏑–– –⏑⟨–⏑⟩ | –⏑–– –⏑–
But see Text.

Discussion Casaubon 1621. 87; Grotius 1626. 489; Kock 1880 I.101; Kassel ap. K.–A.; Lelli 2006. 132–3 [61] Contrast the view of Henderson 1991 § 319 (followed by Dunbar 1995 on Ar. Av. 530, excluding the passage of Hippocrates as not Attic Greek), who takes the handling of the birds in the marketplace that Peisetairos denounces to be presented as insulting because the standard meaning of βλιμάζω was sexual. LSJ s. v. I.1 glosses the verb "feel hens to see if they are fat, Ar. Av. 530" (where wild birds, however, rather than hens are in question) and includes as an example of the sexualized sense S. fr. 484, although Erotian tells us only that Sophocles used the word in Pandôra and his note suggests that he took it to mean "palpitate, massage" not only in Hippocrates but also in Birds.

Text The line as transmitted is unmetrical. Casaubon, comparing e. g. Ar. fr. dub. 928 οὐ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἐς Κόρινθόν ἔσθ' ὁ πλοῦς ("not every man can make the voyage to Corinth", where high-class prostitutes were supposedly abundant), added ἀνδρός to produce a trochaic tetrameter catalectic. Kassel–Austin compare in addition Nicol. Com. fr. 1.26 (quoted in Interpretation) and suggest as an alternative deleting πρός and transposing γλαῦκον to after ἐστιν, yielding an iambic trimeter. But this is far more complicated than Casaubon's correction, which merely assumes that a copyist's eye jumped from one -ὸς to the next, resulting in the omission of a word.

Citation context From a section of the Deipnosophists (2.67f–8a, preserved only in the Epitome) on ἀρτύματα ("seasonings") and related words, located near the end of a discussion of culinary items such as pepper, oil, vinegar and fish-sauce.

Interpretation Perhaps a boast by someone whose point is that he has the allegedly rare skill in question. That the remark riffs on the proverb that lies behind Ar. fr. dub. 928 (quoted in Text), as Nicol. Com. fr. 1.26 οὐ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἐπὶ τράπεζάν ἐσθ' ὁ πλοῦς ("not every man can make the voyage to a dinner table") clearly does, is possible. But this is better thought of as a simple, banal formulation, as at e. g. Hdt. 7.153.4; Pl. Cra. 388e, 391b; La. 196d; Hp. Fract. 11 = 3.454.4 Littré; Arist. Pol. 1308^{b}14–15, and see below on πρός.

For the use of πρός, e. g. Ar. Eq. 191–2 ἡ δημαγωγία γὰρ οὐ πρὸς μουσικοῦ / ἔτ' ἐστὶν ἀνδρὸς οὐδὲ χρηστοῦ τοὺς τρόπους ("for political leadership is no longer for an educated man or one with decent manners") with van Leeuwen 1900 ad loc.; V. 369 ταῦτα μὲν πρὸς ἀνδρός ἐστ' ἄνοντος εἰς σωτηρίαν ("These actions are the mark of a man moving forward to save himself"); Th. 177–8 (~ E. fr. 28); Ra. 534 ταῦτα μὲν πρὸς ἀνδρός ἐστι νοῦν ἔχοντος ("These actions are the mark of a man who has sense"); Philetaer. fr. 11.1 οὐ πρὸς γυναικὸς ὁ κόρος ("Being satisfied isn't characteristic of a woman"); S. Ai. 581–2 οὐ πρὸς ἰατροῦ σοφοῦ / θρηνεῖν ἐπῳδὰς πρὸς τομῶντι πήματι ("It's not the mark of a wise doctor to wail incantations over a pain that requires surgery"); fr. 319 ἐσθλοῦ πρὸς ἀνδρὸς πάντα γενναίως φέρειν ("It's a mark of a good man to bear everything nobly"); E. Hel. 950–1 πρὸς ἀνδρὸς εὐγενοῦς / ἐν ξυμφοραῖσι δάκρυ' ἀπ' ὀφθαλμῶν βαλεῖν ("It's characteristic of a noble man to shed tears in misfortune"); and see LSJ s. v. A.IV; Poultney 1936. 188.

A γλαῦκος is a large fish similar to a shark or dogfish, although Aristotle claims that it has anatomical features that sharks and dogfish lack (HA 508^{b}13–25); no precise identification is possible. See in general Thompson 1957. 48. For γλαῦκος as a delicacy, also Ar. fr. 380.2; Amphis fr. 22; Antiph. fr. 221.1–2 (a small one stewed in brine); Axionic. fr. 6.14 (a stewed steak); Philem.

fr. 82.20–1; adesp. com. fr. 1146.1, and in catalogues of foodstuffs and the like at fr. 171.50; Epich. frr. 44; 87; 164; Amphis fr. 16; Alex. fr. 115.8; Anaxipp. fr. 1.40. For γλαῦκος as the main ingredient of a spicy stew, see Sotad. Com. fr. 1.5–7 (to be cooked with green herbs, cumin, salt and olive oil). For eating the head of a γλαῦκος, Sannyr. fr. 3; Anaxandr. fr. 31.1–2; Antiph. frr. 77.2; 130.4; Amphis fr. 35.2; Bato fr. 5.16–18; Archestr. fr. 21.1.

ἀρτῦσαι For the verb—properly "prepare, organize" (cognate with ἀραρίσκω, "fit together", and Lat. artus, "limb")—in the sense "prepare a meal, cook", cf. Pherecr. fr. 113.23; Eup. fr. 365; Anaxipp. fr. 1.41; hDem. 128; Arist. EN 1118ᵃ29.

fr. 337 K.–A. (304 K.)

εὐπρόσωπος ἦσθ' ὀνόματος οὐδὲν ἐπὶ χεῖρας φορῶν εὐπρόσωπος Eust. : εὐπρόσοιστος Kock φορῶν scripsimus : φέρων Eust.

You were good-looking, even though you wore no name as far as your hands

Eust. p. 1430.22–5 = i.77.7–11
σημείωσαι δὲ ὅτι ἐνταῦθα μὲν ἁπλῶς εἷμα ἔφη ὁ ποιητής, ὅτε δὲ μέγα φᾶρος εἴπῃ (Il. 8.221; Od. 8.84; 15.61), παροιμίαν ποιεῖ τὴν λέγουσαν "ἐπὶ χεῖρας φέρειν" ἤγουν ἔνδοξον εἶναι, ὡς ἀπὸ τῶν μεγάλα φασὶν ἱμάτια ἐχόντων [ὡς] μείζονα εἶναι τὴν ἐπιβολήν. Κρατῖνος· ——, ἤγουν οὐ μέγα ἔχων ὄνομα, οὐδὲ φαινόμενος κατὰ τοὺς οὕτω μεγαλοείμονας, ὡς καὶ ἐπὶ χειρῶν φέρειν τὰς ᾤας

Note that the poet said simply "garment" (heima) here, whereas when he says "a large robe" (mega pharos; Il. 8.221; Od. 8.84; 15.61), he produces the fixed phrase that says "to bear as far as one's hands", i. e. to be noteworthy, as from those who have large robes, they say, the impression is greater. Cratinus: ——, i. e. although you (sing.) had no great reputation and did not appear like men who wear such large robes that they wear the edges as far as their hands

Meter Trochaic tetrameter catalectic.
–⏑–⏑ –⏑⏑⏑ | –⏑⏑– –⏑–

Discussion Grotius 1626. 495; Kock 1880 I.101; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Lelli 2006. 122

Text Kock—assuming for no good reason that the fragment referred to Cimon or someone similar—suggested emending the paradosis εὐπρόσωπος to εὐπρόσοιστος ("approachable").

φορέω rather than φέρω is the appropriate verb when wearing clothing or the like is in question; see Interpretation.

Citation context A note on Od. 2.3 εἵματα ἑσσάμενος, περὶ δὲ ξίφος ὀξὺ θέτ' ὤμῳ ("putting on his clothes; and he placed a sharp sword about his shoulder"). Cf. Σ^{A} Il. 8.221 πρὸς τὸ ἔχων ἐν χειρί, τί ποτε σημαίνει; ὁ μὲν Ἀπολλόδωρος, ὅτι περιειλήσας εἶχεν ἐν τῇ χειρί, ὁ δὲ Διονύσιος, πρὸς τὸ κατασείειν εὐθέτως λαβόμενος τοῦ φάρους ("As for 'having in hand', what in the world does that mean? Apollodorus (maintains that it means) that he folded it up and held it in his hand, whereas Dionysius (maintains that it means that) he took hold of his robe and shook it to give it a suitable appearance").

Interpretation A comment addressed to an individual who was once handsome but obscure, but playing on the idea that he was once handsome but impoverished (with "no name" substituted for the expected "no robe" vel sim., the idea being that a wealthy person has all the fabric he needs and more, whereas a poor man can barely cover himself). The real point of the remark is surely that now, by contrast, the addressee is either less attractive or more famous, and—this being the nature of things—probably both. There is no other evidence for the (supposed) proverb ἐπὶ χεῖρας φέρειν (better φορεῖν; see Text), and the only evidence for it may in fact have been the fragment of Cratinus.

εὐπρόσωπος (first attested at A. Ch. 969 (corrupt)) can be used of boys (e.g. Ar. Pl. 976; X. Mem. 1.3.10; Pl. Chrm. 154d) or women (e.g. Ar. Pax 617; Ra. 410; Anaxandr. fr. 9.5), and by extension of anything superficially attractive (e.g. Hdt. 7.168.2; E. Ph. 1336; D. 18.149, all of words); of an adult man only at S. Ai. 1009 (with the unusual sense "bearing a pleasant expression on his face"). The word is picked up so aggressively by Lucian in particular (e.g. JTr. 8; Vit.Auct. 1) that it is tempting to believe that it was regarded in the Roman period as characteristic of good classical style.

For ὀνόματος οὐδέν, literally "nothing of a name", meaning "no name at all", cf. Ar. Ach. 1021 εἰρήνης τί ("a bit of peace"); Eq. 985–6 τόδ(ε) … τῆς ὑομουσίας ("this example of his bad taste"); Ra. 1045 τῆς Ἀφροδίτης οὐδέν ("no Aphrodite at all"; Euripides is speaking); Xenarch. fr. 14.2 οὐδ' ὁτιοῦν φωνῆς ("no trace of a voice"); [A.] PV 341 προθυμίας … οὐδὲν ἐλλείπεις ("you are deficient in no eagerness at all", i.e. "you display complete eagerness"); and see in general Poultney 1936. 68.

For ἐπὶ χεῖρας, see Eustathius' comments (quoted above) when he cites the line; Kock glosses "tam amplis uti vestibus, ut orae etiam super manus defluant".

For the use of φορέω in comedy, see fr. 327.2 with n.

fr. 338 K.–A. (305 K.)

καὶ Πολυμνήστει' ἀείδει μουσικήν τε μανθάνει

Πολυμνήστει' ἀείδει $\Sigma^{\text{VEΓ}^3\text{M}}$ Suda : Πολυμνήστεια δ' ᾄδει Herwerden τε μανθάνει om. Σ^{M} and he's singing Polymnêsteia and learning mousikê

$\Sigma^{\text{VEΓ}^3\text{M}}$ Ar. Eq. 1287
Πολυμνήστεια· μέλη Πολυμνήστου Κολοφωνίου· κιθαρῳδὸς δὲ ἦν οὗτος. Κρατῖνος· ——. κωμῳδεῖται δὲ καὶ οὗτος ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς. Πολύμνηστος δὲ καὶ Οἰώνιχος ὅμοιοι ἀρρητοποιοί

Polymnêsteia: lyrics by Polymnestus of Colophon; this man was a citharode. Cratinus: ——. But this man is also mocked in the same [passage]. Polymnestus and Oeonichus were similar practitioners of vice

Suda π 1988
Πολύμνηστος καὶ Ἀριφράδης καὶ Οἰώνιχος ἀρρητοποιοί. καὶ Πολυμνήστεια δὲ καὶ αὕτη κωμῳδεῖται ἐπὶ αἰσχρότητι. Κρατῖνος· ——. Ἀριστοφάνης (Eq. 1287–9)· ——

Polymnestus and Ariphrades and Oeonichus were practitioners of vice. And Polymnesteia herself is mocked in comedy for shameful behavior. Cratinus: ——. Aristophanes (Eq. 1287–9): ——

Hsch. π 2891
Πολυμνήστειον ᾄδειν· εἶδός τι μελοποιΐας τὸ Πολυμνήστειον. ἦν δὲ Κολοφώνιος μελοποιὸς ὁ Πολύμνηστος, εὐμελὴς πάνυ to sing a Polymnêsteion: The Polymnêsteion is a type of lyric poetry. And Polymnestus was a lyric poet from Colophon, (and was) quite melodious

~ Phot. π 1049
Πολυμνήστειον ἀείδειν· γένος τι μελοποιΐας· Κολοφώνιος δὲ ὁ Πολύμνηστος to sing a Polymnêsteion: a genre of lyric poetry. And Polymnestus was from Colophon Meter Trochaic tetrameter catalectic.

–⏑–– –⏑–– | –⏑–⏑ –⏑–

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.221–2; Bergk 1853. 1083; Herwerden 1864. 3; Kock 1880 I.101–2; Crusius 1889. 40; Wilamowitz 1900. 13

Text Herwerden proposed Πολυμνήστεια δ᾽ ᾄδει for the paradosis Πολυμνήστει᾽ ἀείδει on the ground that ἀείδω is restricted to lyric in 5th-century comedy (Eup. fr. 148.2; Ar. Eq. 1266; Lys. 1243; Th. 115). But since the topic of discussion is mousikê (i. e. "literature"; cf. Interpretation), this may be deliberate stylistic coloring.[62]

Citation context A note on the reference to the allegedly disgusting Ariphrades at Ar. Eq. 1287 as inter alia καὶ Πολυμνήστεια ποιῶν καὶ ξυνὼν Οἰωνίχῳ ("both writing Polymnêsteia and associating with Oeonichus"); likely drawn from a catalogue of kômôidoumenoi. Hsch. π 2891 ~ Phot. π 1049 (traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus), neither with any specific mention of Cratinus but patently referring to this verse, must go back to the same source. The entry in the Suda, on the other hand, seems to be drawn direct from the Aristophanic scholia (like many other such notes), but has garbled the information the scholion preserves by taking Cratinus' Πολυμνήστει(α) to be a feminine nominative singular. Another fragment of the same note is preserved at Suda α 3940.

Interpretation At Ar. Eq. 1287 (quoted in Citation context), Πολυμνήστεια seem to be a dubious genre. There is no hint of that in the line from Cratinus, so either opinions differed on the matter or the remark has an ironic bite (not necessarily intended by the speaker).

The noun Polymnêsteia implies the existence of a Polymnestus, and a canned Roman-era history of Greek song traditionally assigned to Plutarch reports that Polymnestus son of Meles of Colophon—presumably to be identified with the Polymnestus of Colophon whom the Aristophanic scholion calls a citharode—was a contemporary of Sacadas of Argos (Mor. 1134a–b, 1135c), putting him in the first half of the 6th century BCE. [Plutarch] also claims (Mor. 1133b) that Polymnestus was mentioned by Alcman (PMG 145) and Pindar (fr. 188), although without quoting either passage; associates him (Mor. 1134c–d) with orthioi nomoi (for which, see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 15–16); and credits him (Mor. 1141b) with inventing the Hypolydian mode. See in general West 1992. 164 n. 9, 334–5, 359. None of this information inspires much confidence, particularly since Alcman belongs a century or so earlier than where [Plutarch] places Polymnestus, raising the possibility that Alcman (like Pindar after him?) merely used a form of the poetic adjective πολύμνηστος ("much-remembering") and that the passage was eventually twisted into a fragment of literary biography; cf. S. fr. 765 ap. Ath. 13.592a–b (manufacturing a late-life love affair for the poet out of a stray word). Kock (followed by Crusius) suggested that Polymnestus of Colophon—whoever he was and whatever he wrote—has been conflated in the ancient sources with another Polymnestus, who was an author of erotica[63] and to whose compositions Cratinus and Aristophanes are referring. The claim in the scholion to Aristophanes (taken over in the Suda) that Polymnestus was a pervert seems in any case to be a deduction from the assertion in Knights that Polymnêsteia were written by Ariphrades (PA 2201; PAA 202305), who is mocked for his supposed fondness for performing cunnilingus in brothels at Ar. Eq. 1280–9; V. 1280–1, 1283.[64]

[62] Cf. Men. fr. 163.1 (mock-epic, but in iambic trimeter).

For the contrast between uncontracted poetic ἀείδω and ᾄδω (the normal, contracted Attic form of the verb), see Text.

μουσική is a broad term that is not restricted to vocal or instrumental "music", but also refers more generally to what we would call literary learning of other sorts; e. g. Eup. fr. 392.8 (in reference to work as a playwright) with Olson 2014 ad loc.; Ar. Eq. 188–9 οὐδὲ μουσικὴν ἐπίσταμαι / πλὴν γραμμάτων ("I don't know any mousikê except letters [of the alphabet]"), 191–2 (political leadership is no longer a position for a man who is mousikos, i. e. educated rather than a coarse market-vendor); Antiph. fr. 207.6 (describing Philoxenus' poetic gifts as a whole); and see in general Morgan 1999. For the noun with a form of μανθάνω, e. g. Eup. fr. 4; Theophil. fr. 5.2–3.

fr. 339 K.–A. (295 K.)

δασὺν ἔχων τὸν πρωκτὸν ἅτε κυρήβι' ἐσθίων κυρήβι' Kulenkamp : κηρύβι' EM

having (masc. sing.) a bushy asshole, inasmuch as he eats bran

EM p. 512.8–14
κυρηβίων· καθαρματῶδες ἐστὶ τὸ ὄνομα· κυρήβια γὰρ κυρίως τὰ ἀποβράσματα τῶν κυάμων. Κρατῖνος· ——. εἰ μὴ ἄρα περιεκτικὴ ἔννοια ἐστὶν ἕνεκα ἐμφάσεως καὶ ὑγιῶς

---

[63] i. e. "Ionian songs", as at Ar. Ec. 883; cf. the attack on Gnesippus' music as intended for seducing women at Eup. fr. 148.

[64] Nothing else is known of Oeonichus (PA 11371; PAA 741555) except perhaps the reference in the phrase Οἰωνίχου μουσεῖον at Hsch. o 454 (= adesp. com. fr. 396).

ὀξύνεται, ὡς ἄπειρος ἀπείρων καὶ ἄναιμος ἀναίμων· οὕτω κατάπυγος καταπύγων καταπύγονος· καὶ συστέλλεται ἐν τῇ γενικῇ kyrêbiôn: the word/name pertains to purgatives; because kyrêbia are properly bean-pods. Cratinus: ——. Unless of course the sense is collective for the sake of emphasis (?) and it is correctly accented with an acute, like ápeiros ("inexperienced") apeírôn and ánaimos ("bloodless") anaímôn. Thus katápygos ("taking it up the ass") (but) katapýgôn katapýgonos (gen.); and (the long syllable) is reduced in the genitive[65]

Meter Probably iambic tetrameter catalectic.

⏑–⏑– ––⏑⏑ | ⏑–⏑– ⏑–⟨–⟩

Alternatively, Meineke suggested that this might be the remains of two iambic trimeters.

⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩ ⏑–⏑–

––⏑⏑ ⏑–⏑|– ⏑–⟨⏑–⟩

Discussion Kulenkamp 1819. 919; Meineke 1839 II.184–5; Cobet 1858. 147; Luppe 1967. 398–9

Text The paradosis κηρύβι' is an easy misspelling of a rare word (also at e. g. Theognos. Can. 205; Phot. Bibl. 530a) facilitated by the fact that eta and upsilon eventually came to be pronounced alike; corrected by Kulenkamp.

Cobet proposed adding ἀεί at the end of the line to fill out Meineke's proposed second trimeter.

Citation context A confusing—because condensed?—lexicographic note that perhaps commented originally on the use of Κυρηβίων as a nickname for one of Aeschines' relatives at D. 19.287; cf. Phot. κ 1242 (~ Suda κ 2754) Κυρηβίων· Δημοσθένης ἐν τῷ κατ' Αἰσχίνου· ἐπώνυμόν ἐστιν Ἐπικράτους τοῦ Αἰσχίνου κηδεστοῦ ("Kurêbiôn: Demosthenes in his Against Aeschines; this is a nickname of Aeschines' kinsman Epicrates"). Cratinus is cited simply to show that κυρήβια (whence κυρηβίων, however understood) means "bean-pods". Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 20.10–12 seems to claim that the word is actually to be accented on the ultima: σεσημείωται τὸ Κνακιών ὄνομα ποταμοῦ καὶ Ἀσιών· ἔστι δὲ ὄνομα ὄρους· καὶ κυρηβιών, σημαίνει δὲ τὸν καθαρματώδη, καὶ τὸ δοθιών τὸ ἐν τῇ συνηθείᾳ λεγόμενον ἀντὶ τοῦ δοθιήν ("noted as exceptions[66] are Knakiôn, the name of a river, and Asiôn; this is the name of a mountain; also kyrêbiôn, which denotes someone connected with cleansing, and dothiôn, which is used colloquially in place of dothiên").[67]

[65] I.e. yielding genitive singular κυρηβίονος from nominative singular κυρηβίων.
[66] I.e. because these words take an acute accent on the ultima rather than the penult.

Interpretation Part of a description of a man that explains an aspect of his physique (and by extension his character; see below) by reference to his diet. To have a hairy crotch—here, more crudely put, "a bushy asshole"—is a mark of virility at Ar. Lys. 801–4 καὶ Μυρωνίδης γὰρ ἦν / τραχὺς ἐντεῦθεν μελάμπυ/γός τε τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἅπασιν·/ ὡς δὲ καὶ Φορμίων ("Yes, for Myronides was tough on this account", i. e. that his crotch featured an enormous "thicket", "and black-assed to all our enemies; and so was Phormio") with Henderson 1987 ad loc.; Archil. fr. 178 (a reference to Heracles as μελάμπυγος) with Diogenian. 6.38 (glossing the adjective "manly and strong"; cf. Hdt. 7.216, where the "black-assed one" must again be Heracles); Pl. Com. fr. 3.1 ὦ Κινύρα, βασιλεῦ Κυπρίων, ἀνδρῶν δασυπρώκτων ("O Kinyras, king of the Cyprians, bushy-assholed men"); Eub. fr. 61.3 ἐγὼ δέ γ' εἰμὶ τῶν μελαμπύγων ἔτι ("I'm still one of the black-butts", i. e. by no means reduced to cowardice); Luc. Pseudol. 32 ἀνὴρ δασὺς καὶ τοῦτο δὴ τὸ ἀρχαῖον, μελάμπυγος ("a man who is bushy and, as they put it in the old days, black-assed"); Hsch. λ 739 λευκόπυγος· ὁ ἄνανδρος. ἔμπαλιν δὲ μελαμπύγους τοὺς ἀνδρείους ἔλεγον ("white-assed: an effeminate man. On the other hand, they called virile men black-assed"); μ 641 μελάμπυγος· ἀνδρεῖος. τοὺς γὰρ δασεῖς τὰς πυγὰς ἀνδρείους ἐνόμιζον ("black-assed: virile. For they regarded those with bushy asses as virile"); Fraenkel 1950 on A. Ag. 115. Why eating bran would make a man courageous is unclear, and the logic of the remark perhaps runs the other way around: the individual in question is tough enough to live on bran, and he must therefore be an extremely formidable character; cf. Pherecr. fr. 172 τὴν γαστέρ' ᾗων κἀχύρων σεσαγμένους ("men whose bellies are stuffed with bean-stalks and chaff").

Meineke detected a reference to the "hemp-dealer" Eucrates of the deme Melite (PA 5759; PAA 437755), who is mentioned at Ar. Eq. 129–30 (424 BCE) alongside Lysicles (PA 9417; PAA 614815) and Cleon (PA 8674; PAA 579130) as an example of a new generation of Athenian politicians made up of wealthy businessmen lacking a traditional aristocratic lineage and education; he may also have served as general in 432/1 BCE (IG I³ 365.5 = PAA 437450). The scholia take the point of Ar. Eq. 253–4 (Eucrates fled εὐθὺ τῶν κυρηβίων, "straight to the bran", i. e. "straight to the bran-market";[68] see Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 327 for the use of commodity-names to designate the place in the Agora where they were sold) and Ar. fr. 716 καὶ σὺ κυρηβιοπῶλα, / Εὔκρατες στύππαξ ("and you the bran-seller, Eucrates the Hempster") to be that Eucrates made his living as a dealer in fibrous plant-matter generally, and Meineke's thesis gains support from the fact that Aristophanes also mocked a man named Eucrates as a Μελιτεὺς κάπρος ("boar from Melite"; fr. 149, from Gêras), which Phot. μ 236 claims was another reference to his hairiness (ἐπεὶ δασύς ἐστιν), while Hsch. μ 728 adds that καὶ σῦν αὐτὸν ἄντικρυς ἐκάλουν, ἴσως μὲν διὰ δασύτητα, ἐπεὶ καὶ ἄρκτον αὐτόν φασι πολλαχοῦ ("they used to refer to him outright as a pig, perhaps on account of his hairiness, since they also speak of him everywhere as a bear").[69] Suda σ 1257 also refers to Eucrates (under the nickname Στύππαξ (codd. Στύγαξ); cf. Ar. fr. 716, quoted above) as a traitor and an accepter of bribes, and says that he was put to death by the Thirty. But this represents confusion with Eucrates son of Nikeratos of the deme Kydantidae (PA 5757; PAA 437715) the brother of Nicias, who served as general in 412/1 BCE (cf. Ar. Lys. 103) and again in 405/4 BCE in the aftermath of the disaster at Arginousae, after which his opposition to the Thirty led to his death (cf. Lys. 18.4–5), and perhaps with another homonym as well (since neither Eucrates is elsewhere accused of taking bribes). Cf. Phot. ε 1601, and see in general Kagan 1989. 126–8.

---

[67] Cf. Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 724.4–7 εἰ δὲ μόνως ἀρσενικά ἐστι, φυλάττει τὸ ω οἷον Κνακιών Κνακιῶνος, Ἀσιών Ἀσιῶνος, κυρηβιών κυρηβιῶνος, ἀνθεστηριών ἀνθεστηριῶνος, δοθιών δοθιῶνος τὸ ἐν τῇ συνηθείᾳ λεγόμενον ἀντὶ τοῦ δοθιήν ("but if (the nouns) are exclusively masculine, they preserve the omega e. g. Knakiôn Knakiônos, Asiôn Asiônos, kyrebiôn kyrebiônos, anthestêriôn anthestêriônos, dothiôn dothiônos, which is used colloquially in place of dothiên").

For δασύς (uncertain etymology) in the sense "shaggy" vel sim., e. g. Hippon. fr. 43.2 (a robe); Ar. Nu. 325 (used substantively to mean "thickets" of brush); Ec. 61 (of unshaved armpits); Eub. fr. 106.2, 8 (also of a πρωκτός); Philem. fr. 134.1 (of a cloak); Men. Dysc. 120 and Epitr. 242 (both of a thicket); Bato fr. 7.9 (οἱ δασεῖς as full-grown men, as opposed to those who are younger and "smooth").

πρωκτός (Indo-European vocabulary) is the crude vox propria for the anus. The word is attested before the Roman period only at Hippon. fr. 107.32 and in comedy (e. g. fr. 3; Epich. fr. 113.158; Hermipp. fr. 54.3; Pl. Com. fr. 189.22; Eub. fr. 106.6; Anaxandr. fr. 42.68), which means not that it was a rare or unfamiliar vocabulary item, but only that authors working in other genres judged it too ugly for their purposes. See in general Henderson 1991 § 499.

---

[68] LSJ s. v. II suggests "bran-shop" as a one-off definition at Ar. Eq. 254, but a "shop" is not obviously in question.

[69] Not included among the Kassel–Austin adespota comic fragments, although comedy seems the obvious source for such material.

Causal ἅτε is common in comedy (Ar. Pax 623, 634; Av. 75, 285; Lys. 418; Th. 456; Ra. 546 (lyric), 671; Ec. 37, 257) and prose (e. g. Hdt. 1.102.2; Th. 4.94.1; X. HG 2.3.15), and the fact that it is confined in tragedy to lyric (S. El. 168; E. Or. 206 [corrupt]) must accordingly mean not that it is an elevated form, but that it was judged too colloquial to use except when the meter required it.

κυρήβι(α) (etymology uncertain) is normally glossed "chaff, bran" or the like (e. g. Poll. 1.248 τὰ γὰρ φαυλότερα τῶν πυρῶν κυρήβια καλεῖται, "the less desirable portion of the wheat is called kurêbia"; Phot. κ 918 ~ Suda κ 1985 τὰ μὲν κυρήβια πίτυρά ἐστιν, "kurêbia are chaff"), although Hsch. κ 4668 καὶ κυάμων λέπυρα ("also bean-pods") seems to support the more extended meaning offered by the EM. Erotian κ 68 calls the word an Atticism, but it is common in Hippocrates (e. g. Nat. Mul. 58 = 7.398.5 Littré). For bran in general, see Blümner 1898 I^2.55; Moritz 1958. 153–6, 162–3.

fr. 340 K.–A. (365 K.)

ἄξιος λαβεῖν ὁ μισθός

The wage[70] is worth getting

Suda α 2819 = Synag. B α 1551

——· τοῦτο τῶν εἰς κάλλος ἠσκημένων. σημαίνει δέ τοιόνδε τι · ἄξιός ἐστιν ὁ μισθὸς ὥστε λαμβάνειν αὐτόν. ἔστι δὲ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ. Ὅμηρος δὲ πρῶτος ἐχρήσατο τῷ σχήματι τούτῳ (Il. 24.243)· ῥηΐτεροι γὰρ ἔσεσθε κείνου τεθνεῶτος ἐναιρέμεν. καὶ πάλιν (Il. 12.63)· ἡ δὲ μάλ' ἀργαλέη περάαν· σκόλοπες γὰρ ἐν αὐτῇ. καὶ Σοφοκλῆς (E. Med. 319)· γυνὴ γὰρ ὀξύθυμος, ὡς δ' αὕτως ἀνὴρ, ῥᾷων φυλάσσειν ἢ σιωπηλὸς σοφός. ὁ δὲ νοῦς· ῥᾷον ἄν τις φυλάξαιτο τὸν ὀξύθυμον ἢ τὸν κρύπτοντα διὰ σιγῆς τὴν ὀργήν

——: this is said of items that are beautifully wrought, but it means something like this: the wage is worth enough to take it. (The expression) is in Cratinus, but Homer was the first to use this construction (Il. 24.243): For you will be easier to kill when he is dead. And again (Il. 12.63): it is very difficult to cross; for there are stakes in it. Also Sophocles (E. Med. 319): for a woman with an explosive temper, as also a man, is easier to guard against than a wise man who keeps quiet. And the sense: a person would more easily be on guard against a man with an explosive temper than against one who conceals his anger in silence

[70] The translation at Storey 2011. 413 ignores the definite article ("A fee worth receiving") and thus misses the sense.

Meter The words scan –⏑–⏑–⏑–× and are most likely trochaic dimeter (–⏑–⏑ –⏑–⏑) or trochaic tetrameter catalectic (–⏑–⏑ –⏑–× ⟨–⏑–× –⏑–⟩). They can also be made to fit in iambic trimeter (e. g. ⟨×⟩ –⏑– ⏑–⏑– ×⟨–⏑–⟩), but the lines thus produced lack a normal penthemimeral or hepthemimeral caesura, making this an undesirable solution.

Discussion Kock 1880 I.117

Citation context From the common source of the Suda and the Synagoge B generally referred to as Σ′. de Borries traced the material to Phrynichus (PS fr. *227).

Interpretation For the limiting use of an infinitive with adjectives and nouns (the so-called "epexegetic infinitive") in comedy, e. g. fr. 299.1; Eup. fr. 308; Ar. Eq. 596, and see in general Smyth 1956 §§ 2005–6.

For the use of ἄξιος in reference to a "worthy" price or the like, e. g. Od. 15.388 ὁ δ' ἄξιον ὦνον ἔδωκε; 20.383 ἄξιον ἄλφοι; E. Hipp. 623 with Barrett 1964 ad loc.; LSJ s. v. I.3.a.[71] μισθός (attested already in Mycenaean at KN 29 = Am 821; elsewhere in comedy at e. g. Pherecr. fr. 37.3; Eup. fr. 11; Ar. Ach. 66) is old Indo-European vocabulary. For the combination with a form of λαμβάνω, e. g. Ar. Av. 1025 μισθὸν λαβών; Ra. 140 δύ' ὀβολὼ μισθὸν λαβών; Men. Epitr. 549 λάβοιμι μισθόν; E. fr. 297.2; Th. 8.69.4. For the general Athenian disinclination to engage in paid labor (a dependent relationship judged more appropriate for a slave), at least when the employer was another person rather than the state, see Cohen 2015. 40–4.

fr. 341 K.–A. (361 K.)

σφάττε δεῖρε κόπτε

δεῖρε Σ^{RVTE} : δεῖραι Σ^{M} : δαῖρε Lobeck

Slaughter! Flay! Beat! (sing.)

---

[71] LSJ s. v. I.3.b notes the use of the adjective to mean "inexpensive" at e. g. Ar. Eq. 645, and calls this "an exactly opposite sense". This misses the point, which is that when ἄξιος is used of a price or a wage, it always means "good", but whether a high figure or a low figure counts as "good" depends on whether the evaluation is made from the perspective of the seller/employer or the buyer/employee.

Σ^{RVTEM} Ar. Av. 365
ἕλκε, τίλλε· καὶ Κρατῖνος· ——. τὴν χύτραν δέ, εἰς ἣν ἐπερείδονται, δεικνύντες ὅτι καταφρονοῦσιν αὐτῆς

Drag! Pluck!: also Cratinus: ——. In reference to the cook-pot they are attacking, as a way of showing that they despise it

Meter The words as printed above scan –⏑–⏑–⏑ and can easily be accommodated in trochees (as in Birds). Alternatively, this might be part of an iambic trimeter (e. g. ⟨×–⏑– ×⟩–⏑|– ⏑–⏑⟨–⟩). But see Text.

Discussion Lobeck ap. Buttmann 1839 II^2.148

Citation context An isolated comment on Ar. Av. 365 ἕλκε, τίλλε, παῖε, δεῖρε· κόπτε πρώτην τὴν χύτραν ("Drag! Pluck! Strike! Flay! Hit the cook-pot first!"; the chorus leader urges the Birds to assault Peisetaerus and Euelpides and their equipment).

Text δεῖραι (Σ^{M}) is a middle imperative (vs. the active imperative in the other manuscripts) and can be made to scan regardless of whether Cratinus' words are analyzed as trochaic or iambic (see Meter). But the reading is best treated as a simple pedestrian error for δεῖρε (Σ^{RVTE}) dating to a period when ε and αι had come to be pronounced alike. The normal form of the verb is δέρω, and Lobeck's δαῖρε represents an attempt to regularize the variant superscript reading δαίρειν in manuscript K at Ar. Nu. 442, where all other witnesses have the unmetrical δέρειν. Scaliger suggested that the verb had an alternative form δείρειν, as in the manuscripts at Ar. Av. 365 (quoted in Citation context), where the meter demands a long initial syllable. This has been universally accepted by editors of Clouds and ought probably to be printed here as well. It is nonetheless the case that δεῖρε in Cratinus might reflect the influence of the unusual long form of the verb in Aristophanes; and if what Cratinus actually wrote was the more common δέρε, the fragment would scan –⏑⏑⏑–⏑, in which case it is most credibly understood as iambic (e. g. –⏑⏑⏑– ⏑|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩).

Interpretation A series of commands most easily understood as directed to a single person (although note the use of the singular in the passage from Birds that sparked the quotation of Cratinus, where the order is addressed to the chorus as a whole). If κόπτε is taken to stand for κατακόπτε ("cut to pieces, reduce to mincemeat"; cf. Pl. Com. fr. 34.2; Alex. fr. 177.12 μὴ κόπτ' ἔμ', ἀλλὰ τὰ κρέα, "Don't koptô me, but the meat!", said to an annoying cook; Mnesim. fr. 4.53 κόπτει as one in a series of culinary terms; and κοπίς, "cleaver", at e. g. Ar. fr. 143), the imperatives trace in order three of the most basic steps in butchering an animal, viz. slitting its throat, separating its skin from its flesh, and cutting the carcass up into useable chunks of meat (e. g. Il. 1.459–61; 24.622–3; Pl. Euthd. 301c σφάττειν τε καὶ ἐκδέρειν καὶ τὰ μικρὰ κρέα κατακόψαντα ἕψειν καὶ ὀπτᾶν; μάγειρον, ἦν δ' ἐγώ, "'(Who is supposed) to slaughter and to flay, and after he cuts up the meat into pieces, to stew and roast it?' 'A butcher/cook, I said'"; A.R. 1.432–3; Plu. Mor. 993b σφαζομένων δερομένων διαμελιζομένων, "slaughtering, flaying, cutting limb from limb"; [Luc.] Asin. 16; van Straten 1995. 103–53), and these words are an order directed to a mageiros (butcher/cook) or an ordinary citizen playing what later came to be the specialized role of a mageiros.[72] But the simplex of the verb is properly "strike" (cf. fr. 390 ἰσχάδα κοπτήν with n.; Ar. Lys. 361, of punching another person; Men. fr. 345) rather than "chop up", raising the alternative possibility that the first two orders are metaphorical calls for extreme violence against another person, brought somewhat to earth by the third, more prosaic verb; cf. Ar. Eq. 251–2 παῖε καὶ δίωκε καὶ τάραττε καὶ κύκα / καὶ βδελύττου … κἀπικείμενος βόα ("strike and chase and disturb and stir up and loath (him), … and attack him with a shout!").

This is the earliest attestation of σφάττω (subsequently at e. g. Theopomp. Com. fr. 49; X. An. 4.5.16; Cyr. 7.3.14; Pl. Criti. 119e; Aeschin. 1.191; Men. Pk. 998; Sam. 608; fr. 608.1 (figurative)), which is a colloquial Attic form of common σφάζω (etymology uncertain). Tragedy retains σφάζω (e. g. A. Eu. 305; S. Ai. 235; E. Andr. 412), the use of which at Ar. Pax 1018 is clearly a high-style gesture.

δείρω (more often δέρω; see Text) is from a widely-disseminated Indo-European root meaning "flay" and is cognate with e. g. English tear and German (ver)zehren ("consume"); cf. δέρμα ("that which is flayed", i. e. "skin, hide") and δορίς ("flaying knife"; in a catalogue of cooks' equipment at Anaxipp. fr. 6.3, cf. Poll. 6.89; 10.104; Hsch. δ 2211). The verb is attested elsewhere in comedy at e. g. Pherecr. fr. 193 (flaying a dog); Ar. Eq. 370 ("I'll flay you into a sack"; one character threatens another); Nu. 442 ("to flay into a bag"); Archipp. fr. 23.2 (of stripping the skin from sharks and the like); Anaxandr. fr. 40.13 (of flaying a cat). For the verb used metaphorically of abusive treatment, cf. Ar. V. 485.

---

[72] Cf. Ar. Pax 1017–18 λαβὲ τὴν μάχαιραν· εἶθ' ὅπως μαγειρικῶς / σφάξεις τὸν οἶν ("take the knife, and see to it that you slaughter the sheep just as a professional butcher/cook would"). For butchers, see Dohm 1964, esp. 1–10, 67–84; Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 24; Olson and Sens 1999 on Matro fr. 1.11 (the latter two with further bibliography); and in general Wilkins 2000. 369–414.

fr. 342 K.–A. (307 K.)

"τίς δὲ σύ;" κομψός τις ἔροιτο θεατής, ὑπολεπτολόγος, γνωμιδιώτης, εὐριπιδαριστοφανίζων

1 τίς δὲ σύ κομψός; ⟨πᾶς ἄν⟩ τις Porson : τίς δ' εἶ σύ; ⟨τάχ' ἂν⟩ κομψός τις Headlam 2 ὑπολεπτολόγος Σ : ὑπολεπτόλογος van Leeuwen γνωμιδιώτης Σ : γνωμιδιώκτης Seidler : γνωμοδιώκτης Schneider

"Who are you?" some clever spectator might ask, a bit of a quibbler, a little-idea-guy, a Euripidaristophanizer

$\Sigma^{\text{Areth.}}$ Pl. Ap. 19c
Ἀριστοφάνης ὁ κωμῳδιοποιὸς φαλακρὸς ἦν, ὡς αὐτὸς φησὶν Εἰρήνῃ (771–4). ἐκωμῳδεῖτο δ' ἐπὶ τῷ σκώπτειν μὲν Εὐριπίδην, μιμεῖσθαι δ' αὐτόν. Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ αὐτὸς δ' ἐξομολογεῖται Σκηνὰς καταλαμβανούσαις (Ar. fr. 488)· χρῶμαι γὰρ αὐτοῦ τοῦ στόματος τῷ στρογγύλῳ, / τοὺς νοῦς δ' ἀγοραίους ἧττον ἢ 'κεῖνος ποιῶ

The comic playwright Aristophanes was bald, as he himself says in Peace (771–4). He was made fun of in comedy for mocking Euripides but imitating him. Cratinus: ——. And he himself admits it in Skênas katalambanousai (Ar. fr. 488): "for I make use of his well-turned language, but I produce ideas that are less pedestrian than he does"

Meter Anapaestic tetrameter catalectic, e. g.
⟨⏑⏒⏑⏒ ⏑⏒⟩–⏑ | ––⏑– ⏑––
⏑–⏑– –⏑–– | ––⏑– ⏑––

Discussion Porson 1815. 268; Schneider 1821 s. v. γνωμοδιώκτης; Runkel 1827. 87; Fritzsche 1835. 291–2; Meineke 1847 I.75; Kock 1880 I.102; Luebke 1883. 28; Headlam 1899. 5; Denniston 1927. 119; Whittaker 1935. 188; Pieters 1946. 151–2; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Nesselrath 1993. 185; Sidwell 1995. 62; Conti Bizzarro 1999. 96; Luppe 2000. 15–20; Ruffell 2002. 160; O'Sullivan 2006; Olson 2007. 110–11 (B41); Ornaghi 2006. 87–93; Bakola 2010. 23–9; Biles 2011. 124; Storey 2011. 363; Wright 2012. 7–9; Sofia 2016. 88; Farmer 2017. 64

Assignment to known plays Runkel tentatively attributed the fragment to Pytinê, while Ornaghi 2006. 104 assigned it to Archilochoi (along with frr. *361 and 502). The reference to Aristophanes and his poetic tendencies shows that the play in question must in any case date to sometime in the final years of Cratinus' career.

Text In 1, the conjectures of Porson and Headlam serve to insert the particle ἄν into the line to go with the potential optative ἔροιτο; Porson's suggestion is easier, but requires severing κομψός from θεατής, hence presumably Headlam's attempt at a different solution. Although ἄν is typically required with an optative expressing potential,[73] however, it is sometimes omitted, especially in questions and with indefinite pronouns (as here) not only in poetry (cf. Epich. fr. 18.1; Ar. V. 471–2; Th. 872–3; Il. 6.479; 11.838; A. Ch. 594–5; S. Ant. 605; fr. 106; E. Hipp. 1186; Andr. 929; Herod. 5.75–6)[74] but also in prose (cf. Hdt. 3.127.3) and inscriptions (cf. Collitz–Bechtel 1899 II.1587.6–10 τ⟨ί⟩να θεῶν / ἢ ἡρ[ώω]ν τιμᾶν- / τι λ[ῶ]ιον καὶ ἄ- / με[ι]νον εἴη, "For one honoring which of the gods or heroes would things be better and greater?"; a question posed to the oracle at Dodona). See in general Goodwin 1897. 384; Slotty 1915. 139–40; Wackernagel 1926 I.236–7; Bers 1984. 135.

The punctuation at the end of 1 is disputed. If a full or half-stop is placed there (as in Meineke, Kock and Kassel–Austin), 2 must continue the spectator's remark and be either a second question ("A bit of a quibbler etc.?") or an answer to the first ("A bit of a quibbler etc.!"), with the string of compounds showing what is meant by κομψός in 1 (i. e. the sort of person who might use words like this). If a comma is placed at the end of 1 (as in Pieters, followed by O'Sullivan, and in the text printed here), 2 continues the description of the spectator initiated in 1 with κομψός, offering a series of increasingly elaborate glosses on the word.

In 2, the manuscript transmits γνωμιδιώτης, a hapax most easily understood as a nomen agentis in -ωτης derived from γνωμίδιον; cf. fr. 401 ὁρκωτής with n., and see in general Chantraine 1933. 311. Kassel–Austin compare Homeric ἀσπιδιώτης ("shield-bearer", i. e. "warrior") < ἀσπίς. Schneider proposed γνωμοδιώκτης (printed by Meineke and Kock), "a pursuer of γνῶμαι", in place of this, while Seidler suggested γνωμιδιώκτης (printed by Kassel–Austin), apparently to be understood "a pursuer of γνωμίδια". Neither word is attested elsewhere, which makes both emendations suspect. γνωμιδιώκτης seems particularly unlikely, since compounds with a diminutive as the first constituent are rare (although note ὀβελισκολύχνιον, "a little spit used as a lamp-holder" vel sim. at Theopomp. Com. fr. 8.2, and Γραμματειδιοποιός, The Maker of Tablets, the title of a play by Apollodorus of Carystus or Apollodorus of Gela),[75] and since a mysterious internal reduction (from γνωμιδι-διώκτης to γνωμι-διώκτης) must be assumed; for the internal reduction of similar or identical subsequent syllables, i. e. haplology, see Schwyzer 1953 I.262–3 with examples. We accordingly retain the paradosis, which is metrical and is no more difficult to understand than the equally odd and inventive words that precede and follow it.

[73] The use of a modal particle with an optative expressing potential is a uniquely Greek development; see Wackernagel 1926 I.237.

[74] Other examples of the potential optative without ἄν are often, rightly or wrongly, edited away (e. g. Ar. Av. 180; Lys. 839; Pl. 374, 438; A. Supp. 727; Ag. 1163; S. OC 1418–19; E. IT 1055; Hel. 769; IA 523, 1210; Pl. Lys. 214d). For criticism of the editorial practice, see Willi 2003. 20, and cf. Biles–Olson 2015 on Ar. V. 472.

Citation context From a richly-informed note—likely drawn from a catalogue of kômôidoumenoi—on Pl. Ap. 19c, where Socrates claims that the general prejudice against him is due in large part to the influence of Aristophanes' Clouds. The note also cites Ar. fr. 488; Aristonym. fr. 3; Sannyr. fr. 5; Philoch. FGrH 328 F 85; Eup. fr. 62; Pl. Com. fr. 86.

Interpretation A hostile or contemptuous question put in the mouth of an individual member of the audience, who is then described in the second verse via a tricolon of increasingly elaborate hapax legomena that serve to characterize him—and by implication his query—as intellectually suspect.

The combination of content and meter suggest that the fragment is drawn from a parabasis (thus Luebke and Whittaker, followed by Biles). Pieters (followed by Storey) thought that the audience member was supposed to be Cratinus' rival Aristophanes, who is interrogating Cratinus himself, allowing Ar. fr. 488 to be understood as Aristophanes' response to the remark. But "Euripidaristophanizer"—someone who plays Euripides and Aristophanes simultaneously, or (more likely) someone who plays Aristophanes in a Euripidean manner—makes little sense as a way to referring to Aristophanes himself, and this is better understood as some anonymous individual poisoned by his taste for a particular sort of language and the argumentative tendencies it represents. The scholion cites the verse as evidence that Aristophanes was criticized "for mocking Euripides but imitating him". But what the speaker actually does is merely associate Euripides and Aristophanes as two birds of a feather. Depending on how the final word in 2 is interpreted (see above), moreover, the charge of mouthing glib, sententious, pseudo-sophisticated nonsense might easily be intended to hit Euripides much more than Aristophanes, [75] Pollux refers to a play by this title three times (4.19; 7.190; 10.93), twice giving it to Apollodorus of Gela, once simply to Apollodorus, but citing only a single fragment (= Apollod. Gel. fr. 2). Ath. 7.280d, on the other hand, assigns one fragment of a Grammateidiopoios to Apollodorus of Carystus (= Apollod. Car. fr. 5). The word is attested nowhere else, and it seems far less likely that both poets wrote a play by the same rare title than that either Pollux or Athenaeus is confused. Both the title and the fragments would thus better have been given to Apollodorus (Carystius an Gelous incertum).

with the point perhaps being that Aristophanes was attacked in the preceding lines (i. e. as a rival comic poet) and that the anonymous spectator is imagined rising to his defense in a typically quibbling Euripidean manner.

1 τίς δὲ σύ; is not an ordinary question but a challenge thrown back by the anonymous spectator at the speaker of these lines, who has apparently identified someone else—one of his theatrical rivals? or a contemporary politician—as something or other, most likely something unattractive.

κομψός is "smart, clever" (e. g. Ar. Nu. 649; Av. 195; Th. 93 (of a bit of "typically Euripidean" inventive brilliance); Alex. fr. 190.1), but often has a contemptuous, cutting or malicious overtone, as at fr. 182.3 κομψῶν … θεατῶν; Ar. Eq. 18 κομψευριπικῶς ("in a clever Euripidean fashion"); Ra. 967; Men. fr. 225.2; Timocl. fr. 17.3. See in general O'Sullivan 1992. 138–9; Beta 2004. 142–4; Biles–Olson 2015 on Ar. V. 1316–18.

2 The first two adjectives (each occupying a single complete foot) gloss 1 κομψός by reference to the sort of speech or argument to which the spectator supposedly devotes himself, while the final adjective (occupying the final two feet) traces the intellectual sources of his style.

ὑπολεπτολόγος λεπτός is "thin, light, fine" (e. g. fr. 205, of a slice of sausage; Ar. Nu. 1018, of a meager chest; Pl. Com. fr. 21.1, of spider webs; Antiph. fr. 27.23, of tiny fish), and thus by extension, of thoughts, words or the people who have or express them, "subtle", often with a sarcastic or disapproving undertone (e. g. Ar. Ach. 445; Nu. 153, 359; Ra. 1110; Amphis fr. 33.5 (adverb); Alex. fr. 223.8). λεπτολόγος ("quibbling") is first attested here, and the word and its cognates are preserved elsewhere in the classical period only in late 5th-century comedy (Ar. Nu. 320 λεπτολογέω, 1496 διαλεπτολογέομαι; Ra. 828 καταλεπτολογέω, 876–7 λεπτολόγους ξυνετὰς φρένας … / ἀνδρῶν γνωμοτύπων, "thoughtful, subtle brains of men who forge maxims"; Hermipp. fr. 21 λεπτολογία). Phryn. PS p. 85.14–15 defines λεπτολογία as τὸ περὶ τῶν μικρῶν φροντίζειν καὶ ἀδολεσχεῖν ("thinking and chattering about trivialities"), and the combination of his interest in the word (cf. PS p. 83.6–7 on καταλεπτολογέω at Ar. Ra. 828), that of the Antiatticist (λ 19, citing Hermipp. fr. 21, and likely Phrynichus' source), and the appearance of cognate vocabulary in authors such as Lucian (e. g. Bis Acc. 34 λεπτολογέω) leaves no doubt that words in λεπτολογ- were recognized as late 5th-century Athenian colloquialisms. The prefix adds the sense "somewhat, a bit" (LSJ s. v. ὑπό F.II; cf. ὑπόκωφος, 'half-deaf', at Ar. Eq. 43), which is more likely contemptuous than exculpatory. For λεπτολογ- and γνωμ- words close together, see Ar. Nu. 320–1; Ra. 876–7.

For γνωμιδιώτης, see Text. γνωμίδιον (whence also Seidler's γνωμιδιώκτης) is attested elsewhere in the classical period only at Ar. Eq. 100; Nu.

321, and in the phrase ἀνασπᾶν γνωμίδιον, which Demianczuk (following Phryn. PS p. 6.18 κωμῳδικῶς εἴρηται and Phot. α 1666) took to be a fragment of Aristophanes (fr. 49b Dem.) but Kassel–Austin reject as a proverb. Lucian picks the word up from Clouds at Par. 42, and it must be a late 5th-century colloquialism.

For the nonce-word εὐριπιδαριστοφανίζω, cf. fr. 502 Χοιριλεκφαντίδης with n.; Telecl. fr. 42 † Εὐριπίδης Σωκρατογόμφους †; Ar. Pax 1072 βακίζω; Antiph. fr. 225.8 πυθαγορίζω. For verbs in -ίζω generally, see Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 99.25.

fr. 343 K.–A. (309 K.)

κἀνθένδ' ἐπὶ τέρματα γῆς ἥξεις καὶ Κισθήνης ὄρος ὄψει and from there you will come[76] to the ends of the earth and see Mount Kisthênê

Harp. p. 178.8–9 Dindorf = K 61 Keaney
Κισθήνη· Ἰσοκράτης Πανηγυρικῷ (4.153). ὄρος τῆς Θρᾴκης. Κρατῖνος· ——

Kisthênê: Isocrates in the Panegyricus (4.153). A Thracian mountain. Cratinus: ——

Meter Anapaestic tetrameter catalectic.
– – ⏑ – ⏑ – – – | – – – – ⏑ – –

Discussion Meineke 1823. xviii n.; Runkel 1827. 87–8; Bergk 1838. 44; Meineke 1839 II.136–7; Kock 1880 I.309; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Bakola 2010. 162–3; Storey 2011. 376–7

Assignment to known plays Meineke (followed by Bakola), comparing frr. 220–4 (seemingly travel directions for a Perseus-like figure), assigned the fragment to Seriphioi.[77] Runkel and Kaibel were dubious of the attribution, since frr. 220–4 are hexameters rather than anapaests, and the fact that Cratinus used both meters in Odysseis (e. g. frr. 144–5 (anapaests); 149–50 (hexameters)) does not dispose of the objection (pace Bakola 2010. 163 n. 138), since the lines in question patently come from a number of different places in that play. The connection of Kisthênê with the Graiai at [A.] PV 793 (see Interpretation), [76] Not "go" (Rusten 2011. 216).

[77] The mention of Cleon in fr. 228 likely puts Seriphioi in the early to mid-420s BCE.

however, does hint at a thematic connection with the Perseus story and thus tends to support the assignment to Seriphioi. Bergk assigned the fragment to Dêliades instead.

Citation context A gloss on an obscure place-name in Isocrates, who describes the capture of Kisthênê (τοῖς μὲν Κισθήνην καταλαβοῦσιν) as an event parallel to an expedition against Cyprus. Whether Isocrates means the city in Mysia mentioned at Str. 13.606–7 (very near to Adramyteion; see fr. 508 n.), the one in Lycia mentioned at Str. 14.666, or the Thracian mountain[78] seemingly also referred to by Ephorus (FGrH 70 F 235), as Harpocration (at least in the form in which he has come down to us) appears to be arguing, is unclear. The same note, but with the reference to Cratinus stripped out, is preserved at Phot. κ 746 = Suda κ 1676 (drawn from the Epitome of Harpocration). Note also Hsch. κ 2785.

Interpretation The addressee is offered a glimpse of his or her future, most likely as part of an set of directions, as seemingly in frr. 222–3 (from Seriphioi; see Assignment to known plays). κἀνθένδ(ε) at the head of the line shows that the journey will have multiple stages, while the reference to "the ends of the earth" that follows suggests that this is at least close to the conclusion of it. At [A.] PV 793, Prometheus tells Io that in the course of her wanderings she will eventually make her way πρὸς Γοργόνεια πεδία Κισθήνης, ἵνα / αἱ Φορκίδες ναίουσι ("to the Gorgoneian plains of Kisthênê, where the Phorcides"—i. e. the Graiai—"live"), and thus to very near the Gorgons ([A.] PV 798–9). The visit to the Graiai was one of the traditional stages in Perseus' mission to behead Medusa (Pherecyd. fr. 11 Fowler; Eratosth. Cat. 22; [Apollod.] Bib. 2.37), suggesting a context for the fragment even if it does not belong to the same speech (or set of speeches) as frr. 220–4. The PV may well date to the mid-420s BCE (evidence for Aeschylean revivals in this period at Ar. Ach. 10 (425 BCE); echoes of the text of the PV at Ar. Eq. 758–9 ~ PV 59, 308; 836 ~ PV 613 (424 BCE)). But there is no need to think of a specific allusion to that text, and Kisthênê was instead most likely part of the traditional geography of the Graiai and thus of the Perseus story.

A τέρμα (from an Indo-European root meaning "cross"; not based on any known Greek verb, unlike most nouns in -μα) is an extreme point, whether used concretely (LSJ s. v. I) of e. g. a turning point in a race (Il. 22.162), the edge of a land (Hdt. 7.54.2) or the end-point of a journey (A. Eu. 422), or more abstractly (LSJ s. v. II), as here and at e. g. Tyrt. fr. 14 ἀρετῆς … τέρμασιν ἢ θανάτου ("termata of virtue or death"); S. OT 1530 τέρμα τοῦ βίου ("terma of life"); E. Hipp. 937 τέρμα τόλμης καὶ θράσους ("terma of audacity and boldness"); [A.] PV 99–100 μόχθων / … τέρματα ("termata of labors"). Primarily poetic vocabulary, attested elsewhere in Attic comedy only at Ar. Av. 705 (anapaests).

[78] Presumably of interest for its mines, which would explain Isocrates' claim that the men who accomplished this received a 100-talent reward.

The use of ὄρος plus a genitive (attested nowhere else in comedy) appears to be an epic mannerism (e. g. Il. 2.603 Κυλλήνης ὄρος, 829 Τηρείης ὄρος; Od. 19.431–2 ὄρος … / Παρνησοῦ; Hes. Th. 2 Ἑλικῶνος … ὄρος; Cypr. fr. 5.5, p. 48 Bernabé ὄρος … Ἴδης; hAp. 26 Κύνθου ὄρος, 35 Αὐτοκάνης ὄρος, 40 Αἰσαγέης ὄρος; Pi. O. 6.77 Κυλλάνας ὄρος; fr. 156.2 Μαλέας ὄρος; E. Or. 1382–3 Ἴδας ὄρος (lyric); IA 1047 Κενταύρων ἐν ὄρεσι (lyric), 1285 Ἴδας τ' ὄρεα (lyric);[79] contrast e. g. A. Pers. 494 Πάγγαιόν τ' ὄρος; S. Ph. 1459 Ἑρμαῖον ὄρος; E. fr. 696.5–6 ὄρος / Παρθένιον; Hdt. 2.6.1 τὸ Κάσιον ὄρος).

fr. 344 K.–A. (311 K.)

κοκκύζοντα δ' ἀλεκτρυόν' οὐκ ἀνέχονται κοκκύζοντα δ' Kock : κοκκύζειν τὸν Eust.

They don't put up with a rooster crowing

Eust. p. 1479.41–6 = i.142.9–23
(ἀλέκτωρ) οὗ δὴ ἀλέκτορος καθὰ καὶ ἀλεκτρυόνος. καὶ παρ' ἄλλοις μὲν πολλοῖς χρῆσις, καὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ δέ, φασιν, ἐν τῷ· ——, ἤγουν ᾄδειν ὡς αὐτῷ ἔθος. ἐξ οὗ δὴ κοκκύζειν, καὶ ὁ παρ' Ἡσιόδῳ (Op. 486) κόκκυξ, καὶ ἐπίρρημα κόκκυ παρὰ τῷ κωμικῷ (Ar. Ra. 1384). ὑποβάλλει δὲ τοιοῦτον νοῦν καὶ Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 791), φασίν, ἐν τῷ· κοκκυβόας (Bothe : κοκκο- Eust.) ὄρνις. ἐναργέστερον δὲ Δίφιλος (fr. 66) ἐν τῷ· καὶ νὴ Δί' ὄντως εὐθὺς ἐξέπεμπέ με / ὄρθριον· ἐκόκκυζ' ἀρτίως ἀλεκτρυών. καὶ Πλάτων δὲ ἐμφανῶς, φασίν, ὁ κωμικὸς (fr. 231) ἐν τῷ· σὲ δὲ κοκκύζων ⟨ … ⟩ ἀλέκτωρ προκαλεῖται

(alektôr, "rooster") whence in fact (the genitive forms) alektoros as well as alektryonos. They say that (the latter form) is used in many other authors, as well as in Cratinus, in his: ——, sc. to sing (aidein) as is its custom. Whence in fact kokkyzein, and kokkyx in Hesiod (Op. 486), and the adverb kokky in the comic poet (Ar. Ra. 1384). And Sophocles (fr. 791), they say, suggests something of this sort in his: "a bird/chicken that cries kokky" (thus Bothe : "kokko" Eust.). Clearer is Diphilus (fr. 66) in his: "and, by Zeus, he/she/it really sent me out immediately at day-break; the rooster was just crowing (ekokkyz')". And Plato Comicus (fr. 231) expressly, they say, in his: "a rooster calls you forth ⟨ … ⟩ with his crowing (kokkyzôn)"

[79] Thus presumably also Ῥίπας ὄρος ἀνθέον ὕλᾳ ("Mount Rhipa, flourishing with underbrush") in Alcm. PMG 90.1, where Page offers instead Ῥίπας, ὄρος ἀνθέον ὕλᾳ, which makes matters no easier.

Meter Regardless of whether Kock's emendation or the paradosis is printed (see Text), the fragment scans ––––⏑⏑–⏑⏑–⏑⏑–– and could thus be accommodated in either anapaests (––––⏑⏑ –⏑⏑–⏑⏑ ––) or hexameters (e. g. ⟨–⏑⏑⟩ –– –⏑|⏑ –⏑⏑ –⏑⏑ ––).

Discussion Kock 1880 I.103

Text Eustathius offers κοκκύζειν τὸν ἀλεκτρυόνα (retained by Kassel–Austin), but ἀνέχομαι is very seldom construed with a complementary infinitive, and the passages where the construction is found are suspect (Hdt. 7.139.6; A. Eu. 914 with Sommerstein 1989 ad loc.; E. HF 1254; Ph. 547–8 with Mastronarde 1994 ad loc.); see in general Kühner–Gerth 1904 II.74. Kock accordingly emended to a supplementary participle, which is well-attested with ἀνέχομαι (e. g. Ar. Eq. 1102; Th. 593; Antiph. fr. 21.6; see LSJ s. v. ἀνέχω C.II.4). The change makes the reference to the rooster generic, whereas with Eustathius' definite article a particular bird is in question.

Citation context Having been led to a consideration of roosters and related vocabulary by the mention of Ἀλέκτορος … κούρην at Od. 4.10, Eustathius moves on to discuss the by-form ἀλεκτρυών (for which the fragment of Cratinus is relevant) and then, via a rough, associative logic, κοκκ– words and in particular the use of κοκκύζω to refer to a rooster's crow. That the latter qualified as "good 5th-century usage" was clearly a point of interest in Atticist lexicographers, to one of whom the material in Eustathius is to be traced. Cf.

- Ar. Byz. fr. 20 καὶ κοκκύζειν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀλεκτρυόνος ("and kokkyzein (is used) in reference to the rooster")
- Phryn. PS p. 35.14–15 ᾄδειν ἀλεκτρυόνας· Ἀττικῶς. τὸ δὲ κοκκύζειν κωμικοὶ λέγουσιν ("cocks sing: Attic style. But comedians say kokkyzein")
- Antiatt. κ 6 κοκκύζειν τοὺς ἀλεκτρυόνας· Δίφιλος Πλινθοφόρῳ (fr. 66.2) ("roosters kokkyzein: Diphilus in Plinthophoros (fr. 66.2)")
- Poll. 5.89 (a discussion of the sounds birds make) εἴποις δ' ἂν κλάζειν μὲν ἀετούς, κλαγγάζειν δὲ γεράνους, ἐπ' ἀμφοῖν δὲ κλαγγήν, ἱέρακας δὲ ῥοίζειν, καὶ ἀλεκτρυόνας ᾄδειν καὶ κόκκυγας κοκκύζειν· Ὑπερείδης (fr. 239 Blass) δὲ καὶ Δημοσθένης[80] ἐπ' ἀλεκτρυόνων τὸ κοκκύζειν εἶπον

[80] Probably a confused reference to D. 54.9, where the verb used is in fact ἀείδω, raising the possibility that the citation of Hyperides (a passage known from no other source) is also in error.

("and you could say that eagles klazein, cranes klangazein (with klangê ('a clangor') applied to both), hawks rhoizein, and cocks sing and cuckoos kokkyzein. But Hyperides (fr. 239 Blass) and Demosthenes said kokkyzein in reference to roosters")

– Hsch. α 1763 = Phot. α 549 ᾄδειν· ἐπὶ τῶν ἀλεκτρυόνων λέγουσιν Ἀττικοί· κοκκύζειν δὲ οὔ φασιν ἐπ' αὐτῶν, πλὴν μωκώμενοί τινα ξένον ("to sing: Attic-speakers use the word in reference to roosters; and they do not say kokkyzein in reference to them except when they are mocking a foreigner").

Interpretation As anyone who has lived in the vicinity of a rooster is aware, they are in fact natural time-keepers, announcing the arrival of the day and singing occasionally thereafter until sundown; cf. fr. 279 "just like the Persian rooster, all voice, making noise at every hour"; Ar. Nu. 4; V. 100–1; Ec. 390–1; Pl. Com. fr. 191 τὸν ἀλεκτρυόνα τὸν ᾠδόν ("the rooster who sings"); Men. fr. 132.1 ἀλεκτρυών τις ἐκεκράγει μέγα ("some rooster called loudly"); Heraclid. Com. fr. 1.1–2 Ἀλεκτρυόνα τὸν τοῦ Φιλίππου παραλαβὼν / ἀωρὶ κοκκύζοντα ("after catching Philip's Rooster crowing early"); Plin. Nat. 10.46; Latin gallinicia ("dawn", but literally "cocks' crows"). Whoever the subject of ἀνέχονται are, they dislike the noise that roosters produce. Kock (comparing Ath. 12.518d) offered the wild guess that the reference was to the Sybarites, who were supposedly so fond of easy living that they banned the birds from their city in order to avoid being woken up early. Perhaps the persons in question simply dislike noise of any sort. Cf. Eup. fr. 41 μή ποτε θρέψω / παρὰ Φερσεφόνῃ τοιόνδε ταῶν, ὃς τοὺς εὕδοντας ἐγείρει ("Might I never raise in Persephone's house a peacock like this, which rouses those who are asleep!").

κοκκύζοντα The verb (onomatopoeic) is one of a group that mean to make the sound in question, e. g. βαύζω ("go bow-wow!" and thus by extension "yap"; fr. 6.1; Ar. Th. 173), γρύζω ("make a peep", i. e. "say anything at all"; e. g. Ar. Eq. 294; Men. Dysc. 931), λύζω ("hiccough" and thus apparently by extension "gasp, sob"; Ar. Ach. 690), μύζω ("whine" vel sim.; Ar. Th. 231), ὀτοτύζω ("wail in lament"; e. g. Ar. Pax 1011), ῥύζω ("bark" and thus apparently by extension "express wild excitement"; Hermipp. fr. 23), τονθυρύζω ("grumble"; e. g. Ar. V. 614). See in general Perpillou 1982. 239–41, 260–3; Tichy 1983. 256–63. Lucian (Gall. 14) and Alciphron (4.13.18) pick the word up as an Attic colloquialism. For the rooster's cry as kokky, note also Heraclid. Com. fr. 1.1–2 (quoted just before this by Eustathius, who has drawn the citation from Athenaeus); Arist. HA 631^{b}8–10, 15–16, 28–9; Theoc. 7.47–8, 124–5.

τὸν ἀλεκτρυόν(α) For roosters and hens (common domestic birds), e. g. fr. 115.1–3 (Leda as a brooding hen); Ar. fr. 193; Theopomp. Com. fr. 10; Stratt. frr. 49.4; 61.1; Mnesim. fr. 4.48 (in a banquet catalogue); Ephipp. fr. 15.8

(diminutive; on sale in the Agora)), and see in general Thompson 1936. 20–6; Foster 1984. 76–7 (bone fragments attesting to their use as sacrificial animals in late 5th-century Athens); Dunbar 1995 on Ar. Av. 483–4; Arnott 2007. 9–11.

fr. 345 K.–A. (312 K.)

λόγος τις ὑπῆλθ' ἡμᾶς ἀμαθὴς συοβαύβαλος λόγος τις Eust. : λόγος ὅστις Bergk : φθόγγος τις Kock ἀμαθής Eust. : ἀσαφής Kock συοβαύβαλος Meineke ex Hsch. σ 2753 et Phot. σ 825 : συβαύβαλος Eust. : fort. συοβαυβάλιος, ὑοβαυβάλιος vel χὐοβαυβάλιος ⟨ἐστιν ἀληθῶς⟩ post συοβαύβαλος add. Bergk some sort of ignorant story from the pigpen beguiled us

Eust. p. 1761.27–8 = ii.73.44–6
βαυβᾶν τὸ κοιμᾶσθαι, οἷον (adesp. tr. fr. 165)· ἡ δὲ προὐκαλεῖτό με βαυβᾶν μετ' αὐτῆς. ὅθεν, φησί, καὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ τό· —— bauban means "to go to bed, go to sleep", for example (adesp. tr. fr. 165): "but she invited me to sleep with her". Whence, he says, also in Cratinus the passage: ——

Meter Probably anapaestic, e. g.

⟨⏑⏑⏑

for pigs") and Phot. σ 825 συοβαύβαλοι· ἐν οἷς οἱ σύες εὐνάζονται ("syobaubaloi: what pigs make their beds in"). Although the plural is used in both cases (counting against the possibility that these should be taken as further references to this line), and although the definitions offered by the lexicographers do not match what appears to be the meaning of the word in Cratinus (see below), Meineke recognized that this was sufficient ground to convert the first syllable of the paradosis συβαύβαλος into two, allowing the verse to scan as anapaestic. For the form of the first element in the compound, cf. fr. 77 συοβοιωτοί ("swine-Boeotians"), where the initial sigma is a matter of metrical necessity, as it is not here; Συοθῆραι ("Swine-Hunters", the title of a poem by Stesichorus); E. fr. 495.29 συοφόνος ("boar-slaying"); Call. Dian. 216 συοκτόνος ("boar-slaying"); Cerc. fr. 4.14, p. 204 Powell συοπλουτοσύνη ("swine-wealth"); AP 11.194.3 (Lucill.) συοφόντης ("boar-slaying"); J. BJ 1.21.13 συοτρόφος ("swine-feeding").[81] Hesychius and Photius also appear to believe that συοβαύβαλοι is a substantive rather than an adjective, and what is wanted here may thus be either συοβαυβάλιος or ὑοβαυβάλιος.[82]

Citation context From a wandering discussion of unusual vocabulary, sparked by the word ἐφόλκαιον at Od. 14.350, drawn from Aristophanes of Byzantium (fr. 15). Similar material (not necessarily from the same source) is preserved at:

- Antiatt. β 23 βαυβᾷν· ἀντὶ τοῦ καθεύδειν. Εὐριπίδης Συλεῖ (fr. 694)· βαυβῶμεν εἰσελθόντες. ἀπόμορξαι σέθεν / τὰ δάκρυα. Κάνθαρος Μηδείᾳ (fr. 3)· βαυβήσομεν ("baubain: in place of 'to sleep'. Euripides in Syleus (fr. 694): 'Let's go in and go to bed; wipe off your tears'. Cantharus in Mêdeia (fr. 3): 'we'll go to bed'")
- Hsch. β 353 βαυβᾷ· κοιμίζει ("baubai: he/she/it goes to bed")
- Hsch. β 354 βαυβᾶν· καθεύδειν ("bauban: to go to sleep").

Interpretation Meineke, comparing the mention of a συβωτικὸν (μέλος) ("swineherd's song") at Poll. 4.56, thought that the reference was to a crude, unmelodious song with which a swineherd might lull his animals to sleep. But a speech, argument or tale (λόγος) is in question, not a song, and συοβαύβαλος (or whatever is to be printed at the end of the line; see Text) is most easily understood as expanding on ἀμαθής by offering the same sense in a more colorful way. This is thus a λόγος crude enough to hail from a pigpen (cf. English "barnyard humor")—which is to say that whoever produced it belongs there.[83] Because the action is set in the past (aor. ὑπῆλθ(ε)), "we" (ἡμᾶς) does not necessarily mean the characters onstage, but might refer e. g. to the Athenian Assembly instead.

[81] Compounds in συο- are mostly Hellenistic and later, whereas the earliest compounds of σῦς begin in συ- and thus lack the -ο- characteristic of most Greek compounds; cf. Myc. su-qo-ta = συβώτης ("swineherd"); Il. 11.679 = Od. 14.101 συβόσιον ("herd of swine"); συφορβός, "swine-herd" (e. g. Il. 21.282; Od. 21.189).

[82] Cf. ὑομουσία at Ar. Eq. 986.

For the indefinite τις used to make it clear that this was something like a λόγος but perhaps not fully deserving of the name, see Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 102.5.

For ὑπέρχομαι ("come secretly, sneak up") in the sense "beguile" (LSJ s. v. III), e. g. Ar. Eq. 269;[84] E. El. 747–8 δοκὼ κενὴ / ὑπῆλθέ μ' (which together with this verse is enough to show that LSJ is wrong to restrict use of the verb with this meaning to persons). Luppe compares Il. 7.215 = 20.44 Τρῶας δὲ τρόμος αἰνὸς ὑπήλυθε γυῖα ἕκαστον. For other verbs to which the prefix ὑπο- adds the sense "secretly" in comedy, cf. Ar. V. 465 ὕπειμι, "sneak up on"; Av. 1011 ὑπαποκινέω, "move off secretly"; Th. 424 ὑποίγνυμι, "open secretly"; Ec. 284 ὑπαποτρέχω, "run away secretly"; Men. Sik. 208 ὑπαναδύομαι, "withdraw secretly"; Macho 257 ὑπεκτρώγω, "secretly gnaw away". The presence of a large number of such verbs in Second Sophistic authors may suggest that they were felt to be typically Attic, e. g. Luc. Lex. 10 ὑποβδύλλω, "fart secretly"; DMort. 16.3 ὑποπρίω, "gnash secretly"; Plu. Cat.Mi. 15.3 ὑπομέμφομαι, "blame secretly"; Lys. 11.5 ὑπεκπλέω, "sail out secretly"; Tim. 18.1 ὑποπορεύομαι, "go secretly"; Mor. 642b ὑπεκδιδράσκω, "escape secretly"; Ael. NA 5.3 ὑπανερπύζω, "creep up secretly".

ἀμαθής refers not to stupidity but to ignorance (esp. Ar. Ra. 1445 ἀμαθέστερόν πως εἰπὲ καὶ σαφέστερον, "Say it less learnedly somehow—and clearer!"), although the two qualities can be combined in the same person, as at Ar. Nu. 842 ἀμαθὴς εἶ καὶ παχύς ("you're ignorant and a blockhead"). At Archipp. fr. 51, ἀμαθὴς σοφός (~ "an uneducated genius") is thus a paradox matching δίκαιος ἄδικος. See in general Dover 1974. 122–3.

---

[83] For "swinish"—the English word comes from the same Indo-European root—as a comic by-word for "ignorant", see Ar. Nu. 1001 with Σ^{RV} = Suda (1) τ 1135 ~ (2) υ 125; Crates Com. fr. 6 ὗς διὰ ῥόδων (literally "a pig through roses", but glossed by the authorities that cite the words "in reference to those who are stupid and uneducated"); LSJ s. v. ὗς I.3 (missing the point on Crates Com. fr. 6 [above], which is glossed "a bull in a china-shop").

[84] LSJ s. v. III.2 also cites Ar. Eq. 459, but most editors rightly follow R in reading ἐπῆλθες rather than ὑπῆλθες there.

συοβαύβαλος is < ὗς ("pig") + *βαυβαλ-, which is otherwise known from a cluster of colloquial Attic vocabulary in βαυβ- or βαυκ-:[85] βαυβαλίζω ("put to sleep; nurse"; cited by the Antiatticist in Alex. fr. 231, doubtless in defense of the word against someone who claimed that it was not legitimate Attic usage; see Arnott 1996 ad loc.); βαυβάω ("sleep"; see the passages cited by Eustathius and the Antiatticist in Citation context); βαυκαλάω ("lull to sleep"; called an Atticism at Moer. β 26 and accordingly picked up by Lucian's Lexiphanes (Lex. 11);[86] note also Hsch. β 360 ~ Phot. β 102 = Suda β 193 + Phot. β 103, all presumably drawn originally from a now-lost Attic lexicographer); καταβαυκαλίζω ("lull to sleep"; Ar. fr. 971, and cf. καταβαυκάλησις, "lullaby", at Ath. 14.618e).

fr. 346 K.–A. (308 K.) = test. 26

$\Sigma^{RV\Gamma}$ Ar. Pax 741 αἰνίττεται ταῦτα εἰς Εὔπολιν (test. *19) (Dobree : Εὐριπίδην Σ), ὃς ἐποίησε τὸν Ἡρακλέα πεινῶντα καὶ Διόνυσον δειλὸν καὶ Δία μοιχὸν καὶ δοῦλον κλαίοντα. τινές φασι καὶ εἰς Κρατῖνον αἰνίττεσθαι ὡς τοιαῦτα ποιοῦντα δράματα. ἐπεπόλασε δὲ τότε ταῦτα τὰ λήμματα. καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Ἀριστοφάνης ὡς γαστρίμαργον τὸν Ἡρακλέα κωμῳδεῖ καὶ ἐν Ὄρνισι (1583–1692) καὶ ἐν Αἰολοσίκωνι (fr. 11). καὶ ἐν τοῖς Σφηξὶ (60) περὶ τούτων φησί, τοῦ τε Ἡρακλέους καὶ τοῦ δούλου· ἐπεπόλαζε γὰρ ὡς ἔοικε τότε ταῦτα, Ἡρακλῆς πεινῶν καὶ Διόνυσος δειλὸς καὶ μοιχὸς Ζεὺς ὥστε$^{V\Gamma}$ καὶ αὐτοὺς δοκεῖν ἄχθεσθαι. Κρατῖνος· ὑπὸ δ' Ἡρακλέους πεινῶντος ἄγει (Σ^{RV} : ἄγειν Σ^{Γ} : ἀεὶ Bergk) καὶ σκώπτοντος ταῦτα (Σ^{R} : ταῦτα καὶ σκώπτοντος $\Sigma^{V\Gamma}$: σκωπτομένου τὰ ⟨τοια⟩ῦτα Luppe) † οὐ βιωτόν ἐστι$^{RV\Gamma}$

This is an oblique reference to Eupolis (test. *19) (thus Dobree : "Euripides" Σ), who wrote about Heracles as hungry, and Dionysus as a coward, and Zeus as a seducer and a wailing slave. Some authorities say that the reference is to Cratinus, as writing plays of this sort. These themes were fashionable at the time. Aristophanes himself in fact mocks Heracles as a glutton both in Birds (1583–1605) and in Aiolosikôn (fr. 11). He also discusses these matters, that is Heracles and the slave, in his Wasps (59–60); for these (themes) were fashionable at the time, so it seems, hungry Heracles, and [85] kappa and beta are so easily confused in minuscule that it seems likely that all this vocabulary should be regularized in one direction or the other, although whether βαυβ- or βαυκ- is right is unclear.

---

[86] Pace LSJ s. v. "wrongly said to be Att(ic) by Moer(is)", the judgment presumably reflecting the lack of any additional positive evidence for the thesis, which is much too high a bar to set in cases of this sort (and note the Antiatticist's defense of βαυβαλίζω).

cowardly Dionysus and Zeus the seducer, with the result that[VΓ] they themselves seem oppressed [by them]. Cratinus: b u t b y a h u n g r y H e r a c l e s h e b r i n g s (Σ^{RV} : "to bring" Σ^{Γ} : "perpetually" Bergk) a n d o n e m a k i n g t h e s e m o c k i n g c o m m e n t s (thus Σ^{R} : "these things and mocking" $\Sigma^{V\Gamma}$: "being mocked thus" Luppe) † i t ' s u n l i v e a b l e[RVΓ]

Meter Kassel–Austin (breaking with Meineke and Kock) implicitly treat this as anapaestic dimeter, with the second verse marked as corrupt.

⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ––⏑⏑–
––––– –⏑† –⏑–⏑–×

But the words—the order of some of which vary in the manuscripts—make no sense, and there is no obvious way to restore them, as Kassel–Austin themselves concede ("sententiam vix posse restitui"; see Text). It is accordingly better to print the text with extended spacing and to acknowledge that it is incurably corrupt and perhaps lacunose.

Discussion Porson 1821. lx; Bergk 1838. 287; Meineke 1839 II.224; Wilamowitz 1870. 38; Kock 1880 I.102–3; Luebke 1883. 45; Goebel 1915. 61; Wilamowitz 1922. 56 n. 2; Luppe 1967. 399–400; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text See Meter. Any attempt to restore the text must be treated as largely speculative. Bergk (followed in part by Goebel) offered ὑπὸ δ' Ἡρακλέους πεινώτος ἀεὶ / ταὐτὰ καὶ σκώπτοντος οὐ βιωτόν ἐστιν. Kock offered ἀεὶ λαιμάττοντός τε ⟨βόεια⟩ / οὐκ ἔστι βιωτὸν ἔτ' ⟨ἀνθρώποις⟩ (better described as creative writing than as an effort at emendation). Wilamowitz suggested first ὑπὸ δ' Ἡρακλέας πεινῶντας ἄγειν / καὶ κάπτοντας ταῦτ' οὐ Βοιώτιόν ἐστιν;, and then later ὑπὸ δ' Ἡρακλέας πεινῶντας ἄγειν, / τοῦτ' οὐ Βοιώτιόν ἐστιν; (del. καὶ κάπτοντας), both of which are far from the paradosis. Luppe proposed ἀεὶ καὶ σκωπτομένου τὰ ⟨τοια⟩ῦτα / οὐκ ἔστι βιωτόν (once again very far from the paradosis).

The Aldine version of the scholia to Aristophanes read οὐ Βοιωτόν (sc. rather than οὐ βιωτόν) at the very end of the fragment, leading Porson to suggest emending to συοβοιωτῶν ("swine-Boeotians"; cf. fr. 77).

Citation context A series of connected and to some extent overlapping notes on Ar. Pax 741–4 τούς θ' Ἡρακλέας τοὺς μάττοντας κἀεὶ πεινῶντας ἐκείνους / τοὺς φεύγοντας κἀξαπατῶντας καὶ τυπτομένους ἐπίτηδες / ἐξήλασ' ἀτιμώσας πρῶτος, καὶ τοὺς δούλους παρέλυσεν / οὓς ἐξῆγον κλάοντας ἀεί ("and he first dishonored and drove off the well-known Heracleses who were kneading cakes and always hungry and in flight and deceptive and deliberately beaten, and he released the slaves they always brought on wailing"; the proper order of the lines is disputed, and they are cited here as transmitted), where the chorus continue their account of their poet's services to the Athenian theatrical scene and thus to the Athenian people generally. The first section of the note (αἰνίττεται … δούλον κλαίοντα), like many Aristophanic scholia, was taken over as an entry in the Suda (μ 291). R's version of the text is (as often) much abbreviated.

Interpretation To the extent that any sense can be extracted from the words the scholion preserves, this would appear to be criticism of someone—probably another comic poet—for using the same sort of allegedly tired, trite humor that is rejected in the parabasis of Aristophanes' Peace (quoted in Citation context). The target cannot be identified, and there is no particular reason to think that either Aristophanes or Eupolis (against whom Cratinus competed only in the last five years or so of his career) is in question. Presumably from a parabasis.

For Heracles as glutton in comedy, e. g. Epich. fr. 18; Ar. Av. 567 with Dunbar 1995 ad loc., 1583–1692; Lys. 928; Ra. 62–5, 107, 549–76; Phryn. Com. fr. 24; Mnesim. fr. 2 (from Bousiris); Eub. fr. 6; Alex. fr. 140) and in satyr play (E. fr. 691; Ion TrGF 19 F 29; cf. E. Alc. 749–60); and see in general Galinsky 1972. 81–100; Lada-Richards 1999. 193–9; Olson 2007. 40–1.

πεινῶντος For the distinction between πεῖνα (which is bearable if unpleasant and is primarily an internal condition) and λιμός (which is deadly and is imposed from outside), see fr. 349.1 n. The verb can be used to refer both to an immediate desire to eat (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 14.3; Ar. V. 777; Metag. fr. 2.2) and to being chronically short of food ("starving"; e. g. Ar. Pax 1312; Pl. 595 εἴτε τὸ πλουτεῖν εἴτε τὸ πεινῆν βέλτιον, "whether being rich or being hungry"—i. e. "being poor"—is better"; Philem. fr. 88.2; Diph. fr. 97.2 ἢ φυγάδος ἢ πεινῶντος ἢ μαστιγίου, "either a fugitive or a hungry person or a criminal"; Pl. R. 521a πτωχοὶ καὶ πεινῶντες, "beggars and hungry people", i. e. "those who cannot afford to buy enough food"). Comedy does not appear to use the word or its cognates in the extended sense "craving" (LSJ s. v. πεινάω II.2, and add to the references collected there Pl. Phlb. 52a πείνας … τοῦ μανθάνειν; Antisth. fr. 117.17 Caizzi πεινῶσι χρημάτων).

Although σκώπτω can take an external accusative (generally of the person mocked, e. g. Cephisod. fr. 1; Ar. Nu. 540; Antiph. fr. 142.9), ταῦτα is more likely an internal object of σκώπτοντος ("making these mocking remarks"—i. e. the sort that render life unbearable for the audience). Alternatively, it might be the object of ἄγει/ἄγειν.

οὐ βιωτόν ἐστι appears to be an Attic colloquialism (e. g. Antiph. fr. 188.10; Anaxandr. fr. 53.9; Men. Dysc. 160; Pl. Cri. 47d, e; Smp. 216a; D. 21.120); cf. ἀβίωτόν ἐστι (slightly grander and thus acceptable in tragedy?) at e. g. E. HF 1257; Ion 670; X. HG 4.4.6; Pl. Mx. 246d; Aeschin. 3.149.

fr. 347 K.–A. (352 K.)

Ψύρα τὸν Διόνυσον ἄγοντες

Ψύρα Suda : ψυρᾷ St.Byz. : ψυψυρα Phot.

treating (pl.) Dionysus like Psyra

Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 384.11–14 ≈ St.Byz. p. 704.1–5
Στράβων ἐν τῷ ιδ΄ (14.645)· τὰ Ψύρα ἀπὸ πεντήκοντα σταδίων τῆς ἄκρας. λαμβάνεται δὲ ὄνομα ἐπὶ εὐτελείᾳ διὰ τὸ εὐτελεστάτην εἶναι τὴν νῆσον. Κρατῖνος· ——. καὶ ἐν Νεμέσει (fr. 119)· Ψύρα τε τὴν Σπάρτην ἄγεις

Strabo in his Book 14 (14.645): Psyra (neut. pl.) is fifty stades away from the cape.[87] The name is used to refer to meanness, because of the fact that the island is extremely mean. Cratinus: ——. Also in Nemesis (fr. 119): and you treat Sparta like Psyra

Phot. ined. ≈ Suda ψ 155
—— ἡ παροιμία παρὰ Κρατίνῳ. τὰ δὲ Ψύρα εὐτελὴς νῆσός ἐστι καὶ μικρὰ πλησίον Χίου μὴ δυναμένη οἶνον ἐνεγκεῖν. λέγομεν οὖν τὴν παροιμίαν ἐπὶ τῶν ἐν συμποσίῳ ἀνακειμένων καὶ μὴ πινόντων. λέλεκται δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν εὐτέλειαν σημαινόντων

——: The proverb is found in Cratinus. Psyra is a small, mean island near Chios which is incapable of producing wine. We therefore use the proverb in reference to those who recline at a symposium and do not drink. But it also said in reference to those who show signs of meanness Meter The fragment scans ⏑⏑–⏑⏑–⏑⏑–× and could be accommodated in iambs, anapaests or dactyls.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.207–8; Leutsch 1839. 465–6; Kock 1880 I.114–15; Lelli 2006. 131

Citation context Both citations appear to be drawn ultimately from a paroemiographic source. The material in Herodian is closely related to Σ^{HMQR} Od. 3.171 (on the words νήσου ἐπὶ Ψυρίης), where the mention of Cratinus seems to have dropped out of the text as the result of a saute du même a même: νησίδιον μικρὸν πρὸ τῆς Χίου ἐστὶ τὰ Ψύρα, ἀπέχον Χίου σταδίους ὀγδοήκοντα, ἔχον λιμένα νεῶν εἴκοσι. Ἀλκμάν (PMG 124)·

πάρ θ' ἰαρὸν σκόπελον παρά τε Ψύρα.

⟨Κρατῖνος·

Ψύρα⟩ τὸν Διόνυσον ἄγοντες

[87] I.e. Cape Melaina on the island of Chios.

οἷον ἐν μηδενὶ αὐτὸν τιθέμενοι, διὰ τὸ λυπρὸν τῆς νήσου ("Psyra is a small island off of Chios, eighty stades distant from Chios, with a harbor big enough for twenty ships. Alcman (PMG 124):

alongside both the holy promontary and Psyra.

⟨Cratinus:⟩

treating Dionysus ⟨like Psyra⟩").

Eust. p. 1462.46–9 = i.120.2–7 quotes the same material as the Odyssey scholion and adds: ἤγουν ὡς οἷον ἐν οὐδενὶ τιθέμενοι τὸν Διόνυσον. καὶ ἔστι παροιμία τό· Ψύρα τὸν Διόνυσον, διὰ τὴν τῆς νήσου λυπρότητα ("i. e. as it were placing Dionysus in no regard. There is also a proverb that runs: 'Dionysus as Psyra', on account of the wretchedness of the island")

Erbse traces the note in Phot. = Suda (from the common source generally referred to as Σ´´) to Paus.Gr. ψ 5, who was in turn likely drawing on the paroemiographer Tarrhaios (i. e. Lucillus of Tarrha; 1st century CE).

Note also CGFPR 342.26 Ψύρα· νησίδιον μικ[ρόν] ("Psyra: a tiny little island"; from a glossary of comic words), which may well be another reference specifically to this fragment and to the tradition of scholarship associated with it; Hsch. ψ 278 Ψυρίη[.]· νῆσος μικρά, ("Psyriê[.]: a small island"), 279 ψύριος· ἀκάθαρτος, ἀπὸ Ψύρων τῆς νήσου ("psyrios: uncleansed, from the island of Psyra").

Interpretation The ancient sources have little more to say about Psyra/Psyria (modern Psara; mentioned also at Od. 3.171; D. fr. 45 Baiter–Sauppe ap. Σ Od 3.171 (no context)) than that it was a thoroughly insignificant place, although Strabo goes on to observe that there was a city there. The island remains rocky, treeless and sparsely inhabited today. Cf. Hsch. ψ 280 ψυρὶς γῆ· λυπρὰ χέρσος ("psyris land: dry, miserable territory").

Ψύρα might be a preposition-less accusative of direction of motion ("to Psyra"), in which case ἄγω could have its basic common sense "carry, bring" (LSJ s. v. A.I; thus "Bringing Dionysus to Psyra"). That interpretation works much less well with fr. 119 (also preserved by Hdn. ≈ St.Byz.), however, and (as Kassel–Austin observe in their note there) the verb more likely means "treat, honor" (LSJ s. v. A.V), so that Ψύρα … ἄγειν is "to treat meanly, to treat as contemptible", as Eustathius says. For the image, cf. Zenob. 5.21 Μυκώνιος γείτων· αὕτη τέτακται ἐπὶ τῶν διαβεβλημένων ἐπὶ γλισχρότητι καὶ μικροπρεπείᾳ, παρὰ τὴν σμικρότητα τῆς Μύκωνος νήσου καὶ εὐτέλειαν ("a Mykonian neighbor: this (proverb) is applied to those who are disparaged for stinginess and pettiness, by reference to the small size and meanness of the island of Mykonos") and the dismissive mention of a "puppydog from Seriphos"—i. e. a trivial creature from an even more trivial place—at Ar. Ach. 542 with Olson 2002 ad loc.

τὸν Διόνυσον Perhaps supposed abuse of the god himself is in question, as in Dionysalexandros. But it is easier to think that the name is used metonymically, as at e. g. Eup. fr. 6; Alex. fr. 225.2 with Arnott 1996 ad loc., and that "treating Dionysus like Psyra" means "refusing to drink", i. e. at a symposium, as the common source that lies behind Phot. ≈ Suda maintains.

fr. 348 K.–A. (355 K.)

ἀνελκταῖς ὀφρύσι σεμνόν ἀνελκταῖς Bekker : ἀνελταῖς Phryn. : ἀνέλκειν Phot.

haughty with raised eyebrows

Phryn. PS p. 3.1–2
—— Ἀττικῶς αὐτὸ καὶ σεμνῶς Κρατῖνος εἶπεν

——: Cratinus said it in a commendable Attic fashion

Phot. α 1834
—— εἴρηται παρὰ Κρατίνῳ

——: the word is used in Cratinus

Meter Uncertain. The fragment scans ⏑––⏑⏑⏑–× and could be accommodated in iambic trimeter, e. g.

⟨×–⟩⏑– –|⏑⏑⏑|– ×⟨–⏑–⟩

But the language and syntax are odd (see Interpretation), hence presumably Kassel–Austin's decision to place it in this section in their collection, implicitly identifying it as some other meter.[88]

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.214; Kock 1880 I.115

Text Phrynichus' ἀνελταῖς is nonsense, and Bekker combined the reading transmitted in the PS with a kappa borrowed from Photius' ἀνέλκειν (a good form, but difficult to construe) to produce the plausible if otherwise unattested adjective ἀνελκταῖς (< ἀνέλκω).

[88] Kock takes this to be part of an anapaestic tetrameter, but it is unclear how the fragment can be made to scan in that case.

Citation context The reference in Photius is almost certainly descended from Phrynichus, making these two separate witnesses to the text of the Praeparatio Sophistica rather than evidence that more than one ancient lexicographer picked up the verse in Cratinus. Note also

- Synag. B α 1349 ἀνέλκειν τὰς ὀφρῦς· μέγα φρονεῖν καὶ ὑπερήφανον ("to draw up one's eyebrows: to be haughty and overweening"), which de Borries identified as Phryn. PS fr. *184 and which on that thesis must be part of the same original note
- Poll. 2.49 (a discussion of eyebrows that includes fr. 470) καὶ τὰς ὀφρῦς αἴρων ὁ ὑπερήφανος, καὶ πάλιν τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνασπῶν ἢ τὰς ὀφρῦς αἰωρῶν ἢ τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνέλκων, ἢ τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνατείνων ὑπὲρ τὰ νέφη ("and the overweening man is one who raises his eyebrows, and alternatively pulls up his eyebrows or lifts his eyebrows or draws his eyebrows up beyond the clouds")
- Hsch. ο 1991 = Phot. ο 721 = Suda ο 1024 ὀφρυόεντες· ὑπερήφανοι ("ophryoentes: overweening (pl.)")
- Phot. ο 724 ὀφρυόεις· ὑπερήφανος ("ophryoeis: overweening").

Interpretation Apparently said of an individual man (hence masc. sing. σεμνόν). Meineke (unwisely followed by LSJ s. v. ἀνελκτός and Gomme–Sandbach) offered the wild suggestion that the reference might be to Pericles. If ἀνελκταῖς is right (see Text), it is a hapax, and the combination of that with use of the dative of respect suggests elevated style and thus something other than iambic trimeter; see Meter.

ἀνελκταῖς ὀφρύσι For raised eyebrows as a sign of arrogance (often mixed with other unattractive emotions or attitudes) in comedy, cf. Ar. Ach. 1069–70 (a self-important messenger); Pax 395 (a haughty politician);[89] Alex. frr. 16.1–2 with Arnott 1996 ad loc.; 121.5–7; Amphis fr. 13.3 (σεμνῶς ἐπηρκὼς τὰς ὀφρῦς; of Plato); Men. Sik. with Gomme–Sandbach 1973 ad loc.; frr. 37; 349.1–2; Diph. fr. 86.4 (of a drinker); Bato fr. 5.13 (of philosophers); adesp. com. frr. *339 ἐξωφρυμένοι ("men with elevated eyebrows"); *577 ἀνωφρυασμένος ἄνθρωπος ("a supercilious person"); and elsewhere E. fr. dub. 1113a.3; X. Smp. 3.10; Demad. fr. 75.15–16 (Critias); D. 19.314; anon. FGE 1752 ὀφρυανασπασίδαι ("sons of eyebrow-raisers"; of Stoic philosophers); Plu. Mor. 68d, 657c; Hsch. α 473 ἀγεσόφρυν[90]· τὰς ὀφρῦς ἐπαίροντα ("eyebrow-drawer: someone who raises his eyebrows"; presumably to be treated as another comic adespoton).

---

[89] Note also Ar. Nu. 363 σεμνοπροσωπεῖς ("you make a haughty face"; of Socrates), which is most likely an oblique way of saying "you keep your eyebrows raised".

[90] Tribulato 2015 misses the word.

That this way of describing a haughty look was regarded as typically Attic is suggested not just by Phrynichus' Ἀττικῶς in reference to the line of Cratinus, but also by the repeated use of the idiom in the Atticizing Second Sophistic authors Alciphron (1.13.2; 2.5.2; 4.7.1) and Lucian (e. g. Tim. 54; Bis Acc. 28).

σεμνός is < σέβομαι ("feel σέβας", a sense of reverent awe) and can mean either "deserving of σέβας" (e. g. Ar. Pax 974 σεμνοτάτη, of a goddess; Antiph. fr. 101.4–5 "How is it not σεμνός?" to have one's feet massaged by soft, pretty hands, the point being that it is; Aristopho fr. 7.4 tuna shoulders are σεμνός food)[91] or "asserting a claim to σέβας" and thus in comedy generally "full of oneself, haughty" (e. g. Call. Com. fr. 15.1 "Why are you σεμνή and so proud?"; Ar. Nu. 48; V. 627).

fr. 349 K.–A. (317 K.)

ἔσθιε καὶ σῇ γαστρὶ δίδου χάριν, ὄφρα σὲ Λιμὸς ἐχθαίρῃ, Κοννᾶς δὲ πολυστέφανός σε φιλήσῃ

2 πολυστέφανος Σ : φιλοστέφανος Suda σε φιλήσῃ Suda^{A} : σε φιλήσει Suda^{FGVM} : σε νικήσει Σ : νικήσῃ Bergk : νικηθῇ Luppe

Eat and show favor to your stomach, so that Famine might hate you, and much-garlanded Konnas might love you!

$\Sigma^{VE\Gamma^{3}\Theta M}$ Ar. Eq. 534 ≈ Suda κ 2027
ὁ Κοννᾶς αὐλητὴς ἦν καὶ μέθυσος, ὃς εἰς συμπόσια παρῄει συνεχῶς ἐστεμμένος. οὗτος Ὀλυμπιονίκης γενόμενος καὶ πολλάκις στεφανωθεὶς πενιχρὸς ἦν μηδὲν ἔχων ἀλλ' ἢ τὸν κότινον, ἐφ' οὗ Κρατῖνος εἶπεν· ——. λέγει δὲ αὐτὸν τοσαῦτα νικήσαντα μηδέποτε τετιμῆσθαι. ἡ δὲ παροιμία· "στέφανον μὲν ἔχων, δίψῃ δ' ἀπολωλώς." καὶ πάλιν· "Δελφὸς ἀνήρ, στέφανον μὲν ἔχων, δίψει δ' ἀπολωλώς." πρὸς τὸν Κρατῖνον δὲ καὶ τοῦτο, ὅτι μέθυσός ἐστιν

Konnas was an aulos-player and a drunk who always appeared at symposia wearing a garland. Although this fellow was an Olympic victor and was often garlanded, he was impoverished and owned nothing other than his (crown of) wild olive, in reference to which/whom Cratinus said: ——. And (Cratinus) says that, although Konnas was victorious so many times, he was never shown respect. And the proverb: "Wearing a garland but dead of thirst." And again: "A man from Delphi, wearing a garland but dead of thirst". But this is also said in regard to Cratinus, that he is a drunk

[91] Cf. Anaxandr. fr. 34.3, where a boastful fisherman's claim that delicious food "is snatched σεμνῶς from a pan" must be an awkward way of saying "is snatched in a way that reflects how awesome it is". At Anaxandr. fr. 51 ("marjoram mixed with coriander σεμνύνει saltfish"), the point might be either that the spices really make the main ingredient worth eating or that they lend it an attitude such a fundamentally pedestrian dish has no business assuming.

Meter Dactylic hexameter.

– ⏑⏑ – – – ⏑ | ⏑ – ⏑⏑ – ⏑⏑ – –
– – – – – | ⏑ | ⏑ – ⏑⏑ – ⏑⏑ – –

Discussion Fritzsche 1835. 241; Bergk 1838. 71; Kock 1880 I.105; Crusius 1889. 40; Headlam 1899. 5; Marzullo 1959. 150–1; Luppe 1967. 400–2; Biles 2011. 145

Assignment to known plays Attributed to Cheirônes by Crusius, to Archilochoi by Fritzsche and to Euneidae by Bergk.

Text Λιμός is personified in the Hesiodic verse echoed in 1 (see Interpretation) and is thus best capitalized in both places.

In 2, the scholion's πολυστέφανος is supported by πολλάκις στεφανωθείς and τοσαῦτα νικήσαντα in the discussion that surrounds the quotation. The Suda's φιλοστέφανος must reflect the influence of φιλήσῃ/φιλήσει at the end of the line.

At the end of 2, the subjunctive φιλήσῃ of Suda[A] is needed after ὄφρα in 1, which governs both verbs. φιλήσει in the other manuscripts of the Suda is a simple error to be traced to a time when ῃ and ει were pronounced alike. φιλήσῃ echoes φιλέῃ in Hesiod (see Interpretation) and is thus most likely right, with νικήσει in the scholion representing the influence of πολυστέφανος (sc. because garlands suggest victory). The iota in νικέω is long, and Bergk's νικήσῃ (simply restoring the subjunctive; see above) and Luppe's νικηθῇ (reversing the idea, so as to make the remark more amusing; "may Konnas lose") accordingly require expelling σε from the text.

Citation context A note on Aristophanes' mocking description of Cratinus (test. 9) at Eq. 534 ἀλλὰ γέρων ὢν περιέρρει, ὥσπερ Κοννᾶς, στέφανον μὲν ἔχων αὖον, δίψῃ δ' ἀπολωλώς ("but although he's an old man he wanders about, just like Konnas, wearing a dry garland but dead of thirst") probably drawn from a catalogue of kômôidoumenoi. Hsch. κ 3530 is a much-abbreviated version of the same material.

Interpretation A reworking of Hes. Op. 299–300 ἐργάζευ, Πέρση, δῖον γένος, ὄφρα σε Λιμὸς / ἐχθαίρῃ, φιλέῃ δέ σ' ἐυστέφανος Δημήτηρ ("Work, Perses, illustrious kin, so that Hunger might hate you, and well-garlanded Demeter might love you!"), with an invitation to gluttony substituted for the Hesiodic call to hard work (sc. to earn one's keep), and Konnas offered as a surprise substitute for Demeter in the second half of 2.

Konnas (PAA 581457; Stephanis #1477) is known only from the material cited above, which shows that he was a bon vivant and could be reasonably thought to have money, making it funny to pretend that he did not and thus that he chased party-invitations out of desperate hunger and thirst.[92] Cf. the reference to the allegedly ravenous Lampon in fr. 62.1–2. That Konnas was an old man in 424 BCE, when Aristophanes' Knights was staged (thus PAA s. v.) is not apparent from the ancient evidence.[93] The reason Konnas will love the addressee, should the latter accept the advice offered in the first half of 1, is presumably that this will mean holding symposia, to which the ever-hungry Konnas will attempt to cadge an invitation.

1 σῇ γαστρὶ δίδου χάριν is a mockingly pretentious, high-style (e. g. Thgn. 1303; Pi. O. 7.89; S. Ai. 1354; E. Ph. 446) gloss on the straightforward ἔσθιε with which the line begins.

LSJ s. v. I offers three meanings for γαστήρ (etymology uncertain): (1) "paunch, belly", of the swell of a shield, vessel or the like; (2) "the belly, as craving food" (references to early epic, 4th-century prose and Theoc. 21.41); and (3) "paunch stuffed with mincemeat, sausage, haggis" (references to the Odyssey and to Ar. Nu. 409). (1) appears to be a transferred sense and ought to have been offered last. The specification "as craving food" in (2) captures an important aspect of the belly, as in this fragment (and e. g. Ar. Eq. 1208; Ec. 666; fr. 491; Alex. fr. 215; Od. 6.133, of an animal), but is too restrictive, since the word is often used as a simple anatomical term (e. g. Ar. Nu. 549; V. 1020; Lys. 1083; Alex. fr. 107.3; Il. 5.539), including for the belly-portions of other animals in gastronomic contexts, e. g. fish (Antiph. fr. 130.5; Archestr. fr. 46.6) and hares (Eub. fr. 63.6). For (3), add Ar. Eq. 1179.

Λιμός ("famine") is more extreme and dangerous than πεῖνα ("hunger", for which, see fr. 346 n.)—one suffers from πεῖνα, but dies from λιμός (e. g. Ar.

---

[92] The name is very rare, and the kômôidoumenos Konnas is therefore sometimes identified with the κιθαριστής Konnos son of Metrobius (PA 8697; PAA 581470; Stephanis #1478) who supposedly gave Socrates music-lessons (Pl. Euthd. 272c; Mx. 235e). This amounts to little more than an arbitrary guess, and the identification in any case sheds no particular light on the fragment of Cratinus. There were in fact no aulos-competitions at Olympia in this period, raising questions about the general reliability of all the information offered by the scholion.

[93] At Ar. Eq. 533–4, Cratinus is called a γέρων and is then compared to Konnas. But the point of the comparison to Konnas is that Cratinus too is entitled to wear a victory garland and likes to drink, not that both Konnas and Cratinus are old.

Ach. 1044; Pax 483; Av. 186; Antiph. fr. 86.6 "λιμός is a cure for immortality")—and is therefore consistently described in harsh and ugly terms (e. g. Il. 19.354 λιμὸς ἀτερπής; hDem. 311 λιμοῦ ὑπ' ἀργαλέης; A. Ag. 1641–2 ὁ δυσφιλὴς σκότῳ / λιμὸς ξύνοικος). πεῖνα is primarily an internal experience, whereas λιμός is imposed from without (hence identified as one of the children of Eris ("Strife") at Hes. Th. 227, along with e. g. Trouble, Griefs and Battles).

2 πολυστέφανος serves to bring out the idea that Konnas has been repeatedly successful in festival competitions. A high-style adjective (cf. ἰοστέφανος at e. g. Thgn. 250; Ar. Ach. 637 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; καλλιστέφανος at e. g. Tyrt. fr. 2.12; hDem. 251; χρυσοστέφανος at e. g. Hes. Th. 136), attested elsewhere in the classical period only at Emped. 31 B 123.8 D.–K., and here probably modeled directly on Hesiod's ἐυστέφανος; tragedy offers πολυστεφής instead (A. Eu. 39; S. OT 83).

fr. 350 K.–A. (313 K.)

ταῖς ῥαφανῖσι δοκεῖ, τοῖς δ' ἄλλοις οὐ λαχάνοισι λαχάνοισι(ν) anon.[94] : λαχάνοις Ath.[CE] Eust.

The radishes approve, but the other vegetables don't

Ath. 2.56d–e ῥαφανίδες. αὗται κέκληνται διὰ τὸ ῥᾳδίως φαίνεσθαι. καὶ ἐκτεταμένως δὲ καὶ κατὰ συστολὴν λέγεται παρὰ Ἀττικοῖς. Κρατῖνος· —— radishes (rhaphanides): they are called this because they spring up easily (rhadiôs phainesthai). In Attic the word is pronounced with either a long or a short vowel. Cratinus: ——

Meter Dactylic hexameter.
–⏑⏑ –⏑⏑ –|– –– –⏑⏑ ––

Discussion Meineke 1814. 12; Meineke 1839 II.177–8; Meineke 1847 I.58; Kock 1880 I.104; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Storey 2011. 415; Sofia 2016. 85

[94] Kassel–Austin cite "Anon. ap. Allg. Lit.-Ztg. 1813. 939" for the emendation. We have been unable to trace the reference.

Text The paradosis λαχάνοις must represent a normalization of the poetic dative plural ending (see fr. 317 n.), which fills out the line and was first suggested here by an anonymous early 19th-century German scholar.

Kock thought that the datives ῥαφανῖσι and λαχάνοισι depended not on δοκεῖ but on a verb such as χαίρειν or ἥδεσθαι in a lost line preceding or following this one, thus e. g. "he seems ⟨to enjoy⟩ radishes but not vegetables". Such an argument is almost always possible, but ought to be pursued only when the preserved text is impossible to construe—which is not the case here.

Citation context A fragment of ancient lexicographic scholarship preserved in a long catalogue of appetizers (including fruits, vegetables and nuts) in Athenaeus Book 2 (extant only in an epitomized version). Eup. fr. 338; Antiph. fr. 273; Pherecr. fr. 190; and Pl. Com. fr. 186 follow, in that order. The vowel in question is the iota; see Interpretation. Eustathius p. 1220.54–5 = IV.449.7–9 (quoting the fragment of Cratinus) is drawing direct on Athenaeus and is not to be regarded as an independent witness to the text.

Interpretation δοκεῖ is frequently used in official Athenian public language to signal decisions reached by the Council or the Assembly (e. g. IG I³ 40.49; cf. its use to describe various political or quasi-political decisions in comedy at Ar. Av. 1016, 1631; Lys. 1176; Ec. 854, 986). Kaibel compared Ar. Ec. 197–8 τῷ πένητι μὲν δοκεῖ, / τοῖς πλουσίοις δὲ καὶ γεωργοῖς οὐ δοκεῖ ("the poor man approves, but the wealthy and the farmers don't"; of a proposal in the Athenian Assembly) and suggested the fragment was part of a description of an assembly of vegetables (in the marketplace (cf. Ar. V. 497 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Lys. 557; Alex. frr. 15.11–12; 47.8)? or a kitchen?).[95] ῥαφανῖσι For radishes, see also Metag. fr. 18.1; Ar. Nu. 981; fr. 264.2; Amphis fr. 26.3; Diph. fr. 87.4; Diod. Com. fr. 2.36; Thphr. HP 7.1.1–3, 2.5–6, 4.2; Char. 30.16. The iota seems normally to be long, as here.

λάχανα (< λαχαίνω, "dig", i. e. "cultivate") are vegetables and edible greens of all sorts (e. g. Hegesipp. Com. fr. 1.9). When wild—i. e. rougher—rather than cultivated varieties are in question, comedy routinely specifies the difference (Ar. Th. 456; Pl. 298; Polioch. fr. 2.6 with Olson 2007 ad loc. (= G1)). Cf. fr. 53 (a vegetable patch); Archestr. fr. 11.9 with Olson–Sens 2000 ad loc.; Gallant 1999. 115–19.

[95] But not in any case "Radishes may think so" (Storey 2011. 415).

fr. 351 K.–A. (314 K.)

ταυτὶ καὶ τολμᾷς σὺ λέγειν ῥοδοδάκτυλος οὖσα;

ταυτί Dobree : ταύτῃ Ath.

Do you (fem. sing.) actually dare to make these remarks, being rosy-toed?

Ath. 13.566e–f
καὶ ὁ Κύνουλκος· ταυτὶ … οὐ ῥοδοδάκτυλος οὖσα;, κατὰ τὸν Κρατῖνον, ἀλλὰ βολίτινον ἔχων θάτερον σκέλος, ἐκείνου τοῦ ὁμωνύμου σοι ποιητοῦ τὴν κνήμην φορῶν

And Cynulcus (responded): Do you … these remarks, not being rosy-toed, to quote Cratinus, but having a leg made of cowshit and a shin borrowed from the poet with whom you share a name?

Meter Dactylic hexameter.
– – – – – | ⏑ | ⏑ – ⏑⏑ – ⏑⏑ – –

Discussion Dobree 1820 addenda 106; Kock 1880 I.104

Text A's ταύτῃ might be the indirect object of λέγειν, but Dobree's ταυτί (an internal object of the infinitive) both restores a colloquial Attic form (see Interpretation) and makes the text read more smoothly.

Citation context Cynulcus attacks Myrtilus, who has just offered a lengthy denunciation of the Cynics for their devotion to pederasty, criticizing him in what follows for his alleged deep interest in bars and female prostitutes. The mention of "a leg made of cowshit" is an allusion to Ar. Ra. 295 (part of the description of the monstrous Empousa), while the man with whom the addressee shares a name is the late 5th-century comic poet (= his test. 2; the point is otherwise obscure). For one of the Deipnosophists introducing a form of οὐ into a poetic quotation to make it better fit his meaning, although at the price of rendering the line unmetrical, cf. Ath. 13.570e–f (Cynulcus is speaking) κατὰ τὴν Φιλεταίρου Κυνηγίδα (fr. 6)· … οὐκ οἶσθ' ὅτι / οὔκ ἐστιν ἥδιστον ἀποθανεῖν βινοῦνθ' ἅμα ("To quote Philetaerus' Kynêgis (fr. 6), 'Don't you realize that the nicest way to die is not while you're fucking?'"); 14.649c δώσω σοι οὐ χρυσέους δέκα στατῆρας, κατὰ τὸν Ποντικὸν λεσχηνευτήν ("I won't give you ten gold staters, to quote the chatterbox from Pontus" (Heraclid. Pont. Jun. SH 480)).

Interpretation A surprised or indignant reaction to a remark by a female interlocutor. For similarly formulated protests, cf. Ar. Ach. 311–12 ταῦτα δὴ τολμᾷς λέγειν / ἐμφανῶς ἤδη πρὸς ἡμᾶς;, 558 ταυτὶ σὺ τολμᾷς πτωχὸς ὢν ἡμᾶς λέγειν;, 577a οὗτος σύ, τολμᾷς πτωχὸς ὢν λέγειν τάδε;; Th. 1109 κατάρατο, τολμᾷς ἀποτανουμένη λαλῆς;; Pl. 472 ταυτὶ σὺ τολμᾷς, ὦ μιαρωτάτη, λέγειν;.

ῥοδοδάκτυλος (not attested elsewhere in comedy) is the traditional epithet of the goddess Ἠώς ("Dawn") (e. g. Il. 1.477; Od. 2.1; Hes. Op. 610),[96] and Kock, comparing Ar. Av. 1243–56 (Iris and her message from Zeus are rudely dismissed by Peisetairos) suggested that the goddess herself might be onstage. This appears to be dialogue rather than an oracle or straightforward epic parody (contrast frr. 352–3), so the speaker may well be using the meter adopted by the other character, with the rebuke in the final words of the line echoing something she has just said, like Trygaeus responding to Hierocles' oracles with his own improvised dactylic hexameters at Ar. Pax 1063–1102. Cynulcus' reference to Myrtilus' leg and shin just after he quotes this line strongly suggest that he understands ῥοδοδάκτυλος to mean "rosy-toed" rather than "rosy-fingered". Whether this was also the sense of the word in its original context is impossible to say.

τόλμα and its cognates are at best morally ambiguous terms, in comedy always referring to words or actions that go well beyond what is expected or allowed (e. g. Ar. Nu. 375, 445; Pax 182 ὦ μιαρὲ καὶ τόλμηρε κἀναίσχυντε σύ, "O foul and tolmêros and shameless man!"; Antiph. fr. 19.5; Alex. fr. 264.1); thus "recklessness, audacity" rather than the more positive "bravery, boldness". Cf. fr. *361.2 n.

ταυτί For the deictic suffix -ί (typical of colloquial Attic), cf. fr. 73.1 ὁδί, and see Lopéz Eire 1996. 71; Willi 2003. 244–5.

fr. 352 K.–A. (315 K.)

χαλκίδα κικλήσκουσι θεοί, ἄνδρες δὲ κύβηλιν

(which) the gods call a chalkis, but men a kybêlis

Hsch. κ 4380
κύβηλις· τινὲς τὴν τυροκνῆστίν φασιν. ἔπαιξεν δὲ ὁ Κρατῖνος παρὰ τό (Il. 14.291)· —— kybêlis: some authorities say it means a tyroknêstis ("cheese-grater"). And Cratinus played with (the word) by adapting (Il. 14.291): —— [96] Of Io at Bacch. 19.18.

Meter Dactylic hexameter.

– ⏑⏑ – – – ⏑ | ⏑ – – – ⏑⏑ – –

Discussion Lobeck 1829 II.863–4; Bergk 1838. 47; Meineke 1839 II.198; Kock 1880 I.104; Storey 2011. 415; Bianchi 2013. 195–6; Bianchi 2016. 380

Assignment to known plays Bergk, comparing fr. 66 (quoted in Interpretation), attributed the line to Drapetides.

Text Hesychius merely quotes the line from Homer that Cratinus is supposed to have parodied, and Lobeck reconstructed the fragment by replacing the final word with the lemma under which Hesychius quotes it.

Citation context What are likely additional traces of the same original note, but lacking the mention of Cratinus, are preserved at

- Poll. 6.89 ἴσως δὲ καὶ τυρόκνηστιν, ἣν καὶ κύβηλιν καλοῦσιν ("and perhaps also a tyroknêstis ('cheese-grater'), which they also call a kybêlis"; from a discussion of words for various culinary implements)
- Poll. 10.104 ἐκ δὲ τούτων καὶ τυρόκνηστις, ἣν καὶ κύβηλιν καλοῦσιν· ὧν ἡ μὲν τυρόκνηστις ἔστιν ἐν Πλάτωνος Ἀδώνιδι (fr. 8) καὶ ἐν Ἀριστοφάνους Αἰολοσίκωνι (fr. 7)· ——, ἡ δὲ κύβηλις ἐν Φιλήμονος Ἁρπαζομένῳ (fr. 12)· ὁρῶ μαγείρου καὶ κύβηλιν καὶ σκάφην ("and from these also tyroknêstis ('cheese-grater'), which they also call a kybêlis. Of these, tyroknêstis appears in Plato's Adônis (fr. 8) and in Aristophanes' Aiolosikôn (fr. 7): ——, while kybêlis appears in Philemon's Harpazomenos (fr. 12): I see a kybêlis and a bowl belonging to a butcher")
- Phot. κ 1151 κύβηλις· τυρόκνηστις ("kybêlis: a tyroknêstis ('cheese-grater')").

Interpretation Il. 14.291 χαλκίδα κικλήσκουσι θεοί, ἄνδρες δὲ κύμινδιν ("(which) the gods call a chalkis, but men a kymindis") describes the bird into which Sleep transforms himself to avoid being seen by Zeus. Cratinus plays with the sense of χαλκίς, which the word at the end of the line allows to be understand in retrospect as meaning "an object made of bronze" (χαλκός). This thus amounts to a highly compressed riddle, and the combination of that fact with the meter suggests that it is part of an oracle like e. g. those delivered by Hierocles at Ar. Pax 1064–79. Note also fr. 258.4–5 ὃν δὴ κεφαληγερέταν / θεοὶ καλέουσιν ("whom the gods in fact call 'Head-gatherer'"; of Pericles). For the replacement of the final word of a well-known line of serious poetry for humorous effect, cf. fr. 299.4. For the reworking of early epic poetry in comedy, see the references collected at Olson 2007. 158. For other references to the language of the gods, see Il. 1.403–4; 2.813–14; 20.74; Od. 10.305; 12.61.

In fr. 66 (from Drapetides), Cratinus refers to Lampon (PA 8996; PAA 601665; ridiculed elsewhere in comedy at Call. Com. fr. 20; Ar. Av. 521 with Dunbar 1995 ad loc.; Lysipp. fr. 6; adesp. com. fr. 1105.98, assigned by Austin to Drapetides, by Tammaro to Thraittai), a religious authority who was also one of the founders of the colony at Thurii in 444/3 BCE (Plu. Mor. 812d), as a ἀγερσικύβηλις ("kybêlis-raiser") and κυβηλιστής ("wielder of a kybêlis"), supposedly in reference to the leading role he played in sacrifice. On that basis, Bergk suggested that that fr. 352 as well referred to Lampon and belonged to Drapetides. But even if the mention of a κύβηλις here is intended as a glancing allusion to Lampon—which is nothing more than a guess—the fragment does not necessarily come from Drapetides, since Lampon was prominent in Athenian public affairs for many years.

A κύβηλις (etymology uncertain) is elsewhere said to be an ax and in particular a kind of ax associated with sacrifice; cf. Lyc. 1170 with Σ; Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 91.9 κύβηλις ὁ πέλυξ ("kybêlis: an ax"); Hsch. κ 4376 κύβηλις· μάχαιρα. ἄμεινον δὲ πέλεκυν ᾧ τὰς βοῦς καταβάλλουσι ("kybêlis: a butcher's knife; better, an ax with which they drop cows"); 4377 κυβηλίσαι· πελεκίσαι· κύβηλις γὰρ ὁ πέλεκυς ("kybêlisai: to ax; because a kybêlis is an ax"); Phot. α 146 ~ Synag. B α 109 κύβηλις γὰρ ὁ πέλεκυς ("because a kybêlis is an ax"). This translation is consistent with the only other two attestations of the word in the classical period, at Anaxipp. fr. 6.6 τὴν κύβηλιν τὴν ἀγωνιστηρίαν (obscure, but most of the fragment is a catalogue of a cook's equipment, and a τυρόκνηστις has already been mentioned in v. 2) and Philem. fr. 12 (quoted in Citation context). Why Hesychius' source (echoed in the other lexicographic material collected in Citation context) believes that the word instead means "cheese-grater" here is unclear. But there is no obvious reason why this should be true, and it is tempting to think that this is an ancient scholarly misunderstanding facilitated by what seems to have been the deliberate mantic obscurity of the line. For cheese-graters, see also Ar. V. 938, 963–6; Av. 1579; Lys. 231–2 ("a lioness on a cheese-grater" as a sexual position); Sparkes 1962. 132; Kozloff 1976. 77–9.

fr. 353 K.–A. (19 Dem.)

ὥστε δίκας τ' ἀδίκους νικᾶν ἐπὶ κέρδεσιν αἰσχροῖς νικᾶν Wilamowitz : νικᾷ Phot.

so as both to win unjust lawsuits for the sake of shameful profits

Phot. α 363
ἄδικος δίκη· ἡ ἐκ συκοφαντίας γινομένη, ὡς Κρατῖνος· —— an unjust lawsuit: one that occurs through abuse of the legal system, as Cratinus (says): ——

Meter Dactylic hexameter.
— ⏑⏑ — ⏑⏑ — | — — ⏑⏑ — ⏑⏑ — —

Discussion Wilamowitz ap. Reitzenstein 1907. 32 n.

Text An infinitive is wanted in a consecutive clause, and Wilamowitz accordingly corrected the paradosis νικᾷ to νικᾶν, simultaneously eliminating hiatus.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation The first of at least two anticipated consequences of some action (hence τ(ε), which must originally have been balanced by at least one more τε or καί). The meter suggests an oracle or the reworking of epic material, the most obvious potential references in the latter case being to the warnings about abuse of the legal system at Hes. Op. 256–66 and about unjust profits at Hes. Op. 352 μὴ κακὰ κερδαίνειν· κακὰ κέρδεα ἶσ' ἄτῃσι. The line is in any case something approaching a summary definition of the supposed aims of a stock late 5th-century villain, the "sycophant" (for whom, see Olson 1998 on Ar. Pax 191; Christ 1998. 48–71, both with further bibliography), who abuses the Athenian court system (cf. δίκας … ἀδίκους) with an eye to extracting money from innocent victims (cf. ἐπὶ κέρδεσιν αἰσχροῖς). Whatever the individual or individuals in question have been said to do in the preceding lines, their goal has been to allow them to win (νικᾶν) the cases in which they become involved, the simplest explanation of the situation being that they have sought or received rhetorical training, like Strepsiades and Pheidippides in Aristophanes' Clouds (esp. 429–34, 882–8, 1338–9).

For the etymological jingle δίκη ἄδικος, cf. Hes. Op. 272 μείζω γε δίκην ἀδικώτερος ἕξει; Thgn. 45 δίκας τ' ἀδίκοισι διδῶσιν; A. Ch. 398 δίκαν δ' ἐξ ἀδίκων ἀπαιτῶ; E. El. 584 τἄδικ' ἔσται τῆς δίκης ὑπέρτερα; Pl. Lg. 873c δίκην ἄδικον ("an undeserved penalty"). For paradoxical etymological jingles of this sort generally, see Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 99.75.

For νικάω used specifically of winning lawsuits, e. g. Ar. Eq. 93; Nu. 1210–11; V. 581; Antipho 6.5; Thphr. Char. 17.8.

ἐπὶ κέρδεσιν αἰσχροῖς For κέρδος ("profit") as an ugly motivation that drives men to do things to which they would otherwise never lower themselves, e. g. Call. Com. fr. 1 κέρδος αἰσχύνης ἄμεινον ("profit is better than shame"; described as a proverb referring to cynical behavior); Ar. Eq. 1068 δολίαν κερδώ (literally "a treacherous cunning one", meaning "a treacherous fox"); Pax 623 ὄντες αἰσχροκερδεῖς ("being shamefully oriented toward profit", a description of the Spartan leaders who allegedly accepted bribes and began the Peloponnesian War), 699; Antiph. fr. 244; Diph. frr. 94.2–3; 99; S. Ant. 1046–7; Hdt. 1.187.5; E. Supp. 236–7 with Collard 1975 ad loc.; Thphr. Char. 30 (the aischrokerdês man, who is characterized by an epithymia kerdous aischrou, "desire for shameful profits"), and see Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 192ff.

For ἐπί + dative in the sense "with a view to", e. g. fr. 115.3; Hermipp. fr. 76.1; Ar. V. 495, and see LSJ s. v. B.III.2. For the word construed with κέρδος, cf. Hes. Op. 644; Th. 8.50.3; X. Mem. 1.2.56.

fr. 354 K.–A. (316 K.)

μισηταὶ δὲ γυναῖκες ὀλίσβοισι χρήσονται and lecherous women[97] will make use of dildos

Phot. μ 475 = Suda μ 1112
μισήτη· τὴν καταφερῆ μισήτην ἔλεγον· τὸ γὰρ μῖσος οὐκ ἄποθέν ἐστι τοῦ μιαίνεσθαι· ὃ γὰρ μισεῖται, μεμόνωται καὶ ἀμιγές ἐστιν, οἱονεὶ μισγητήν[98] τινα οὖσαν, ὃ καὶ βέλτιον· καὶ τὸ ἐν παροιμίας δὲ μέρει λεγόμενον (Archil. fr. 206)· παρὰ σφύρον παχεῖα, μισητὴ γυνή, κατά τι τοιοῦτο εἰρῆσθαι δοκεῖ. καὶ ὁ Κρατῖνός που τοῦτο ἔφη· ——, τὸν δὲ ἁπλῶς μισητὸν τὸν ἀνίκανον λέγει (fr. dub. 509) (sic Phot. : λέγεται Suda). μεταφορικῶς δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς ἀπλήστου κατὰ τὴν τροφὴν τίθεται ἡ λέξις misêtê: They call a woman who is prone [sc. to sexual activity] misêtê; for hatred is not dissimilar to being polluted, for what is hated is left alone and is not mingled with; i. e. being a woman who is misgêtês ("fond of intercourse"), which is actually better. Also the expression in a portion of a proverb (Archil. fr. 206): "fat at the ankle, a misêtê woman", seems to be said in regard to something of this sort. And Cratinus somewhere said the following: ——, whereas he refers (fr. dub. 509) to the man who is anikanos as simply misêtos. The word is also used metaphorically in reference to a woman who is insatiable when it comes to food

Hsch. μ 1450
μισήτην· τὴν καταφερῆ λέγουσιν μισήτην· ——, οἱ δὲ ἁπλῶς μισητὸν τὸν ἀνίκανον ἢ ἄπληστον τῇ τροφῇ

misêtê (acc.): they use the term for a woman prone [sc. to sexual activity]: ——, but some authorities (refer to) a man who is anikanos or insatiable when it comes to food as simply misêtos

---

[97] Not "Those lecherous women" (Storey 2011. 417).

[98] Omitted from LSJ, but seemingly understood as being formed from μίσγω/μείγνυμι rather than μισέω.

Eust. pp. 1650.64–1651.2 = i.371.37–40
Ἀριστοφάνης (Ar. Byz. fr. 396) γοῦν μισητίαν (scripsimus : μισητέαν codd.) ἐπὶ κατωφερείας ἔφη ἤγουν ῥοπῆς ἀσχέτου τῆς περὶ μίξεις. ἄλλοι (Tryphon fr. 10 Velsen) δὲ μισήτην βαρυτόνως πρὸς διαστολὴν τῆς ὀξυτονουμένης τὴν κοινὴν καὶ ῥᾳδίαν, λέγοντες καὶ χρῆσιν αὐτῆς εἶναι παρὰ Κρατίνῳ καὶ Σώφρονι (fr. 4.30[99]). χρᾶται δὲ αὐτῇ καὶ παροιμία ἐν τῷ (Archil. fr. 206)· περὶ σφύρον παχεῖα, μισητὴ γυνή

Aristophanes (Ar. Byz. fr. 396) at any rate used misêtia (our emendation : misêtea codd.) in reference to the propensity [sc. for sexual activity], i. e. an ungovernable impulse toward intercourse. But other authorities (Tryphon fr. 10 Velsen) (take the word to be) misêtê with a recessive accent, in light of the common and easily recognized difference from the form with an accent on the ultima, alleging that the latter usage is found in Cratinus and Sophron (fr. 4.30). The proverb also uses it in (Archil. fr. 206): "fat about the ankle, a misêtê woman"

Meter Dactylic hexameter.
– – – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ | ⏑ – – – – – –

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.202–3; Lentz 1867 I.342.27 n.; Nauck 1888. 223; Körte ap. K.–A.; Nelson 2000. 79

Citation context μισητής and cognates were clearly of interest to Atticist lexicographers, and Erbse traced the note in Phot. = Suda back to Pausanias (μ 22) drawing on Pamphilus. Other fragments of ancient scholarship on the words are preserved at

- Poll. 6.189 λέγοιτο δ' ἂν καὶ ὁ δύσερως καὶ ὁ δυσερωτιῶν. καὶ ἐρωτομανῶν, καὶ ὁ ἐρωτομανὴς καὶ ὁ θρήνερως καὶ μισηνερώς. καὶ μισητὸν μέντοι τὸν τοιοῦτον οἱ κωμικοὶ καλοῦσι, καὶ μισητὴν τὴν μάχλον ("and a person could also be called dyserôs and dyserôtiôn; also erôtomanôn and erôtomanês and thrênerôs and misênerôs. The comic poets, however, call such a person misêtos, and (they call) a lewd woman misêtê")
- Ammon. 322 Nickau μισητὴ καὶ μισήτη διαφέρει παρὰ τοῖς Ἀττικοῖς, ὥς φησι Τρύφων ἐν δευτέρῳ Περὶ Ἀττικῆς Προσῳδίας (fr. 10 Velsen). ἐὰν μὲν γὰρ ὀξυτονήσωμεν, σημαίνει τὴν ἀξίαν μίσους, καθὰ καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν τῇ συνηθείᾳ προσφερόμεθα (scripsimus : προφερόμεθα codd.), ἐὰν δὲ βαρυτονήσωμεν τὴν καταφερῆ πρὸς συνουσίαν. τὴν δὲ διαφορὰν τῶν σημαινομένων καὶ παρὰ Δωριεῦσί φασι φυλάττεσθαι καὶ παρ' Ἴωσιν ("misêtê and misêtê differ in Attic authors, as Tryphon says in Book 2 of On Attic Pronunciation (fr. 10 Velsen). Because if we accent the word on the ultima, it denotes a woman worthy of hatred, just as we customarily use it; whereas if we make the accent recessive, (it denotes) a woman prone to sexual commerce. They say that the difference of significations is also preserved in Doric and Ionic authors")[100]

[99] μισητατα[(from The Women Who Claim to Be Driving Out the Goddess).

– Hsch. μ 1452 μισητός· μίσους ἄξιος. ἄπληστος ("misêtos: worthy of hatred, insatiable")
– Σ^{RVE} Ar. Av. 1620 μισητίαν δὲ οἱ μὲν περὶ Ἀριστοφάνη (Ar. Byz. fr. 396) τὴν εἰς τὰ ἀφροδίσια ἀκρασίαν. καὶ τό (Archil. fr. 206)· ——, οὕτως ἐξηγοῦνται. μήποτε μέντοι γενικώτερόν ἐστιν ἀπληστία, ὃ καὶ νῦν ἐμφαίνεται ("but Aristophanes[101] (Ar. Byz. fr. 396) (refers to) a woman who lacks self-control in regard to sex as misêtia. They also interpret the saying (Archil. fr. 206) —— in this way. Perhaps however this is aplêstia ('insatiate desire') more generally, which [the word] in fact expresses today") – Et. Gud. p. 395.23–6 μισητὴ καὶ μισήτη διαφέρει· ἐὰν μὲν γὰρ ὀξυτονήσωμεν, σημαίνει τὴν ἀξίαν μίσους, καθὼς καὶ ἐν τῇ συνηθείᾳ. εἰ δὲ βαρυτονήσωμεν τὴν κατωφερῆ πρὸς συνουσίαν ("misêtê and misêtê differ: because if we accent the word on the ultima, it denotes a woman worthy of hatred, just as in common use. But if we make the accent recessive, (it means) a woman prone to sexual commerce")
– Thom. Mag. p. 240.11 μισητή· ἡ μίσους ἀξία γυνή· μισήτη δὲ βαρυτόνως ἡ καταφερής ("misêtê: a woman worthy of hatred, whereas misête with an accent on the penult is a woman prone [sc. to sexual activity]").

Interpretation Nauck took the meter to suggest an oracle, comparing the one at Hdt. 8.96.2 Κωλιάδες δὲ γυναῖκες ἐρετμοῖσι φρύξουσι ("Colian women will roast [their barley] with oars") that came to be understood as predicting the aftermath of the Battle of Salamis. On that basis, Körte argued that the line represents a prediction of events in the Peloponnesian War, although all that can really be said is that it imagines a future in which no men are available for sex—or at least not enough men.

The initial syllable in μισήτη is long, and the lexicographers take it to be from μισέω and attempt to explain how a word that ought to mean "hated" comes to mean "inclined toward sex, lecherous" (for which sense, see also Poll. 6.189, where the otherwise unattested μισηνερώς, "devoted to lecherous love" vel sim., is also preserved). At Ar. Av. 1620 and Pl. 989, cognate μισητία is "greed",[102] as also at Poll. 5.115 (the next attestation of the word). Barrett

---

[100] Cohn 1881. 331–2 took "Doric and Ionic authors" to be a reference to Epicharmus and Archilochus.

[101] Literally "those around Aristophanes".

[102] Despite LSJ s. v. (followed by Montanari s. v.), which takes it to mean "lust, lewdness" in the second passage.

1964 on E. Hipp. 405–7 argues that a general recognition that women were objects of hatred (μῖσος) above all else due to their reputation for promiscuity allowed the meaning of μισήτης to evolve from "hated [because of perceived sexual voracity]" to "sexually voracious [and therefore deserving of hatred]", after which the sense of cognate μισητία expanded from "sexual voracity" to "voracity [in general], greed".[103] But the lexicographers—drawing on what primary evidence, we do not know—also claim that the adjective could be used for a woman who is greedy for food, suggesting that the sense of μισητία moved direct from "hatefulness [generally]" to "hatefulness [as evidenced by greed]", skipping any intermediate sense "hatefulness [as evidenced by sexual voracity]". Whether Archilochus meant that the woman he referred to in fr. 206 was "hated [because of her perceived sexual voracity]", "sexually voracious [and therefore hated]" or "greedy for food [and therefore hated]" is impossible to say; that she has a fat ankle suggests that she is both modestly dressed (so that only this portion of her leg is visible) and socially advantaged enough to eat well.

According to Moer. ο 22, ὄλισβος—generally taken to be < ὀλισθάνω, "slide", although Beekes 2010 s. v. identifies it as substrate vocabulary and thus as lacking an etymology—is an Attic term for what could otherwise be described as a σκύτινον αἰδοῖον ("sex organ made of leather", i. e. "leather dildo"; cf. Phot. ο 222, where the adjective used is δερμάτινον). Some form of the word may be attested at Alc. fr. 303A.5 ο̣ἰ̣ισ̣β̣̣̣

fr. 355 K.–A. (68 K.)

Porphyry ap. Eus. PE 10.3.21
τὸ γάρ (Antim. fr. 79 Wyss = fr. 90 Matthews)· τὸν δ' ἀπαμειβόμενος προσέφη κρείων Διομήδης σιγῶ, Ὁμήρου κωμῳδηθέντος ὑπὸ Κρατίνου διὰ τὸ πλεονάσαι ἐν τῷ τὸν δ' ἀπαμειβόμενος· ὅπερ οὕτως πεπατημένον οὐκ ὤκνησεν Ἀντίμαχος μεταθεῖναι

For I say nothing regarding the line (Antim. fr. 79 Wyss = fr. 90 Matthews) "And in response to him, king Diomedes said to him", although Homer was ridiculed by Cratinus on account of the pleonasm in "And in response to him"; which, trite though it is, Antimachus did not hesitate to borrow

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.59; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Matthews 1996. 250

Assignment to known plays Meineke (comparing Ath. 15.698c) tentatively assigned the fragment to Euneidai.

Citation context A discussion of Antimachus' clumsy borrowings from Homer in the course of a long, richly-informed discussion of what Porphyry characterizes as the practice of literary theft among a wide range of ancient Greek authors.

Interpretation The pleonasm to which Porphyry refers must be the combination of τὸν δ' ἀπαμειβόμενος ("in response to him") and προσέφη ("said to him"), as at e. g. Il. 1.84; Od. 7.207, and the line from Antimachus. Homer was thus criticized by Cratinus—i. e. by one of Cratinus' characters—in terms reminiscent of Euripides' attack on Aeschylus for repeatedly saying the same thing twice at Ar. Ra. 1154–9, 1173–4, cf. 1178–9.

fr. 356 K.–A. (18 Dem., adesp. com. fr. 662 K.)

Phot. α 248 = Suda α 317 = Synag. B α 192
ἄγουσιν ἑορτὴν οἱ κλέπται· χαριεστάτη ἡ σύνταξις καὶ ἱκανῶς πεπαισμένη κατὰ τὴν κωμῳδικὴν χάριν. σημαίνει δὲ τοὺς ἀδεῶς κλέπτοντας. οὕτως Κρατῖνος (Phot. : om. Suda Synag. B)

the thieves are celebrating a festival: The collocation is very graceful and quite jocular with comic charm. It denotes those who steal with impunity. Thus Cratinus (Phot. : "Thus Cratinus" omitted by Suda and Synag. B)

Discussion Kock 1888 III.526; Kassel–Austin ad loc.; Lelli 2006. 124

Text Kock added ⟨ἐνθάδ'⟩ ("here") after ἑορτήν to convert the lemma into an iambic trimeter.

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ′; traced to Phrynichus (= PS fr. *75) by de Borries. The attribution to Cratinus has fallen out of the text in the Suda and the Synagoge, hence Kock's inclusion of the fragment among his comic adespota.

Interpretation As Lelli notes, comparing the Italian i ladri vanno a nozze ("the thieves go to a wedding", i. e. "have a field day, run wild"), this sounds like a proverb. ἄγω ἑορτήν might mean "do nothing, loaf", and Kassel–Austin compare Ar. fr. 174.1–2 ἦν δὲ / τὸ πρᾶγμ' ἑορτή (literally "The matter was a festival"; obscure, but the basic sense is patently "It was a nice time") and Theoc. 15.26 ἀεργοῖς αἰὲν ἑορτά ("It's always a festival for lazy people"). According to Phrynichus (or whoever is responsible for the note in Phot. = Suda = Synag.), however, Cratinus used the phrase to mean that the thieves have an opportunity to do whatever they want for a limited period of time and thus to steal with impunity, rather than that they take time off from their normal activities and thus cease temporarily to steal.[105]

For ἄγω ἑορτήν in the sense "celebrate a festival", e. g. Ar. Th. 835; Anacr. PMG 410.2; Th. 4.5.1; 5.75.2; X. Cyr. 6.2.6; [Arist.] Ath. 3.8; Is. 8.16; Herod. 5.85.

fr. 357 K.–A. (318 K.)

φαίνεσθαι χρυσῆν, κατ' ἀγροὺς δ' αὖθις αὖ μολυβδίνην to appear to be made of gold, but in the countryside leaden once again

Zon. p. 1366
μόλιβον μὲν Ὅμηρος λέγει (Il. 11.237) καὶ ἴσως Ἰακόν ἐστιν. οἱ δὲ Ἀττικοὶ μόλυβδον σὺν τῷ υ καὶ σὺν τῷ δ καὶ μολύβδινον· τὸ δὲ μολυβοῦν ἐσχάτως βάρβαρον. (adesp. com. fr. 957) Φορμίων τρεῖς ⟨ἀργυροῦς⟩ στήσειν ἔφη / τρίποδας, ἔπειτ' ἔθηκεν ἕνα μολύβδινον. Κρατῖνος· ——

Homer (Il. 11.237) says molibon ("lead"), and perhaps it is Ionic. Attic-speakers, on the other hand, say molybdon ("lead") with an upsilon and a delta, and molybdinon ("leaden"); but molyboun is profoundly barbarous. (adesp. com. fr. 957) "Phormio said he would set up three ⟨silver⟩ tripods, and then set up one—made of lead (molybdinon)". Cratinus: ——

[105] A reference to contemporary politicians, who have somehow been given more substantial access than before to public funds?

Meter Eupolidean (for which, see Poultney 1979; Parker 1988. 115–17; Storey 2003. 387–90).

– – – – – ⏑ ⏑ – | – ⏑ – ⏑ – ⏑ –

Discussion Bergk 1838. 249; Meineke 1839 II.232; Wilamowitz 1870. 34 n. 18; Müller 1974. 120; Lelli 2006. 124

Assignment to known plays Wilamowitz tentatively attributed the fragment to Horae.

Citation context Traced by Alpers to Orus fr. A 65. Related material is preserved at

- Moer. μ 6 μόλυβδος Ἀττικοί· μόλιβος Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (say) molybdos, whereas Greeks generally (say) molibos")
- Ael. Dion. μ 24 μόλυβδος· διὰ τοῦ υ καὶ δ Ἀττικοί ("molybdos: Attic-speakers say it with an upsilon and a delta")
- Et.Gen. AB ~ EM p. 590.8–11 (assigned by Lehrs to Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 551.28–30) μόλιβος καὶ μόλυβδος· εἰ μὲν ι ἐστίν, τὸ δ οὐκ ἔστιν, οἷον· καὶ μόλιβος ὥστε δίκτυον κατῆγε, Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 841).[106] ἐὰν δὲ τὸ υ, τὸ δ· ἡ δὲ μολυβδαίνῃ ἰκέλη, Ἰλιάδος Ω (24.80) ("molibos and molybdos: if there is an iota, there is no delta, as in: "And like molibos, he/she/it took the net down", Sophocles (fr. 841); whereas if there is an upsilon, there is a delta: "And she, like a lead weight", from Iliad 24 (24.80)")

Interpretation A description—dependent on a now-lost main verb—of a feminine object or person whose appearance varies depending on whether it is seen in the countryside or elsewhere, which likely means "in the city". The meter suggests that the fragment comes from a parabasis, like fr. 105. Bergk took the adjectives literally and suggested that the reference is to a lamp supposedly made of gold that someone bought in the Agora from the politician Hyperbolus, but which turned out to be made of lead when the purchaser got out to the country with it; cf. Ar. Eq. 316–18 (discussing cheap leather shoes that are purchased by countrymen and stretch wildly out of shape after being worn for a single day). Müller, on the other hand, understood the adjectives as having a figurative sense and suggested that the object in question might be a woman who looked good in town but was useless in the country (sc. when it came to doing domestic work; cf. Ar. Nu. 41–55).[107] But αὖθις αὖ makes it clear that this is a three-stage rather than a two-stage process: the object or person in question originally looked to be made of lead in the countryside; was taken for gold in the city; and finally was seen to be made of lead once again in the countryside. The joke is thus not on the country people (who have always known exactly who or what this is) but on the city (which has wildly over-estimated the value of someone or something worthless).

---

[106] The verse is transmitted by Plutarch in the form μολυβδὶς ὥστε δίκτυον κατέσπασεν and is printed thus by Radt.

[107] Wilamowitz noted adesp. com. fr. 957 (cited just before this verse by Zonaras) and suggested a connection to Phormio. But the object in question is feminine.

Lead is easily extracted from cerusite and galena, which also contain silver (see Gale–Stos-Gale 1981. 176–80, esp. 179–80). The silver-mining and -refining operations at Laurion yielded large quantities of it as a by-product (see in general Forbes 1950. 201–13; Christesen 2003. 39–41, with extensive bibliography on the Laurion mines), so that it was both readily available and inexpensive. For the polar opposition with gold, cf. Ar. Nu. 912–13 (Ητ.) χρυσῷ πάττων μ' οὐ γιγνώσκεις. / (Κρ.) οὐ δῆτα πρὸ τοῦ γ', ἀλλὰ μολύβδῳ ("(Weaker Argument) You're unaware that you're sprinkling me with gold. (Stronger Argument) It wouldn't have been this way previously, but with lead!"); "Simon." ap. Plu. Mor. 65b; Petron. 43.7; Apul. Fl. 9.

κατ' ἀγρούς The phrase is attested already in Homer (Od. 16.150; 17.18; subsequently at e. g. X. Hier. 9.7; Pl. R. 399d; Lg. 881c). For ἀγρός in either the singular or the plural in comedy in the sense "the countryside", e. g. Ar. Ach. 202 τὰ κατ' ἀγροὺς … Διονύσια ("the Rural Dionysia"); Nu. 138; Ec. 432; fr. 109.1 ἐξ ἄστεως νῦν εἰς ἀγρὸν χωρῶμεν ("Let's go now from the city into the countryside!"); Amphis fr. 12 κατ' ἀγρόν (from the Antiatticist, who comments "(used) in place of 'in the countryside'"); Antiph. fr. 127.1.

αὖθις αὖ A common pleonasm in Attic poetry (e. g. S. Ph. 952; OC 1418; E. Heracl. 796; Hel. 932; Or. 279, echoed at Ar. Nu. 1379; Av. 789; Sannyr. fr. 8.5) and prose (e. g. Pl. Ti. 48b; D. 19.121).

μολυβδίνην For the adjective, cf. Eup. fr. 183 (spit-rests made of lead); Hp. Mul. 133 = 8.290.10–11, 292.8 Littré. μόλυβδος/μόλιβος is attested already in Mycenean and appears to be borrowed from Lydian, the original meaning being "dark"; see Beekes 1999; Melchert 2004 (including discussion of and bibliography for the distribution of lead objects in Bronze Age Greece). Although Orus denounces μολυβοῦν (i. e. μολύβεος) as barbaric—presumably because it combines what he takes to be the separate Homeric and Attic forms of the word—μολιβδοῦς (i. e. μολίβδεος) is attested at e. g. Pherecr. fr. 12.1, as is μόλιβδος at e. g. Lys. fr. 439; Arist. Cael. 309^{b}14; Mech. 857^{b}4, although in all these cases the iota could easily be emended to upsilon.

fr. 358 K.–A. (320 K.)

τρίγλη δ’ εἰ μὲν ἐδηδοκοίη τένθου τινὸς ἀνδρός τρίγλη Ath. : τρίγλην Schweighäuser : τρίγλην … ⟨’ν⟩ τένθου Cobet : κίχλη Gulick but if a red mullet on the one hand should have eaten part of some gluttonous man

Ath. 7.305a–b
κίχλαι καὶ κόσσυφοι. διὰ τοῦ ῆ Ἀττικοὶ κίχλην λέγουσι, καὶ ὁ λόγος οὕτως ἔχει. τὰ γὰρ εἰς -λα λήγοντα θηλυκὰ πρὸ τοῦ λ ἕτερον λ ἔχει, Σκύλλα, σκίλλα, κόλλα, βδέλλα, ἅμιλλα, ἄμαλλα· τὰ δὲ εἰς -λη οὐκέτι, ὁμίχλη, φύτλη, γενέθλη, αἴγλη, τρώγλη. ὁμοίως οὖν καὶ τρίγλη. Κρατῖνος· —— thrush-wrasses (kichlai) and blackbird-wrasses (kossuphoi). Attic authors pronounce the word kichlê, with an êta, for the following reason: feminine nouns that end in -la have another lambda before the lambda: Scylla, skilla (“squill”), kolla (“glue”), bdella (“leech”), hamilla (“contest”), amalla (“sheaf of grain”). Those that end in -lê, on the other hand, do not: homichlê (“mist”), phytlê (“generation”), genethlê (“family”), aiglê (“radiance”), trôglê (“mouse-hole”). Similarly, therefore, triglê (“red mullet”). Cratinus: ——

Meter Priapean (i. e. glyconic + pherecratean).
⏑ – – ⏑ ⏑ – ⏑ – – ⏑ – – ⏑ ⏑ – –

Discussion Schweighäuser 1803. 115; Porson 1812. 98; Bergk 1838. 217; Meineke 1839 II.179; Cobet 1854. 249; Cobet 1858. 147; Kock 1880 I.320; Luppe ap. Kassel–Austin

Assignment to known plays Bergk attributed the fragment to Trophônios on the basis of its similarity to fr. 236 (also priapeans) οὐδ’ Αἰξωνίδ’ ἐρυθρόχρων ἐσθίειν ἔτι τρίγλην / οὐδὲ τρυγόνος οὐδὲ δεινοῦ φυὴν μελανούρου (“no longer to eat a red-skinned triglê from Aexone or a bit of sting-ray or of a melanouros with its fearful shape”; from further on in Athenaeus Book 7 and likely also drawn from Dorion).

Text Schweighäuser’s τρίγλην for the paradosis τρίγλη makes the sense easier (“but if he/she/it were to have eaten a red mullet belonging to some gluttonous man”), although at the price of rendering the verse less interesting; see Interpretation. Cobet 1854’s ⟨’ν⟩ allows the second half of the line to be understood “in (the house) of some gluttonous man”. For Gulick’s κίχλη—which may be right—see Citation context.

Citation context From a discussion of thrush-wrasses (κίχλαι) and blackbird-wrasses (κόσσυφοι). The material supplied as citation context above begins the note and is closely related to the initial portion of Athenaeus' section on the τρίγλη at 7.324c–d. Epich. fr. 53.2, Arist. fr. 208, Pancrat. SH 599 and Nic. fr. 59, all of which mention the κίχλη and are likely drawn from Dorion's On Fish (one of the main sources of Book 7 of Athenaeus), follow. Reference to a τρίγλη is thus out of place here, and Gulick may have been right to think that Cratinus wrote κίχλη, the word having been corrupted to τρίγλη via the influence of that word at the end of the immediately preceding list of nouns ending in -λη.[108]

Interpretation The first half of what must have been at least a two-part protasis, most likely of a future less vivid condition: "If … on the one hand (or if on the other hand … then … would …)". Regardless of whether τρίγλη or κίχλη is adopted at the beginning of the line, the text printed here and in Kassel–Austin represents a paradox: a creature one would expect a man to consume is instead imagined eating part of the man (thus apparently Luppe in his unpublished dissertation). The form of the condition presents this as an unlikely possibility, so this is probably part of a fanciful argument e. g. calling for satisfaction for the birds (or fish) for the damage done them by human gluttons, and adopting a nominally balanced proposal to similarly penalize any bird (or fish) found to have consumed part of a human being. As Bergk saw, this fits well with fr. 236 (quoted in Assignment to known plays), which similarly seems to imagine an end to human beings consuming seafood. For another example of radical inter-species gastronomic "turn-about is fair play", see Archipp. fr. 28 (from Ichthyes, "Fish").

The τρίγλη ("red mullet"; Mullus barbatus, L. and M. surmeletus, L.) is a small, omnivorous, bottom-feeding fish often mentioned as a delicacy in catalogues of foodstuffs and the like (e. g. Epich. frr. 57; 122.5; Sophr. fr. 49; Philox. ap. Pl. Com. fr. 189.20; Philyll. fr. 12.3; Nausicr. fr. 1.6–11; Ephipp. fr. 12.3; Antiph. frr. 27.10; 130.8; Mnesim. fr. 4.38; Sotad. Com. fr. 1.11; Matro fr. 1.27, 31). See in general Archestr. fr. 42 with Olson–Sens 2000 ad loc.; Thompson 1957. 264–8; Lythgoe–Lythgoe 1971. 111–12. For thrushes, see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 960–1.

---

[108] Gulick himself wanted to emend both uses of τρίγλη, yielding ὁμοίως οὖν καὶ κίχλη. Κρατῖνος· κίχλη δ' εἰ κτλ. But this fails to explain how τρίγλη got into the text of an otherwise generally homogenous discussion of the κίχλη.

ἐδηδοκοίη[109] is perfect active optative of ἐσθίω, "eat". For the ending (in place of the usual -κοι), cf. ἐκπεφευγοίην (S. OT 840), πεποιθοίη (Ar. Ach. 939) and προεληλυθοίης (X. Cyr. 2.4.17), and see Schwyzer 1953 I.795; evidently an Attic form.

τένθης (etymology uncertain) is attested elsewhere before the Roman period only at Ar. Pax 1009, 1120, although note τενθεία ("gluttony") at Ar. Av. 1691 and προτένθης (an individual allowed to participate in various public banquets ahead of time) and cognates at Pherecr. fr. 7.2; Ar. Nu. 1198, 1200; Philyll. fr. 7.2 with Orth 2015 ad loc.[110] The word and its cognates are used a number of times in Athenaeus (e. g. 1.6c; 3.112b) and at Alciphr. 2.21.2 (τενθεία), and are glossed by both Pollux (6.42 τένθης τενθεία, 122 λιχνοτένθης[111] τενθεύων) and Timaeus (τ 13), leaving little doubt that they came to be regarded as Attic colloquialisms.

fr. 359 K.–A. (321 K.)

χαῖρ' ὦ χρυσόκερως βαβάκτα κήλων, Πάν, Πελασγικὸν Ἄργος ἐμβατεύων

1 χαῖρ' ὦ Heph. Choerob. : χαῖρε Et.Gen. 2 Ἄργος Heph. Choerob. Et.Gen. : ἄργον Wilamowitz : ἄγκος vel ἀργός Kock : ἄντρον vel ἄκρον Blaydes : αἶπος Kaibel

Hail, o golden-horned, babaktês stud,
Pan, haunting Pelasgian Argos

---

109 The root is *h_1ed–, whence one would expect e. g. the perfect active participle *ἠδώς, "having eaten", rather than ἐδηδώς (Il. 17.542); cf. Sanskrit âdús, "having eaten". But as in the case of a number of other verbs whose roots began with a laryngeal (e. g. ἀκούω, "hear"; ὄμνυμι, "swear"), the perfect stem is formed with "Attic reduplication", i. e. with a short vowel in the reduplicant and a lengthened vowel in the root; see in general Kühner–Blass 1892 II.26–32; for attempts to explain the origin of Attic reduplication, e. g. Winter 1950; Suzuki 1994; Sihler 1995. 489. ἐδήδοκα, like e. g. ὀμώμοκα ("I have sworn"; e. g. Archipp. fr. 36) and ἀκήκουκας ("you have heard"; Herod. 5.48), has in addition been refashioned as a κ-perfect; cf. Schwyzer 1953 I.775.

110 All cited at Ath. 4.171c–e, along with the text of a 4th-century Athenian inscription having to do with advance arrangements for the celebration of the Apatouria festival.

111 Presumably to be regarded as an adespoton comic fragment.

Heph. Enchiridion 10.3, pp. 32.21–33.4 Consbruch τῶν δὲ τριμέτρων τὸ μὲν καταληκτικὸν τὸ μόνην τὴν πρώτην ἀντισπαστικὴν ἔχον, τὰς δὲ ἑξῆς ἄλλας ἰαμβικὰς Φαλαίκειον καλεῖται, οἷον· ——

The catalectic trimeter that only has only one antispastic at the beginning, while the other feet that follow are iambic, is called a Phalaecian, for example: ——

Choerob. p. 241.5–9
Φαλαίκειόν φησι μέτρον, οἱονεὶ Φιλίκειον ἀπὸ Φιλίκου τοῦ προειρημένου. τὸ δέ (v. 1)· —— Κρατίνου ἐστί

He calls the meter "Phalaecian", just as the Philician is named after the Philicus discussed earlier. But the phrase (v. 1): —— is from Cratinus

Et.Gen. AB s. v. βαβάκτης (≈ EM p. 183.45–8 = Et.Sym. β 1 B) βαβάκτης· ὀρχηστής, λάλος, μανιώδης, βακχευτής. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ὁ Πάν· Κρατῖνος, οἷον (v. 1)· ——. παρὰ τὸ βάζω, τὸ λαλῶ, βάξω βέβακται, οἷον θ 408· ——, βεβάκτης βαβάκτης, ὁ πολλὰ λαλῶν. ἔστι καὶ ῥητορική babaktês: a dancer, prattler, madman, bacchant. But Pan is also called this: Cratinus, e. g. (v. 1): ——. From badzô, (that is) lalô ("prattle"), baxô (fut.) bebaktai (perf.), e. g. Od. 8.408· ——, bebaktês babaktês, one who chatters a lot. It is also rhetorical Meter Phalaecian.

——⏑⏑⏑— ⏑—⏑——
—⏑—⏑⏑— ⏑—⏑——

Discussion Orville 1737. 53–4; Fritzsche 1835. 13; Bergk 1838. 97; Wilamowitz 1879. 183; Kock 1880 I.106–7; Kock 1882. 293; Wilamowitz 1893. 19; Blaydes 1896 II.13; Wilamowitz 1921. 143; Whittaker 1935. 188; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text In 1, the χαῖρε of the Et.Gen. would do metrically, but is best regarded as a simple error for χαῖρ' ὦ in the other witnesses.

The paradosis Πελασγικὸν Ἄργος in 2 scans, and the place is known (see Interpretation), but it is difficult to understand why Cratinus' Pan is placed specifically there. The suggestions recorded in the apparatus all assume that Πελασγικόν refers to the Athenian Acropolis and that the second word ought to be corrected in a way that associates the god with his cave on the North Slope (for which, see Hdt. 6.105.3; E. Ion 936–8; Luc. Bis Acc. 9; n. 114 below).

Citation context Hephaestion quotes the fragment in the course of a brief discussion of antispasts (a term used to analyze various sections of verse containing two long and two short syllables, in this case ——⏑⏑) in the course of his treatment of choriambs (—⏑⏑—). Σ^{DIM} Heph. Enchiridion 10.3, p. 143.15–19 Consbruch ἀντισπαστικὸν τρίμετρον καταληκτιόν, ὃν καλεῖται Φαλαίκειον. δέχεται δὲ ἕνα ἀντισπάστον, ἤτοι τέταρτον ἐπίτριτον, καὶ τρεῖς ἰάμβους καὶ συλλαβήν· χαῖρ' ὦ χρυσόκερως καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς ("An antispastic trimeter catalectic, which is called a Phalaecian. It contains one antispast, specifically a fourth epitrite, and three iambs plus one syllable: Hail, o golden-horned, and what follows") is drawn direct from Hephaestion and thus need not be treated as a separate witness to the text, as in Kassel–Austin. Choeroboscus, on the other hand, knows that the lines are from Cratinus and must thus have had access to some other source.

The Et.Gen. (≈ EM p. 183.45–8 = Et.Sym. β 1 B), which offers only v. 1, is from a separate, lexicographic tradition, additional traces of which are preserved at

- Phot. β 6 βαβάκτης· ὁ μανιώδης καὶ ἀκρατής, καὶ ἰδιαίτερον ὁ Πάν ("babaktês: someone maddened and out of control, and above all else Pan")
- Hsch. β 6 = Phot. β 8 ~ Lex.Rhet. AB I p. 223.21 βαβάκτης· ὀρχηστής, ὑμνῳδός, μανιώδης, κραύγασος· ὅθεν καὶ Βάκχος ("babaktês: a dancer, singer of hymns, maddened, shouting; whence also Bacchus"; traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus)
- Epim. Homer. A 262 ἐκ τοῦ βέβακται βάκτης καὶ βαβάκτης, δαίμων τις θορυβώδης· Βάκχος δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ βάζω, ὡς Ἴακχος ἀπὸ τοῦ ἰάχω καὶ Βρόμιος ἀπὸ τοῦ βρέμειν ("baktês and babaktês, a deity that causes disturbance, are from bebaktai; whereas Bakchos is from badzô, like Iakchos from iacho and Bromios from bremein")
- Σ^{T} Pl. Alc. II 147c ἐστὶ δὲ βαβάκτης ὁ κράκτης καὶ μανιώδη ("and a babaktês is a man who shouts and is maddened").

Interpretation The language suggests the beginning of a hymn or prayer (cf. fr. *361.1 with n.; Eup. fr. 250 with Olson 2016 ad loc.), while the meter—used by Aristophanes at V. 1226–7 (a snatch of symposium poetry), 1248; Ec. 938–9—matches that in the initial lines of some of the Attic skolia (drinking songs that inter alia extol individual gods), as Wilamowitz noted. Whittaker took the lines to be drawn from the ode or antode of a parabasis; but they might be from any lyric section. The first verse hails the god via three progressively shorter epithets or titles that refer to various aspects of his appearance, behavior and character (the golden and thus divine horns on his head; the sound he or his pipes make, or the way he moves; his reputation for aggressive sexuality), and thus functions as a sort of riddle, which is abruptly resolved with the mention of the god's name at the beginning of 2. The balance of 2 is dedicated to describing Pan by means of another standard hymnic device, the evocation of a place the god is known to haunt (for which, see Austin–Olson 2004 on Ar. Th. 316, with additional references and secondary bibliography). Cf. the even more elaborate hHom. 19, where Pan is named only at the beginning of v. 5 after an extended description of his ancestry and habits.

Pan—the name is plausibly derived from < *peh_2–, "nourish", making it cognate with e. g. Lat. pasco, "feed", and Skt. Pushan, "Nourisher", a Vedic god associated with guarding and multiplying cattle (e. g. RV 1.42) (cf. Brown 1977, who takes the name originally to have been ὁ Ὀπάων, "the Companion", instead; Beekes 2010 s. v.)—was a god of shepherds and flocks, which he protected and made increase (hPan; AP 6.239; 10.10; Paus. 8.38.8; Ov. Fast. 2.271, 7; Virg. E. 1.33). Herodotus (2.145.4) reports that the Greeks of his own time made Pan the child of Hermes and Penelope; the undated but perhaps classical-period Homeric Hymn to Pan agrees that he was a son of Hermes, but identifies his mother as an Arcadian nymph (hHom. 19.33–6). Pan was horned, goat-footed, bearded and loud already at birth,[112] as a consequence of which his mother abandoned him (hHom. 19.36–9); but Hermes took him to Olympus, where he delighted all the gods (an attempt to etymologize the name, as if < πᾶς) and especially Dionysus (hHom. 19.40–6).

Pan was associated in the first instance with Arcadia (hHom. 19.30; Pi. fr. 95 (quoted below); E. fr. 696.2–3 (quoted below)), and his cult is said by Herodotus (6.105) to have been introduced in Athens shortly after 490 BCE, as a result of an appearance he made to the messenger Philippides just before the Battle at Marathon announcing his intention to side with the Athenians (cf. Paus. 8.26.2; "Simon." AP 16.232 τὸν τραγόπουν ἐμὲ Πᾶνα τὸν Ἀρκάδα, τὸν κατὰ Μήδων, / τὸν μετ' Ἀθηναίων στήσατο Μιλτιάδης, "Miltiades set me up, goat-footed Pan the Arcadian, the one who opposed the Medes and was with the Athenians").[113] See in general Borgeaud 1979; Boardman, LIMC VIII.1 (1997), pp. 923, 940–1. For other hymns to Pan, evocations of the god in prayer, and the like, cf. Ar. Th. 977–81 Ἑρμῆν τε νόμιον ἄντομαι / καὶ Πᾶνα καὶ Νύμφας φίλας / ἐπιγελάσαι προθύμως / ταῖς ἡμετέραισι / χαρέντα χορείαις ("I implore Hermes god of flocks and Pan and the beloved Nymphs graciously to cast an eager smile upon our dances"); Pi. frr. 95–100, esp. fr. 95 Ὦ Πάν, Ἀρκαδίας μεδέων / καὶ σεμνῶν ἀδύτων φύλαξ / ⟨ … ⟩ / Ματρὸς μεγάλας ὀπαδέ, / σεμνᾶν Χαρίτων μέλημα / τερπνόν ("O Pan, ruler of Arcadia and guardian of sacred shrines … companion of the Great Mother, pleasurable cause of concern to the sacred Graces"; see in general Haldane 1968); carm. conv. PMG 887 ὦ Πάν, Ἀρκαδίας μέδων κλεεννᾶς, / ὀρχηστὰ Βρομίαις ὀπαδὲ Νύμφαις, / γελάσειας, ὦ Πάν, ἐπ' ἐμαῖς / † εὐφροσύναις ταῖσδ' ἀοιδαῖς αοιδε † κεχαρημένος ("O

[112] For Pan's appearance, cf. Hdt. 2.46.2 (Egyptian artists represent Pan just as the Greeks do, αἰγοπρόσωπον καὶ τραγοσκελέα, "with a goat's face and legs"); Pl. Cra. 408d ("Pan the goatherd" described as "the twin-natured son of Hermes, hairless above but rough and goat-like below").

[113] For Pan's cave at Marathon, see Lupu 2001.

Pan, ruler of famous Arcadia, dancer, companion of Bacchic nymphs, may you smile, O Pan, taking pleasure in my † festivities these songs [corrupt] †"; one of the Attic skolia); S. Ai. 693–701 ὦ Πὰν Πὰν ἁλίπλαγκτε, Κυλ / λανίας χιονοκτύπου / πετραίας ἀπὸ δειράδος φάνηθ', ὦ / θεῶν χοροποί' ἄναξ, ὅπως μοι / Μύσια Κνώσι' -ὀρ- / χήματ' αὐτοδαῆ ξυνὼν ἰάψῃς. / νῦν γὰρ ἐμοὶ μέλει χορεῦσαι ("O Pan Pan, sea-shore roamer, appear from the rocky ridge of snow-beaten Cyllene, O dance-making king of the gods, so that along with me you may set Mysian and Cnosian dances in motion! For now I wish to dance"); E. fr. 696.2–3 χαῖρ', ὅς τε πέτραν Ἀρκάδων δυσχείμερον / Πὰν ἐμβατεύεις ("Hail, and also you, Pan, who haunt the Arcadians' wintry rock"); Castorion SH 310 σὲ τὸν βολαῖς νιφοκτύποις δυσχείμερον / ναίονθ' ἕδραν, θηρονόμε Πάν, χθόν' Ἀρκάδων, / κλήσω … / … / μωσοπόλε θήρ, κηρόχυτον ὃς μείλιγμ' ἱεῖς / ("You who inhabit an abode made wintry by bolts of rattling snow, Pan tender of wild beasts, I shall invoke you …, poetic beast, you who produce a soothing song molded from wax"; see in general Bing 1985); Theoc. 1.123–4 ὦ Πὰν Πάν, εἴτ' ἐσσὶ κατ' ὤρεα μακρὰ Λυκαίω, / εἴτε τύγ' ἀμφιπολεῖς μέγα Μαίναλον ("O Pan Pan, whether you are among the lofty mountains of Lycia, or whether you are frequenting great Maenalus"). For other mentions of Pan in comedy, Ar. Av. 745 (a god of pastures, associated in the verse that follows with the Mountain Mother); Lys. 2 (festivals of Pan in Athens attended by women), 721, 911 (both references to Pan's grotto below the Acropolis[114]), 998 (mockingly taken to be responsible for the erections of the Spartan ambassadors); Ra. 230 κεροβάτας Πὰν ὁ καλαμόφθογγα παίζων ("hoof-trodding Pan who plays a reed-voiced [pipe]"); Ec. 1069 (invoked in the plural in an expression of horror); Arar. Panos gonai; Amphis Pan; Men. Dysc. passim; in tragedy at e. g. [Thespis] TrGF 1 F [4.4–5] Πὰν / δικέρως ("two-horned Pan"); A. Pers. 448–9 ὁ φιλόχορος / Πάν ("dance-loving Pan"; said to haunt the sea-side); Ag. 56; Eu. 943–5 (the god who cares for flocks of sheep); S. OT 1100 Πανὸς ὀρεσσιβάτα ("Pan the mountain-trodder"); E. El. 702–4 εὐαρμόστοις ἐν καλάμοις / Πᾶνα μοῦσαν ἡδύθροον / πνέοντ', ἀγρῶν ταμίαν ("Pan, guardian of the fields, blowing sweet-voiced music on his well-joined reeds"); IT 1125–6 ὁ κηρόδετος / Πανὸς οὐρείου κάλαμος ("the wax-bound reed [pipe] of mountain Pan"); Ion 492–502 (Pan's grotto beneath the Acropolis, where he plays his pipes).

1 For χαῖρ(ε) used in an address to a deity, e. g. frr. *235 (pl.); 237.2; *361.1 = Ecphantid. fr. 4; Ar. Th. 111; Il. 10.462; hAphr. 92; Alc. fr. 308.1; Pi. fr. 33c.1; A. fr. 78a col. 1.22; E. Hipp. 63, 70; fr. 696.2, and probably Cratin. fr. 225, and see in general Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 331.2. Cf. fr. 360.1.

---

[114] For the grotto, see Text and Travlos 1971. 417–21.

χρυσόκερως is elevated poetic vocabulary (of the horns of magical deer at Pi. O. 3.29; E. Hel. 382; fr. 740.2; of incense, presumably with the extended sense "dedicated to sacrifice" (cf. LSJ s. v. II), at Pi. fr. 329 = Ar. fr. 913 K. = adesp. com. fr. 784 K.); also applied to Pan at App. Anth. 129.1 χρυσοκέρως βλοσυροῖο Διωνύσου θεράπων Πάν ("golden-horned Pan, attendant of grim Dionysus"). Cf. Ar. Eq. 559 χρυσοτρίαιν(ε) ("with a golden trident", of Poseidon); Av. 217 χρυσοκόμας ("golden-haired", of Apollo), 1738 χρυσόπτερος ("golden-winged", of Eros); Th. 315 χρυσολύρα ("golden-lyred", of Apollo), 318 χρυσόλογχε ("golden-speared", of Athena); and for gold as the typical material for objects associated with the gods, see Olson 2012 on hAphr. 16–17.

βαβάκτης is attested only here before the Roman-era lexicographers, although cf. Archil. fr. 297 κατ' οἶκον ἐστρωφᾶτο μισητὸς βάβαξ ("a hateful babax circulated throughout the house"); Hsch. β 1 βαβάζειν· τὸ ⟨μὴ⟩ διηρθρωμένα λέγειν. ἔνιοι δὲ βοᾶν ("babazein: to speak ⟨in⟩articulately; but some (say it means) to shout"), 10 βαβάξαι· ὀρχήσασθαι ("babaxai: to dance"); ε 1287 ἐκβαβάξαι· ἐκσαλεῦσαι. Σοφοκλῆς Ἀντηνορίδαις (fr. *139) ("ekbabaxai: to swagger forth. Sophocles in Antênoidai (fr. *139)"). Corn. ND p. 59.3 identifies βαβάκτης as an epithet of Dionysus (cf. Βάκχος), while the other sources offer a combination of what appear to be guesses based on the context here and a derivation from βάζω ("speak, say"). If Hsch. β 1 is right, it must mean "someone who says ba-ba", i. e. who talks nonsense (because he is lost in a Dionysiac trance, so that what Archilochus means by μισητὸς βάβαξ is ~ "an ugly murmur")? or a reference to the sound of the pipes Pan plays?). "Dancer" (cf. Hsch. β 6 = Phot. β 8; Hsch. β 10; and the initial definition in Et.Gen. AB) also fits with the traditional image of the god (for which, see above).

κήλων is attested elsewhere in the classical period only at Archil. fr. 43.2–3 ὥστ' ὄνου Πριηνέως / κήλωνος ἐπλήμυρεν ὀτρυγηφάγου ("it swelled full like that of a crop-eating Prienian kêlôn-donkey"; presumably in reference to the penis of a sexually excited man), but the Hippiatrica Berolinensia (Byzantine in date) also uses the word in reference to horses. It thus likely means "stud animal" rather than specifically "he-ass" (thus LSJ s. v. II),[115] and by extension a man who is insistently eager to have sex, as Philoxenus (fr. 514 κήλων· ὁ θερμὸς εἰς συνουσίαν, "kêlôn: a man who is hot for sexual commerce") claims.[116]

---

[115] Note also Philo de spec. leg. 3.47.4 ὄνους ὑπερμεγέθεις, οὓς προσαγορεύουσι κήλωνας ("exceptionally large donkeys, which they refer to as kêlônes").

[116] The latter sense of the word is ignored in LSJ s. v. Cf. also celo ("stallion") at Plaut. Poen. 1168, although the text there is disputed.

2 Πελασγικὸν Ἄργος is mentioned at Il. 2.681 (the Catalogue of Ships), where it is located in Thessaly, and Str. 5.221; 8.369 (followed by Loptson 1981), identifies the phrase as a periphrasis for Thessaly as a whole. At E. Ph. 256; Or. 1601, Πελασγικὸν Ἄργος is instead the city of Argos in the Peloponnesus (IACP #347; referred to as Πελασγὸν Ἄργος at E. Or. 692, 1296). Whether Cratinus is referring to Homer (and thus to Thessaly) or to the city of Argos is unclear.

ἐμβατεύω is otherwise restricted in the 5th century to tragedy and is often used of divine visitations (e. g. A. Pers. 449 (Pan); S. OC 679 (Dionysus); E. fr. 696.3 (Pan); [E.] Rh. 225 (Apollo)).

fr. 360 K.–A. (323 K.)

χαῖρ' ὦ μέγ' ἀχρειόγελως ὅμιλε, ταῖς ἐπίβδαις τῆς ἡμετέρας σοφίας κριτὴς ἄριστε πάντων· εὐδαίμον' ἔτικτέ σε μήτηρ ἰκρίων ψόφησις

1 ταῖς ἐπίβδαις Heph. : τῆς ἐπίβδας Kock 3 εὐδαίμον' Heph.[AD] : εὐδαίμων Heph.[I] : εὔδαιμον Skutsch σε Heph. : με Meineke ψόφησις Heph. : ψόφησιν ed. pr. : ψόφοισιν Kock : ψοφήσει Herwerden

Hail, O crowd that laughs to absolutely no point,[117] best judge of all of our cleverness—on the days that follow the festival!
Your mother, the noise-making of the benches, bore you fortunate

Heph. Enchiridion 15.2, pp. 47.3–48.1 Consbruch
γίνεται δὲ καὶ ἀσυνάρτητα, ὁπόταν δύο κῶλα μὴ δυνάμενα ἀλλήλοις συναρτηθῆναι μηδὲ ἕνωσιν ἔχειν ἀντὶ ἑνὸς μόνου παραλαμβάνηται στίχου. πρῶτος δὲ καὶ τούτοις Ἀρχίλοχος κέχρηται· πῆ μὲν γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἔκ τε ἀναπαιστικοῦ ἑφθημιμεροῦς καὶ τροχαϊκοῦ ἡμιολίου τοῦ καλουμένου ἰθυφαλλικοῦ (Archil. fr. 168.1–2)· ——. τοῦτο δὲ οἱ μετ' αὐτὸν οὐχ ὁμοίως αὐτῷ ἔγραψαν. οὗτος μὲν γὰρ τῇ τε τομῇ δι' ὅλου κέχρηται καὶ σπονδείους παρέλαβεν ἐν τῷ ἀναπαιστικῷ κώλῳ, οἷον (Archil. fr. 170)· ——, οἱ δὲ μετ' αὐτὸν τῇ μὲν τομῇ ἀδιαφόρως ἐχρήσαντο, ὥσπερ Κρατῖνος (ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις Heph.[I] : ἐν τοῖς Πλούτοις Meineke)· ——. καὶ μέντοι καὶ τοὺς σπονδείους παρῃτήσαντο τοὺς ἐν τῷ μέσῳ

And there are also asynartêta ("unconnected [meters]"), whenever two cola that cannot be connected with one another or form a unity are used instead of a single line. Archilochus was the first to make use of these as well, for in some places he composed them from an anapaestic hephthemimer and a trochaic hemiolion of the sort referred to as an ithyphallic (Archil. fr. 168.1–2): ——. But those who came after him did not write this the same way he did. For he uses the caesura throughout and took over spondees in the anapaestic colon, as in (Archil. fr. 170): ——, whereas those who came after him made indiscriminate use of the caesura, as Cratinus (does) ("in verses such as these" Heph.[1] : "in his Ploutoi" Meineke): ——. Moreover, they also avoided spondees in the middle

[117] Not "of the great burst of laughter" (Rusten 2011. 217).

Phot. α 3454 = Suda α 4714 = Synag. B α 2614
ἀχρειόγελως ἄνθρωπος· ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀχρήστοις καὶ μὴ σπουδαίοις γελῶν καὶ χαίρων an achreiogelôs person: one who laughs at and takes pleasure in useless and unserious things Meter Archilochean dicola (x D x ith), like fr. 62. Hephaestion is clearly baffled by the meter, which he misanalyzes as a mix of anapaests and trochees.

– –⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑ –⏑–⏑––
– –⏑⏑–⏑⏑– – –⏑–⏑––
– –⏑⏑–⏑⏑– – –⏑–⏑––

Discussion Orville 1737. 465–6; Runkel 1827. 86; Meineke 1839 II.192–4; Kock 1880 I.107–8; Herwerden 1903. 11; Whittaker 1935. 188; Olson 2007. 108 (B37); Bakola 2010. 40–1; Biles 2011. 35, 70, 103, 136–7, 188; Roselli 2011. 72–3; Storey 2011. 419

Assignment to known plays Meineke's emendation of the text of Hephaestion attributes the fragment to Ploutoi.

Text Meineke placed commas before and after ταῖς ἐπίβδαις in 1, taking the words with χαῖρ(ε) ("Hail on the days that follow the festival!"), whereas Kock placed a single comma after ταῖς ἐπίβδαις, taking the words with ὦ μέγ' ἀχρειόγελως ὅμιλε ("O crowd that laughs to absolutely no point on the days that follow the festival").[118] We follow Kassel–Austin in placing a single comma before ταῖς ἐπίβδαις, taking the words with 2. See Interpretation.

At the beginning of 3, εὐδαίμον' has been corrupted to εὐδαίμων (unmetrical) in some manuscripts of Hephaestion via attraction to the ending of the word ἰκρίων. Skutch's vocative εὔδαιμον (voc.) does not improve the sense.

---

[118] As an alternative possibility, Kock suggested replacing the paradosis ὅμιλε ταῖς ἐπίβδαις with ὅμιλε τῆς ἐπίβδας ("day-after-the-festival crowd"). Whatever the point of 1–2 may be, however, the group addressed is certainly the audience in the Theater on the festival day itself.

In the middle of 3, Meineke suggested με for the paradosis σε. But 1–2 are patently a complaint regarding the audience: they are lucky (sc. because they are free to behave ignorantly), but the poet forced to depend on them is not.

At the end of 3, the conjectures of Kock and Herwerden convert ἰκρίων ψόφησις into a dative of means, but the text that results is no clearer or funnier than the paradosis.

Citation context The quotation of the verses in Hephaestion is part of a discussion of "compound" meters, i. e. those supposedly made up out of elements of different sorts, in the surviving, abridged version of a metrical handbook originally composed in the 2nd century CE, most likely drawing on Heliodorus.

The reference to 1 in Phot. = Suda = Synag. B (from the common source generally referred to as Σ′) is traced by de Borries to Phrynichus (= PS fr. *294).

Interpretation On the punctuation adopted here (following Kassel–Austin; see Text), this is a mock-admiring address of the audience in the Theater, acknowledging their power over the poet's fate in the competition, but condemning them for failing to understand his jokes until the festival is over and thus after the prize has been awarded to someone else. The pointless laughter referenced in 1 must accordingly be either in response to the worthless offerings of the chorus' (i. e. the playwright's) rivals, i. e. on the festival day and leading to the award of honors to the wrong comedy, or to their own jokes, although only after the festival is over, at which point the laughter does them no good. Kock's punctuation (see Text) makes the sense of 1 easier (the laughter is pointless because it occurs after the festival), but at the price of draining 2 of sense (since the audience cannot really be described as "best judge of our cleverness" if they laugh too late).

Meter and content make it clear that the lines are drawn from the beginning of a parabatic ode; cf. Pl. Com. fr. 96 χαῖρε παλαιογόνων ἀνδρῶν θεατῶν ξύλλογε παντοσόφων ("Hail, collection of utterly wise, ancient-born spectators!"), and the similarly disappointed sentiments at Ar. Nu. 518–62; V. 1016–59. That the three verses represent continuous text is taken for granted by modern editors. But fr. *361 and Eup. fr. 316 show that Hephaestion (or his source) sometimes skipped lines in such situations, and these might simply be three individual verses (with 1 in that case to be translated "Hail, o crowd that laughs to absolutely no point on the days that follow the festival").

1 χαῖρ(ε) See fr. 359.1 n.

μέγ(α) is adverbial, as at Ar. Nu. 291 ὦ μέγα σεμναὶ Νεφέλαι ("o profoundly reverend Clouds!").

ἀχρειόγελως is attested nowhere else and is likely a nonce-word; perhaps inspired by Od. 18.163 ἀχρεῖον δ' ἐγέλασσεν ("and she laughed idly"; Penelope responds to an incomprehensible desire, inspired in her by Athena, to show herself to the Suitors).

ὅμιλος is attested elsewhere in comedy only at Ar. Pax 920.

ἐπίβδαι are defined at Hsch. ε 4622 (cf. Tim. Lex. s. v.; Phot. μ 189; EM pp. 357.55; 358.1) as αἱ μεθέορτοι ἡμέραι· ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐπιβιβάζεσθαι ταῖς ἑορταῖς οὐκ οὔσας ἐξ αὐτῶν ("post-festival days; from the fact that they come after (epibibazesthai) the festivals, but are not part of them"). Outside of lexicographers and the like, the word is attested elsewhere only at Pi. P. 4.140 and Aristid. or. 51.26; etymology uncertain.

2 σοφίας For the word and its cognates applied specifically to poets, see Dover 1993. 12–13, who notes that the sense wanted is generally "talented, brilliant, great" or the like rather than "wise"; see e. g. Eup. fr. 392.3; Pl. Com. fr. 96 with Olson 2007 ad loc. (= B36); Ar. Nu 520, 522, 1377–8; Pax 798; fr. 392; Eub. fr. 26.4.

For pleonastic πάντων with a superlative, e. g. Teleclid. fr. 2.1 πάντων ἀστῶν λῷστοι; Ar. Eq. 457 ψυχήν τ' ἄριστε πάντων; V. 605 ἥδιστον τούτων … πάντων; Archipp. fr. 15.2 πάντων μάντεων σοφώτατοι; Pl. Com. fr. 105.2 πάντων κτημάτων κράτιστον.

3 εὐδαίμον(α) ἔτικτέ σε μήτηρ For the phrasing (elevated pastiche), e. g. Il. 1.352 μῆτερ ἐπεί μ' ἔτεκές γε μινυνθάδιόν περ ἐόντα ("mother, since you bore me to be short-lived"); Od. 3.95 = 4.325 περὶ γάρ μιν ὀϊζυρὸν τέκε μήτηρ ("his mother bore him to be wretched"); E. Alc. 865 βαρυδαίμονα μήτηρ μ' ἔτεκεν ("my mother bore me to have a difficult fate").

Imperfect ἔτικτε (e. g. Il. 5.547; Hes. Th. 1008; hAp. 126; A. Eu. 321 (lyric); E. fr. 481.2) and aorist ἔτεκε (e. g. Il. 2.728; Hes. Th. 287; S. Tr. 834 (lyric); E. HF 1182) often appear to be used interchangeably metri gratia, although Aristophanes uses the former only in tragic parody (Pax 722 = E. fr. 312; Th. 1047b). On the verb and its cognates generally, see fr. 497 n.

ἰκρίων ψόφησις According to the lexicographers (Hsch. α 1695; ι 501; π 513; Phot. ι 95), the term ἴκρια ("beams" or "planks", and thus by extension "scaffolding" vel sim.[119]) was originally used for temporary bleachers set up in the Agora to accommodate audiences for processions and theatrical performances; cf. Hegesand. fr. 8, FHG iv.415; Suda π 2230 = Pratin. TrGF 4 T 1.3–4; αι 357 = A. test. 2, on the supposed collapse of a set of such stands during a tragic performance that led to construction of a stone theater, on the one hand, and to Aeschylus' decision to leave Athens for Sicily, on the other. Archaeological evidence suggests that such stands were in fact erected along the Panathenaic Way, i. e. for spectators for processional events. But here, as at Ar. Th. 395, the word is used for wooden benches or the like erected in the Theater of Dionysus by whatever contractor had purchased the rights for the show, stone seating being installed only a century or so later; stories about dramatic performances before ἴκρια in the Agora probably reflect ancient scholarly confusion regarding the use of different types of temporary stands for spectators in two separate settings. For 5th-century post-holes in the Theater that held the uprights for such stands, see Papastamati von Moock 2015. For more on seating arrangements in the Theater in this period, see fr. 372 n.

[119] For the word used of construction scaffolding, e. g. IG I³ 472.159–60, 180–2; 476.18, 25–6; II² 1672.178. In Homer, ἴκρια are "decking" vel sim. on a ship (e. g. Od. 3.353; 5.163, 252; 12.229, 414). Cf. the use of the word at Hdt. 5.16 for planking used to produce a platform on top of posts, and see Martin 1957. 75–6.

As a typical -σις noun, ψόφησις refers to the action of producing the sound rather than to the sound itself (ψόφος or ψόφημα). The noise in question might be laughter (cf. 1). But spectators also whistled, clucked their tongues and stamped their feet on the ἴκρια (an action described with the verb πτερνοκοπέω, literally "heel-tap") to express their disapproval of theatrical performances; cf. Poll. 2.197; 4.122; Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 259h = fr. 259.79 κλωγμός.[120] Since our verses represent a complaint about the audience's failure to appreciate good jokes—or at least to appreciate them while the performance is going on—the reference is thus perhaps better understood as being to the latter, i. e. to the ancient equivalent of booing.

fr. *361 K.–A. (324 K.)

"Εὔιε κισσοχαῖτ' ἄναξ, χαῖρ'", ἔφασκ' Ἐκφαντίδης (fr. 4) πάντα φορητά, πάντα τολμητὰ τῷδε τῷ χορῷ πλὴν Ξενίου νόμοισι καὶ Σχοινίωνος, ὦ Χάρον

3 Σχοινίωνος, ὦ] σχοινίωνι σῷ Kaibel χάρων Heph.[1]

"Ivy-haired lord Euhius, hail!," said Ecphantides (fr. 4) everything can be endured, everything dared by this chorus except to the tunes of Xenias and Schoiniôn, o Charon [120] "Applause" is κρότος (e. g. Amphis fr. 14.8).

Heph. Enchiridion 15.21–2, p. 54.11–20 Consbruch τούτου δὲ μεῖζόν ἐστι συλλαβῇ τῇ τελευταίᾳ τὸ καλούμενον Κρατίνειον· ἔστι γὰρ ἐκ χοριαμβικοῦ ἐπιμίκτου τοῦ τὴν δευτέραν ἰαμβικὴν ἔχοντος καὶ τροχαϊκοῦ ἐφθημιμεροῦς· ——. τὸ μὲν οὖν καθαρὸν Κρατίνειον τοιοῦτόν ἐστι· πολυσχημάτιστον δὲ αὐτὸ πεποιήκασιν οἱ κωμικοί

Longer than this because of the final syllable is the so-called Cratinean; because it is composed of a mixed choriamb containing a second iamb and a trochaic hephthemimer: ——. The pure Cratinean is also of this type, but the comic poets make it a polyschematist Meter Aeolo-choriambic "comic dicola" seemingly identical with the form used in fr. 362 and Eup. fr. 42.1–2; cf. White 1921. 238; West 1982. 96; Parker 1988. 117. Hephaestion is clearly baffled by the meter, which he misanalyzes as a mix of choriambs, iambs and trochees.

–⏑⏑–⏑–⏑– –⏑––––⏑–
–⏑⏑–⏑–⏑– –⏑–⏑–⏑–
–⏑⏑–⏑–⏑– –⏑–⏑–⏑⏑

Discussion Soping ap. Albertus 1766 II.1334 n. 11; Runkel 1827. 87; Bergk 1838. 27, 114–16; Meineke 1839 II.194–5; Kock 1880 I.108–9; Fraenkel 1964 I.358; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Bakola 2010. 39–40

Assignment to known plays Attributed to Archilochoi by Bergk.

Text Kaibel proposed σχοινίωνι σῷ for the paradosis Σχοινίωνος, ὦ in 3, taking the words as parallel with νόμοισι, on the ground that—apart from Suda κ 213 (quoted in Interpretation)—σχοινίων is attested only in the sense "song played on an aulos" (e. g. Poll. 4.65, 79). But the line make sense as is and emendation is unnecessary.

The vocative form Χάρον at the end of 3 is attested nowhere else and is not expected from a noun with a genitive in -ωνος (although cf. Ἀπόλλων, voc. Ἄπολλον, noted as an exception by Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 719.14–15; Charon occasionally shows forms in -οντ- in late sources (Phot. κ 195 = Suda κ 392; Suda τ 655)). Χάρων in Heph.[1] might thus be correct; cf. Ar. Ra. 184; Luc. DMort. 2.1; 14.2; etc.

Citation context The quotation of the verses in Hephaestion is part of a discussion of "compound" meters, i. e. those supposedly made up out of elements of different sorts, in the surviving, abridged version of a metrical handbook originally composed in the 2nd century CE most likely drawing on Heliodorus. Cf. Heph. 16.6, p. 58.5–9 Consbruch καὶ τὸ Κρατίνειον δὲ τὸ ἀσυνάρτητον ἐκ χοριαμβικοῦ καὶ τροχαϊκοῦ πολυσχημάτιστόν ἐστιν. ἀρκέσει τοῦτο δεῖξαι ἡ παράβασις ἡ ἐν τοῖς Ἀστρατεύτοις Εὐπόλιδος (fr. 42) πᾶσα, ἵνα μὴ νῦν μηκύνωμεν παραδείγματα παρατιθέμενοι ("and the Cratinean asynartêton is a polyschematist composed of a choriamb and a trochaic element. The entire parabasis in Eupolis' Astrateutoi (fr. 42) will suffice to demonstrate this, so that we do not need to go on at length citing examples").

Similar material, not necessarily drawn from the same source, is preserved at Et.Gen. AB s.v. = EM p. 761.46–9 τολύνιον· τὸ καλούμενον Κρατίνειον μέτρον πολυσύνθετον, ἀπὸ τοῦ Μεγαρέως Τολύνου· ἔστι δὲ προγενέστερος Κρατίνου. ῥητορική ("tolynion: the so-called Cratinean meter is a compound meter, named after Tolynus of Megara.[121] He is earlier than Cratinus. Rhetorical").

Interpretation The meter and content make it clear that the lines are drawn from a parabatic ode, perhaps the same as the one from which fr. 362 is drawn; cf. Sifakis 1971. 34; Quaglia 1998. 60–1. The verses do not obviously belong one after the other even if they come from the same ode (as Bergk believed), since Hephaestion sometimes skips lines in such situations. Kock nonetheless took 2–3 together ("dicit autem Cratinus omnia subeunda, omnia audenda esse choro, ut victoriam reportet, ea tamen exceptione, ut neque Xeniae neque Schoenionis modis utatur"), although it is difficult to see how he imagines the dative in 3 functioning. The references to Ecphantides (for whom, see frr. 462; 502 with n.) by name in 1, and to Callias and another poet obliquely in 3, led Bergk to believe that the general topic was a complaint about the "artis comoediae depravatio".

Although Hephaestion does not mention Cratinus by name, modern editors have followed Soping in attributing these lines to him on the ground that the meter itself is called "Cratinean" and is also used in fr. 362. This is a weak basis for argument—not all surviving Eupolideans, after all, are drawn from Eupolis' plays—and the fragment might better have been included among the dubia.

1 Perhaps the first line of the song, setting it in its Dionysiac (i.e. festival) context. Similar hymnic language in comedy is often parodic or otherwise less than serious (e.g. frr. 235; 237.2; 359; Ar. Th. 111 (mocking paratragic lyric)), but the tone of the quotation here is impossible to judge. Bergk thought Ecphantides was cited as an example of trivial, antiquated poetry, whereas Bakola takes the reference by name to indicate a favorable opinion of his words, perhaps specifically because of their mention of Dionysus.

---

[121] Nothing else is known about Tolynus. Meineke 1839 I.38–9 suggested τελλήνειον for the lemma and took this to be a reference to the lyric poet and musician Tellên (Stephanis #2394; Koumanoudes #1944), a contemporary of Epaminondas (Plu. Mor. 193f; Zenob. 2.15). According to Zenobius (1.45), Tellên's witty poems were well-composed (εὐρυθμότατα) and delightfully elegant (χάριν ἔχοντα πλείστην καὶ σκώμματα κομψότατα) and lent their name to the proverb ἄειδε τὰ Τέλληνος ("Sing the [songs] of Tellen!").

For Εὔιε (derived from the ritual cry εὐοῖ) as a name for Dionysus, cf. Ar. Th. 990 (lyric); E. Ba. 566, 579 (both lyric).

For Dionysus as κισσοχαῖτ', cf. Pratin. TrGF 4 F 3.16. The use of double sigma in place of double tau is a high-style affectation, as also at Ar. Th. 988a κισσοφόρε Βακχεῖε (lyric).

For χαῖρ(ε) used in an address to a deity, see fr. 359.1 n.

For ἔφασκ(ε) used to introduce a quotation or paraphrase of another authority, cf. Ar. V. 725–6 ἦ που σοφὸς ἦν ὅστις ἔφασκεν· "πρὶν ἂν ἀμφοῖν μῦθον ἀκούσῃς, / οὐκ ἂν δικάσαις" ("whoever said, 'don't judge until you've heard both sides of the story,' was really quite wise"); Av. 575 Ἶριν δέ γ' Ὅμηρος (hAp. 114) ἔφασκ' ἰκέλην εἶναι τρήρωνι πελείῃ ("Homer (hAp. 114) said that Iris was like a 'trembling dove'"); Antiph. fr. 205.6–7 παραδίδου δ' ἑξῆς ἐμοὶ / τὸν ἀρκεσίγυιον, ὡς ἔφασκ' Εὐριπίδης (fr. 1098) ("quickly give me 'the limb-strengthener [i. e. wine]', as Euripides (fr. 1098) said").

2 The sense is difficult, since it is unclear whether φορητά and τολμητά express possibility ("bearable" and "venturable") or necessity ("needing to be borne" and "needing to be ventured"; cf. E. Hel. 816, and note fr. 362)[122] or have the force of passive participles ("borne" and "ventured"); cf. Kühner–Blass 1892 II.288–90). Bergk takes the line to be a complaint that the chorus put up with performing in even the worst comedies assigned to them, whereas Kock (followed by Bakola) understands it as a boast that it will do whatever it must to win the prize. These are in any case two fundamentally opposed ideas: that which is borne is imposed upon one from outside and is by implication not what one would have chosen otherwise, while that which is ventured is undertaken of one's own volition and contrary to the expectations or wishes of others. For "daring everything" in a negative sense, cf. Ar. Nu. 375 τῷ τρόπῳ, ὦ πάντα σὺ τολμῶν ("How so, you who dares everything?"; Strepsiades asks Socrates what he means by maintaining that the Clouds' motion allows them to produce thunder); S. OC 761–2 ὦ πάντα τολμῶν κἀπὸ παντὸς ἂν φέρων / λόγου δικαίου μηχάνημα ποικίλον ("o you who dare everything, who would derive a crafty trick from any just argument"; Oedipus rebukes [122] Thus "omnia subeunda, omnia audeanda esse choro" (Kock) and "By this chorus, all things must be endured, all things dared" (Storey 2011. 419). Adjectives in -τος, however, do not typically express obligation.

Creon); Ph. 633–4 ἔστ' ἐκείνῳ πάντα λεκτά, πάντα δὲ / τολμητά ("he would say anything, and would dare anything"; Philoctetes of his enemy Odysseus).

φορητός is attested elsewhere before the Roman period only at Pi. fr. 33d.1; [A.] PV 979 εἴης φορητὸς οὐκ ἄν, εἰ πράσσοις καλῶς ("you would be unbearable, were you doing well"); E. Hipp. 443 Κύπρις γὰρ οὐ φορητὸν ἢν πολλὴ ῥυῇ ("for Cypris, if she flows in force, is something unbearable"); D. 21.198; Arist. Phys. 201ᵃ15; Thphr. fr. 20. The word is sufficiently common in Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Plu. Mor. 428b; 1024d; Luc. DMar. 4.1; Pisc. 27; Salt. 27; Tim. 23; Alciphr. 3.13.2, 42.1) to suggest that it was felt to be typically Attic. For the cognate verb φορέω in the sense "endure, suffer", e. g. S. OT 1320 (manuscripts).

τολμητός is attested elsewhere before the Imperial period only at Sapph. fr. 31.17 ἀλλὰ πὰν τόλματον ("but everything must be ventured"); S. Ph. 633–4 (quoted above); E. Hel. 816 ὠνητὸς ἢ τολμητὸς ἢ λόγων ὕπο; ("a matter of purchase or daring or [acquisition] by means of words?"). The cognate verb τολμάω frequently expresses shock or indignation at something said, done or asked contrary to expectation (cf. fr. 351 n.; Ar. V. 327–8 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.).

τῷδε τῷ χορῷ For the use of the deictic in reference to the chorus itself, cf. Ar. Nu. 1115–16 τοὺς κριτὰς ἃ κερδανοῦσιν, ἤν τι τόνδε τὸν χορὸν / ὠφελῶσ' ἐκ τῶν δικαίων, βουλόμεσθ' ἡμεῖς φράσαι ("we want to say how the judges will profit, if they justly help this chorus out just a bit"; from the second parabasis).

3 Xenias and Schoiniôn are generally taken to be mocking code-names for other comic poets (see below), the assumption being that their work is singled out for criticism (or at best half-hearted praise) by the chorus. Charon at the end of the line may be a similar code-name; cf. below.

Ξενίου might be the genitive of either Ξενίας or Ξενίος, both of which are attested as personal names. But Ξενίας seems more likely as a sobriquet. (On nicknames—routinely pejorative—in -ίας, see fr. 422 n.) Bergk (comparing fr. 342, and followed by Bakola) thought that Aristophanes or perhaps Phrynichus was meant, since both men were allegedly accused of being foreigners. But the evidence for the former case is very slim (see Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 392), and if the other man in question is Callias (see below), one would expect "Xenias" also to be someone whose floruit fell in the 440s–430s BCE (or earlier).

For νόμος in the sense "musical composition", see fr. 308 n.

According to Suda κ 213, Σχοινίων ("Ropey") was a nickname of the comic playwright Callias because his father was a rope-maker; cf. Sonnino 1999. 330. Callias (PA 7829; PAA 553915) was active ca. 440–430 BCE and was perhaps victorious twice; his rivalry with Cratinus is referenced at $\Sigma^{\text{VEΓ}^3\text{M}}$ Ar. Eq. 528 (τοὺς ἐχθρούς) τοὺς περὶ Καλλίαν φησί ("(the enemies [of Cratinus]) he means Callias").

Χάρον Meineke (followed by Kock), on the basis of Bergk's tentative attribution of the fragment to Archilochoi and comparing Arist. Rh. 1418^{b}28–31 Ἀρχίλοχος (fr. 19.1)… ποιεῖ … τὸν Χάρωνα τὸν τέκτονα ἐν τῷ ἰάμβῳ οὗ ἡ ἀρχή "οὔ μοι τὰ Γύγεω" ("Archilochus (fr. 19.1) … represents … the craftsman Charon in the iambic poem that begins 'Gyges' possessions are no [concern] to me'"), took this to be a reference to that poet. For references to Charon the ferryman of the Dead in comedy, cf. Ar. Lys. 606; Ra. 180–270 (a character in the play); Pl. 278; Antiph. fr. 86.4.

fr. 362 K.–A. (327 K.)

ἀλλὰ τάδ' ἔστ' ἀνεκτέον· καὶ γὰρ ἡνίκ' εὐθένει ἀνεκτέον Orus^{V} : ἀνακτέον Orus^{DL} ἡνίκ' Lobeck : ἡνίκα Orus εὐθένει Lobeck : εὐθενεῖ Orus but these things must be endured; for even when he/she/it was doing well

Orus fr. A 48a ap. Zon. p. 919 εὐθενεῖν οἱ Ἀττικοί, οἱ δὲ Ἴωνες εὐθηνεῖν. Κρατῖνος· ——. Ἡρόδοτος (2.91.3)·——. ἡ δὲ εὐθένεια παρ' οὐδενὶ τῶν Ἀττικῶν

Athenians (say) euthenein, whereas Ionians (say) euthênein. Cratinus: ——. Herodotus (2.91.3): ——. But eutheneia is not used by any Attic author Meter An aeolo-choriambic "comic dicolon" seemingly identical with the one used in fr. 361 (where see Meter).

—⏑⏑—⏑—⏑— —⏑—⏑—⏑—

Discussion Lobeck 1820. 466; Bergk 1838. 27; Kock 1880 I.109

Text ἀνεκτέον (Orus^{V}) is easier in sense than ἀνακτέον ("must be brought up, referenced"; Orus^{DL}), but either might be right.

The unmetrical scriptio plena paradosis ἡνίκα was converted by Lobeck to the elided form ἡνίκ'.

ἡνίκα is typically followed by a past tense (thus LSJ s. v.; cf. Pherecr. fr. 156.3; Eup. fr. 99.47 [conjectural]; Ar. Ach. 708), and Lobeck accordingly wrote imperfect εὐθένει for the paradosis εὐθενεῖ (pres.). Manuscripts have no authority in the case of accents and the like, and this is thus to be regarded as a correction rather than an emendation.

Citation context A note on the "proper" (i. e. 5th-century Attic) spelling of εὐθενέω and cognates. Related material is preserved at

- Orus fr. A 48b εὐθενεῖν· ἐν τῷ ε λεκτέον, οὐχὶ εὐθηνεῖν ("euthenein: [the word] should be pronounced with an epsilon, not euthênein")
- Thom. Mag. p. 136.15–16 εὐθενεῖν κάλλιον ἢ εὐθηνεῖν ("euthenein is better than euthênein").

Interpretation See fr. *361 (perhaps from the same parabasis song) with n. A bit of cold consolation intended either for the subject of εὐθένει, who has fallen on hard times, or for whoever else (the chorus itself?) must endure a now-unhappy situation. The thought might be complete, with ἀνείχετο to be supplied from the first half of the line ("for even when he/she was doing well, [he/she endured]" or "[had to endure]"); cf. similar situations at Ar. Eq. 252; Ec. 779.

ἀνεκτέον For other verbal adjectives indicating obligation or necessity in comedy, e. g. Eup. fr. 114 with Olson 2017 ad loc.; Ar. Eq. 72 τρεπτέον; V. 840 εἰσακτέον; Amphis fr. 1.5 ἀπιτέον; Alex. fr. 191.6 πλυτέον; Poultney 1963. 373–6; and see in general Bishop 1899. For the specific form, cf. S. OC 883; Pl. Tht. 167d; adesp. tr. fr. 382.

εὐθενέω —metrically guaranteed here—is attested elsewhere in the 5th century at A. Eu. 895, 908, 943 and [Arist.] Ath. 2.6,[123] whereas Herodotus (2.124.1) and Hippocrates (Aër. 12 = 2.54.14 Littré; Epid. VI 4.20 = 5.312.9 Littré) offer εὐθηνέω, making clear that the latter is an Ionic form, as Zonaras claims. εὐθηνέω is common later, but Aristides (e. g. or. 10.40) and Aelian (e. g. VH 13.1) both use εὐθενέω consistently, presumably regarding the form as an Atticism. Prosaic vocabulary (absent from lyric poetry and tragedy)[124] attested elsewhere in comedy at Men. Dysc. 275; etymology uncertain.

---

[123] εὐθενέω is also used in the manuscripts of Demosthenes (e. g. 18.286) and Theophrastus (e. g. HP 8.8.4), and at Men. Dysc. 275. εὐθηνέω dominates in the manuscripts of Aristotle (e. g. HA 569b20), which does not prove that that is what he wrote.

[124] Used metri gratia at hHom. 30.10 (late).

fr. 363 K.–A. (325 K.)

αὐτομάτη δὲ φέρει τιθύμαλλον καὶ σφάκον πρὸς αὐτῷ, ἀσφάραγον κύτισόν τε· νάπαισι δ' ἀνθέρικος ἐνηβᾷ· καὶ φλόμον ἄφθονον, ὥστε παρεῖναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἀγροῖσι

1 φέρει τιθύμαλλον Phryn.[B] : φέρει τιθύμαλον Phryn.[bcV] : τι φέρει θύμαλλον Phryn.[U] πρὸς αὐτῷ Phryn.[WBV] : πρὸς αὐτό Phryn.[NucU] : πρὸς αὖον Bergk 2 fort. ⟨κ⟩ἀσφάραγον τε· νάπαισι δ' Bergk, Hermanno duce : τ' ἐν ἅπασι Phryn. ἐνηβᾷ Phryn.[cd] : ἀνηβᾷ Phryn.[bB] 3 φλόμον Pauw : φλοὸν vel φλόον Phryn.[bcU] : φλοιὸν Phryn.[B] : φθόον Phryn.[V] ἀγροῖσι Hermann (ἀγροῖσιν scripsit) : ἀγρίοις Phryn. : ἀγροῖκοις Blaydes : τράγοισι Naber and of her own accord she produces spurge, and sage[125] in addition to it, asparagus and tree medick—and asphodel flourishes in the valleys—and mullein, boundless enough to be present in all the fields

Phryn. Ecl. 81
ἀσπάραγος· καὶ τοῦτο δυοῖν ἁμαρτήμασιν ἔχεται, ὅτι τε ἐν τῷ π καὶ οὐκ ἐν τῷ φ λέγεται, καὶ ὅτι ἴδιόν τι φυτόν ἐστιν ἄγριον ὁ ἀσφάραγος καὶ οὐκ ἐν τοῖς ἡμέροις καταλεγόμενον. ὁ γοῦν Κρατῖνος ἐν ἄλλοις ἀγρίοις αὐτὸ καταλέγων φησίν· ——· ἅπαντα γὰρ τὰ κατειλεγμένα ἄγρια asparagus: This too contains two errors, since it is written with pi rather than phi, and since asparagus is a distinctly wild plant and is not included in lists of those that are cultivated. Cratinus, for example, listing it among various wild plants, says: ——; for all the plants that are listed are wild

Ath. 2.62e–f
Κρατῖνος δὲ διὰ τοῦ φ ἀσφάραγον ὀνομάζει. καὶ Θεόπομπος (fr. 69)· ——. Ἀμειψίας (fr. 24)· ——

But Cratinus calls it aspharagos with a phi. Also Theopompos (fr. 69): ——. Ameipsias (fr. 24): ——

Meter D prol x ith, like fr. 225 (from Seriphioi; identified by Hephaestion as four dactylic feet followed by an ithyphallic) and Ar fr. 452.1; cf. Wilamowitz 1921. 402 n. 2; Dale 1968. 180–1.

–⏑⏑–⏑⏑–⏑⏑– – –⏑–⏑––
–⏑⏑–⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑ –⏑⏑⏑⏑––
–⏑⏑–⏑⏑–⏑⏑– – –⏑–⏑––

125 "sage-apple" in LSJ s. v. I (followed by Storey 2011. 419) is withdrawn in the Supplement.

Discussion Pauw 1739. 43; Hermann 1816. 644 et ap. Lobeck 1820. 110; Bergk 1838. 198–9; Meineke 1839 II.215–16; Naber 1880a. 28–9; Blaydes 1896. 283; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Sofia 2016. 86

Assignment to known plays Assigned to Ploutoi by Bergk, to Seriphioi or Horae by Storey.

Text The rare word τιθύμαλλον in 1 baffled the scribes, only one of whom got it right.

At the end of 1, the manuscripts are divided between πρὸς αὐτῷ and πρὸς αὐτό, suggesting an ambiguous exemplar offering αὐ$^{\tau()}$ vel sim. The text is metrical, which tends to support the notion that it is sound even if the point of the reference is unclear, the object in question presumably having been mentioned somewhere in the preceding lines. Bergk emended to πρὸς αὖον, altering the sense of the second half of the line to "and dry sage as well", although none of the other plants is given a descriptive adjective of this sort.

The sense of 2 as transmitted (ἀσφάραγον κύτισόν τ' ἐν ἅπασι ἀνθέρικος ἐνηβᾷ/ἀνηβᾷ) is difficult. Hermann's τε· νάπαισι is little more than a redivision of the letters, and allows ἀσφάραγον κύτισόν τ' to be dependent on φέρει in 1. Bergk added δ', eliminating hiatus and emphatically marking the new colon.

At the end of 2, the variant reading ἀνηβᾷ ("grows young again") in Phryn^{bB} probably reflects the influence of ἀνθέρικος immediately preceding it.

Kassel–Austin removed the half-stop placed at the end of 2 by Meineke and Kock, as if φλόμον ἄφθονον in 3 were a second subject for ἐνηβᾷ. But the noun is feminine rather than neuter, so the stop is needed, and φλόμον ἄφθονον must be another object of φέρει in 1, and νάπαισι δ' ἀνθέρικος ἐνηβᾷ a parenthetic interjection.[126]

The rare word φλόμον at the beginning of 3 was altered by an early copyist to the superficially appropriate φλοόν, "bark" (alternatively spelled φλοιόν); corrected by Pauw.

At the end of 3, the paradosis ἀγρίοις is unmetrical, and Hermann's ἀγροῖσι is easier than Blaydes' ἀγροῖκοις ("farmers") or Naber's τράγοισι ("he-goats").

---

[126] Alternatively, a verse containing another verb might have dropped out between 2 and 3; or the verses might be out of order, with the text originally reading αὐτομάτη δὲ φέρει τιθύμαλλον καὶ σφάκον πρὸς αὐτῷ, / καὶ φλόμον ἄφθονον, ὥστε παρεῖναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἀγροῖσι, / ⟨κ⟩ἀσφάραγον κύτισόν τε· νάπαισι δ' ἀνθέρικος ἐνηβᾷ.

Citation context Two fragments of an ancient discussion of the word ἀσφάραγος/ἀσπάραγος. Similar material, although without mention of Cratinus, is preserved at

- Phryn. PS pp. 41.8–42.3 ἀσφάραγος· διὰ τοῦ φ. βοτάνης εἶδος ἀσφάραγος πρὸς τὰς καθάρσεις ἐπιτήδειον. οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ τὰ ὄρμενα τῶν λαχάνων διὰ τοῦ π ἀσπαράγους καλοῦσιν, δυσὶ περιπίπτοντες ἁμαρτήμασιν, ὅτι τε διὰ τοῦ π λέγουσιν, δέον διὰ τοῦ φ, καὶ ὅτι τὸ ἰδίως καλούμενον ἐπί τινος πόας ἐπὶ πάντων τῶν ἐξορμενιζόντων ⟨λέγοντες⟩ τίθενται τὴν φωνήν ("aspharagos: with a phi. Aspharagos is a type of plant that is useful for purges. Many authorities refer to vegetable shoots as asparagoi with a pi, becoming involved in two errors, since they say it with a pi when they ought to say it with a phi, and since they apply a term properly used for a type of grass to every sort of shoot")
- Phot. α 3038 = Suda α 4297 = Synag. B α 2306 ἀσφάραγος· … ἔστι δέ τι καὶ βοτάνης εἶδος ἀσφάραγος, πρὸς τὰς καθάρσεις ἐπιτήδειον. οὕτω μὲν οἱ Ἀττικοὶ διὰ τοῦ φ τὴν λέξιν προφέρουσιν, οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ μὴ ἀκριβοῦντες διὰ τοῦ π λέγουσιν, καὶ ἁπλῶς τὰ τῶν λαχάνων ὄρμενα ἀσπαράγους καλοὺσιν ("aspharagos: … there is also a type of plant [known as] aspharagos, which is useful for purges. Attic-speakers present the word thus, with a phi, whereas the majority [of Greek-speakers] pronounce it inaccurately with a pi and refer generally to vegetable-shoots as asparagoi")
- Gal. XI.841.6–7 K. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ διὰ τοῦ φ λέγουσιν ἀσφάραγον ("Athenians say aspharagos with the phi").

Note also Gal. VI.641.12–16 K. (a preface to a brief discussion of the medicinal uses of the vegetable) εἴτε διὰ τοῦ φ λέγειν ἐθέλοις τὴν δευτέραν συλλαβὴν τῶν ἀσπαράγων εἴτε διὰ τοῦ π, καθάπερ ἅπαντες, οὐ νῦν πρόκειται σκοπεῖν· οὐδὲ γὰρ τοῖς ἀττικίζειν τῇ φωνῇ σπουδάζουσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ὑγιαίνειν ἐθέλουσι γράφεται ταῦτα ("whether you should pronounce the second syllable of asparagoi with phi or with pi, as everyone does, is not an issue to be considered here, since these writings are not for those eager to speak using Attic Greek, but for those who wish to be healthy").

Interpretation Presumably a description of either the earth (γῆ) generally or some individual bit of land in particular, which must have been explicitly identified in the preceding verses and which is said to produce three two-item sets of wild plants of her/its own accord, i. e. without cultivation. αὐτομάτη in 1 (n.) evokes the theme of the Golden Age (for which, see in general Baldry 1953; Pellegrino 2000, esp. 7–39; Farioli 2001, esp. 3–26). ἐνηβᾷ in 2 and ἄφθονον, ὥστε παρεῖναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἀγροῖσιν in 3 pick up and expand on the idea, and the lines are easily understood as reworking Hes. Op. 117–18 καρπὸν δ' ἔφερε ζείδωρος ἄρουρα / αὐτομάτη πολλόν τε καὶ ἄφθονον ("and the life-giving land bore fruit on her own, in large and boundless quantities and bounteous"). But none of the plants mentioned in the catalogue is of much interest to human beings, except perhaps asparagus; cf. the long and similarly unappetizing list of items supposedly grazed on by goats in Eup. fr. 13, which also includes sage, tree medick, asphodel and mullein. Despite the enthusiastic rhetoric, therefore, the praise appears to be ironic.

1 For forms of αὐτόματος used in descriptions of the Golden Age or Golden Age-like situations, e. g. fr. 172 αὐτόματα τοῖσι θεὸς ἀνίει τἀγαθά ("a god sent up spontaneous goods for them"); Hes. Op. 117–18 (quoted and translated above); Crates Com. fr. 17.6–7; Pherecr. fr. 137.3–5; Telecl. fr. 1.3 ἡ γῆ δ' ἔφερ' οὐ δέος οὐδὲ νόσους, ἀλλ' αὐτόματ' ἦν τὰ δέοντα ("the earth produced no fear or diseases, but everything they needed appeared of its own accord"); Ar. Ach. 976; Pax 665; Pl. 1190; fr. 698 ἐν τοῖς ὄρεσιν ⟨δ'⟩ αὐτόματ' αὐτοῖς τὰ μιμαίκυλ' ἐφύετο πολλά ("in the mountains many arbutus-trees grew for them as volunteers"); Metag. fr. 6.1–2.

τιθύμαλλον Spurge (Euphorbia peplus; mentioned elsewhere in comedy at Ar. Ec. 405, where it is mockingly recommended to the politician Neocleides as an ingredient in a salve for his eyes; an abusive nickname at e. g. Antiph. fr. 208.2; Alex. fr. 164.3) is a rough, low, invasive weed with a toxic, milky sap.

σφάκον Also mentioned at e. g. Eup. fr. 13.3 (in a catalogue of wild plants supposedly eaten by goats); Ar. Th. 486 (used as part of a mixture designed to calm restless bowels); Alex. fr. 132.8 (a culinary spice); Men. Dysc. 605 (mentioned along with θύμα (5) as a typical plant of the rocky Attic countryside); Thphr. HP 6.1.4, 2.5. See in general Andrews 1956. LSJ Supp. s. v. compares the Mycenaean adjective pa-ko-we (PY Fr 1200).[127]

For πρός + dative in the sense "in addition to", see LSJ s. v. B.III, and in comedy e. g. Eup. fr. 13.2; Ar. Ach. 914.

2 In addition to the passages collected by Athenaeus noted above, ἀσφάραγος is mentioned elsewhere in comedy and related genres at Anaxandr. fr. 51.1 (combined with squill and marjoram as a sauce for salt-fish); Antiph. fr. 294 (in the form ἀσπάραγος); Aristopho fr. 15.2 (partially corrupt, but seemingly another catalogue of rough wild plants) (the latter two fragments from slightly further on in the same section of Athenaeus); Philem. fr. 100.5–6 τὰ πετραῖα ταῦτ' ὀψάρια, κάππαριν, θύμον, / ἀσπάραγον, αὐτὰ ταῦτα ("these rock-land dainties, capers, thyme, asparagus, these and nothing else"; of the pot-herbs produced by a field); Matro fr. 1.16 (in a list of appetizers) with Olson–Sens 1999 ad loc. The source or sources that lie behind the entries in Phrynichus and Phot. = Suda = Synag. B appear to believe that the word was sometimes used to refer to the fresh, green edible shoot of any plant; cf. Diphilos of Siphnos ap. Ath. 2.62f. But Thphr. HP 6.4.2 seems clearly to be referring to what we today would call "asparagus", i. e. Asparagus officinalis. See Sturtevant 1887. 129–32 (expressing doubt that the mentions in Greek authors are specifically of Asparagus officinalis, and tracing cultivation of the vegetable in any case only to Roman times); Frayn 1975. 33–4 (evidence for both gathering of wild varieties and cultivation in the Roman period); Zohary–Hopf–Weiss 2012. 161–2. The variation φ/π suggests that this may be substrate (i. e. pre-Greek) vocabulary.

---

[127] "Haud dubie adiect. olei (i. e. unguenti) genus significans; utrum verbum ad salviam spectet … an ad bryon quod dicitur … incertum videtur" (Morpurgo 1963 s. v.).

κύτισον An evergreen shrub (Medicago arborea) mentioned also at e. g. fr. 105.8 κύτισος αὐτόματος (material for garlands); Eup. fr. 13.3 (food for goats; cf. Arist. HA 522^{b}27; Theoc. 5.128; 10.30; Virg. E. 1.78; 2.64) with Olson 2017 ad loc. Theophrastus describes it as invasive (HP 4.16.5). See in general Hehn 1911. 414–15; Atchley 1938. 14–15.

νάπη is in this period elevated poetic vocabulary (e. g. Il. 8.558 = 16.300; Pi. P. 6.9; Bacch. 18.23; S. OT 1398); rare in comedy (Ar. Av. 739–40 (lyric); Th. 997/8 (lyric); Men. Dysc. 351), but widely attested in Attic prose from Xenophon on.

ἀνθέρικος Properly the flower-spike of ἀσφόδελος, a hardy, herbaceous perennial plant mentioned in a catalogue of plants at Eup. fr. 13.5 (items supposedly eaten by goats, although they do not in fact consume it); see Atchley 1938. 49–50; Verpoorten 1962. 118–19; Biraud 1993. At least in modern Greece, domination by asphodel plants (= the presence of "asphodel deserts") tends to mark "the last degradation stage" of a local environment and to be the result of overgrazing, suggesting that the vigorous growth imagined in 2–3 does not represent a positive situation; see in general Pantis–Stamou 1991. The bulb can be eaten, and Thphr. HP 7.13.2 speaks of roasting the flower-spike and toasting the seed. But Hes. Op. 41 makes it clear that asphodel, like mallow (for whose unappetizing character, see Ar. Pl. 544) was rough food eaten only by those with limited options even at the end of the 8th century BCE.[128]

---

[128] Reece 2007 makes a complicated attempt to show that the Homeric κατ' ἀσφοδελὸν λειμῶνα (Od. 11.539, 573; 24.13) is in origin a misdivision of κατὰ σφοδελὸν λειμῶνα ("throughout the ash-filled meadow"), on the exaggerated ground that "The ancients—poets, botanists, physicians, and Homeric commentators alike—speak of the asphodel with high praise: fragrant to the smell; lovely to the sight; nutritious, satisfying, sweet to eat; (etc.)" (p. 395). Note inter alia that asphodel ἐνηβᾷ The compound (first attested here) is very rare, but is used of a weed flourishing in a garden bed at Nic. fr. 85.2.

3 φλόμον A genus of biennial or perennial plants with a tall flowering stem (Verbascum); mullein contains rotenone, a powerful piscicide, and was accordingly used to catch fish (Arist. HA 602^{b}31–3^{a}2). See in general Atchley 1938. 32. Mentioned also at Eup. fr. 13.5 (in a catalogue of plants supposedly eaten by goats, although they actually avoid it); Nic. Th. 856; Dsc. 4.103. Also called πλόμος and φλόνος, the variations in the form of the word serving to identify it as most likely substrate vocabulary.

ὥστε παρεῖναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἀγροῖσι expands and clarifies the sense of ἄφθονον. The idea presumably applies to all the plants that have been mentioned, even if the specific reference is only to the mullein. For the language, cf. hAp. 536 τὰ δ' ἄφθονα πάντα παρέσται ("they will all be abundantly available"); hHom. 30.8 τῷ τ' ἄφθονα πάντα πάρεστι ("for him will everything be abundantly available"). For ὥστε + infinitive picking up an idea in the preceding clause without οὕτως or a form of τοιοῦτος or the like, e. g. Ar. Ach. 656 φησὶν δ' ὑμᾶς πολλὰ διδάξειν ἀγάθ', ὥστ' εὐδαίμονας εἶναι ("he says he will teach you [so] many good things, that you will be fortunate"); V. 450–1 ἐξέδειρ' εὖ κἀνδρικῶς, / ὥστε σε ζηλωτὸν εἶναι ("I flayed you [so] vigorously, that you must have been the object of jealousy").

fr. 364 K.–A. (322 K.)

φίλοισι χαριζόμενον πονηρὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι πονηρόν αὐτὸν Aristid.^{ARY} : αὐτὸν αἰσχρόν Aristid.^{DU} : γρ(άφεται) αἰσχρόν Aristid.$^{R^2}$ that a man is himself wicked when he gratifies his friends

Aristid. or. 34.51
καίτοι φησὶ μὲν δή που Κρατίνος τῶν αἰσχρῶν (Aristid. : αἰσχρὸν δέ Meineke) ——. οὗτοι δ' εἰ μὲν φίλοις αὐτοῖς χρῶνται, παραπλησίως αὐτοῖς ἔχουσιν, ὥστ' εἰ τοῖς αὐτοῖς χαίρουσιν, αὐτοῖς ἄρ' οὐχ ἧττον ἢ τούτοις χαρίζονται. εἰ δ' αὖ μὴ νομίζουσι φίλους, ἀντὶ τοῦ χαρίζονται; εἴτε γὰρ ὡς ἐρασταῖς εἴθ' ὡς ἐρασταὶ, τό γε τῆς αἰσχύνης ἄφυκτον flowers are never among the elements used to construct banquet-garlands, and that asphodel-products never appear in comic lists of food.

---

Yet Cratinus in fact says somewhere that —— with shameful pleasures. But if these (speakers) have such persons as friends, they resemble them, so that if they enjoy the same pleasures (as their audience), they gratify themselves no less than them. But if they do not consider them friends, why do they do them favors? For regardless of whether they love (their audience) or (their audience) loves (them), the attendant shame is inescapable Meter Uncertain; Kassel–Austin suggest ⏑ D ⏑ cr ba, i. e.

⏑ –⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑ –⏑⏑– ⏑––

But they also follow Meineke—who took τῶν αἰσχρῶν, however, to belong to Cratinus rather than Aristides, and emended to αἰσχρὸν δὲ (––⏑)—in comparing the metrically problematic fr. 256 as well as fr. 257, which Wilamowitz 1921. 270 n. 1 analyzed as a mix of anapaests and iambs:

⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑–⏑⏑– ⏑––

On this thesis, fr. 364 can be understood as incapable of conversation"; ap. Plu. Alc. 13.2; Gal. VIII.653.6, 943.16 K.; Gell. 1.15.12); Ar. V. 1431 ἕρδοι τις ἥν ἕκαστος εἰδείη τέχνην ("let each man practice the craft he knows"; partially ap. Cic. Att. 5.10.3 and in translation ap. Cic. Tusc. 1.41); frr. 544 (ap. Aristid. or. 47.16); 720 (ap. Aristid. or. 32.32); E. fr. 799a ἀνδρὸς κακῶς πράσσοντος ἐκποδὼν φίλοι ("when a man is doing badly, his friends keep out of his way"; ap. Aristid. 1.60).

⟨⏑⏑⏑

Interpretation A moralizing commonplace.

fr. 365 K.–A. (328 K.)

Ath. 1.7f–8a
δοκοῦσι δ' οἱ Μυκόνιοι διὰ τὸ πένεσθαι καὶ λυπρὰν νῆσον οἰκεῖν ἐπὶ γλισχρότητι καὶ πλεονεξίᾳ διαβάλλεσθαι· τὸν γοῦν γλίσχρον Ἰσχόμαχον Κρατῖνος Μυκόνιον καλεῖ· π ῶ ς ἂ ν Ἰ σ χ ο μ ά χ ο υ γ ε γ ο ν ὼ ς Μ υ κ ο ν ί ο υ φ ι λ ό δ ω ρ ο ς ε ἴ η ς;

The inhabitants of Mykonos seem to have been criticized for greed and avarice[129] because they were poor and inhabited a miserable island. Cratinus, for example, calls the greedy Ischomachus a Mykonian: H o w c o u l d y o u , i f y o u a r e t h e s o n o f M y k o n i a n I s c h o m a c h u s , b e g e n e r o u s?

Meter Meineke suggested that the words assigned to Cratinus might be supplemented to yield two iambic trimeters, e. g.

⟨καὶ⟩ πῶς ἂν Ἰσχομάχου γεγονὼς ⟨τοῦ⟩ Μυκονίου φιλόδωρος εἴης;
⟨–⟩–⏑– ⏑–⏑– | ⟨–⟩⏑⏑–
⏑–⏑– –|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

or πῶς ⟨οὖν⟩ ἂν Ἰσχομάχου ⟨σὺ⟩ γεγονὼς Μυκονίου

φιλόδωρος εἴης;[130]
–⟨–⟩⏑– ⏑–⟨⏑⟩|⏑ –⏑⏑–
⏑–⏑– –|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

Kaibel, by contrast, printed:

πῶς ἂν ⟨σύγ'⟩ Ἰσχομάχου ⟨τοῦ⟩ γεγὼς Μυκονίου φιλόδωρος ⟨ἂν⟩ εἴης;
––⟨⏑⟩–⏑⏑–⟨–⟩⏑–⏑⏑⏑–
⏑⏑–⏑⏑––

---

[129] Not "ambition" (Rusten 2011. 218).

[130] Kaibel combined elements of Meineke's proposal to produce πῶς ἂν ⟨σύ γ'⟩ Ἰσχομάχου γεγονὼς Μυκονίου in 1.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.175–6; Cobet 1858. 147; Meineke 1858. 13; Cobet 1861. 173; Kock 1880 I.109–10; Kaibel 1887. 16

Text The text is metrically problematic and has never been convincingly restored; see Meter.

Citation context Athenaeus quotes the fragment in Book 1 in the course of a discussion of individuals overly fond of dinner parties, as evidence that the adjective "Mykonian" was used pejoratively of ravenous persons; preceded by Archil. fr. 124(a). Related material, without mention of Cratinus but quoting the same fragment of Archilochus, is preserved at

- Suda μ 1400 ≈ Phot. μ 588 (traced by Erbse to Paus.Gr. μ 25) Μυκώνιος γείτων· αὕτη τάττεται κατὰ τῶν διαβεβλημένων ἐπὶ γλισχρότητι καὶ σμικροπρεπείᾳ, παρὰ τὴν σμικρότητα τῆς νήσου τῆς Μύκωνος καὶ εὐτέλειαν. καὶ ἑτέρα παροιμία (Archil. fr. 124(a))· ——. διὰ γὰρ τὸ πένεσθαι διεβέβληντο ἐπὶ γλισχρότητι. εἴρηται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκλήτως εἰσιόντων εἰς τὰ συμπόσια ("a Myconian neighbor: this (proverb) is directed against those who are criticized for greed and pettiness, because of the small size and cheapness of the island of Mykonos. There is also another proverb (Archil. fr. 124(a)): ——; for they were criticized for greed on account of their poverty. This is also said in reference to those who attend symposia uninvited"; cf. Zenob. 5.21 (= Apost. 11.79 = Prov.Bodl. 643))
- Hsch. μ 1838 Μυκόνιον· οἱ Μυκόνιοι διεβεβόηντο ἐπὶ γλισχρότητι. γλίσχρον οὖν λέγει ("Mykonian: the inhabitants of Mykonos were notoriously greedy. He therefore says glischron ('greedy')")
- Suda ε 2145 ἐπεισπέπαικεν· εἰσεπήδησεν, εἰσῆλθε. κυρίως δὲ ἐπὶ στρατιᾶς πολεμίων. Ἀριστοφάνης Πλούτῳ (804–5)· ——. Μυκονίων δίκην ἐπεισπέπαικεν εἰς τὰ συμπόσια ("he/she/it burst in: he/she/it leapt in, came in. Properly in reference to an enemy army. Aristophanes in Wealth (804–5): ——. He burst into symposia like Mykonians (do)").

Note also (without reference to either Cratinus or Archilochus)

- Phot. μ 584 Μυκόνιον· τὸν γλίσχρον· πλεονέκται γὰρ ἐν μικροῖς οἱ Μυκόνιοι· ἢ διὰ τὸ λυπρὰν εἶναι τὴν Μύκονον ("Mykonian: a greedy man (glischron); because the Mykonians were avaricious in minor matters; or because Mykonos was a miserable island").

Interpretation A number of wealthy men named Ἰσχόμαχος are known from the second half of the 5th century, including Socrates' interlocutor in Xenophon's Oeconomicus; the first husband of the Chrysilla who later became the second wife of Callias II son of Hipponicus II; and an individual said at Lys. 19.46 to have been thought during his lifetime to be worth more than 70 talents, although after his death he was found to have had less than 20. Davies 1971. 265–8 (largely followed by Kassel–Austin) identifies all these individuals with the man mentioned by Cratinus, whereas PA and PAA split them up in a seemingly arbitrary fashion, with Cratinus' Ischomachus identified with Lysias' and with a man said at Heraclid. Pont. fr. 58 Wehrli = fr. 42 Schütrumpf (ap. Ath. 12.537c) to have squandered his fortune on parasites (collectively = PA 7726; PAA 542570).[131] Μυκονίου is accordingly most likely a joke: Ischomachus is not from Mykonos, but he is so grasping that he seems to be.

Mykonos (IACP #506) is a small, rocky island in the Cyclades not far from Delos, and was a member of the Delian League. According to Strabo (10.487), it was there that the final Giants killed by Hercules were buried, hence the proverb πάνθ' ὑπὸ μίαν Μύκονον ("everything under Mykonos alone"; referring to omnibus collections, i. e. "all in a single pot" vel sim.[132]), and its inhabitants were plagued by baldness, with the result that bald men were called "Mykonians". Aelian reports that Mykonos produced no honey (NA 5.42). For Mykonian stinginess, cf. Macho 477 with Gow 1965 ad loc.

φιλόδωρος is not attested as a personal name in Athens, hence presumably Schweighäuser's decision (followed by modern editors of the comic fragments) to treat the word as an adjective. This might nonetheless be an invented speaking name ("Fond-of-bribes").

fr. 366 K.–A. (341 K.)

Σ^{R} Ar. Th. 940
πρὸς σανίσιν ἐδεσμεύοντο πολλάκις, ὡς καὶ Κρατῖνος δηλοῖ

They were often bound to planks, as Cratinus too makes clear

Meter See Text.

Text Kassel–Austin take πρὸς σανίσιν ἐδεσμεύοντο to be a garbled version of Cratinus' own words. But δηλοῖ suggests a general summary of a portion of dialogue or—more likely—stage-action rather than direct quotation.

Citation context A note on Ar. Th. 939–40 γυμνὸν ἀποδύσαντά με / κέλευε πρὸς τῇ σανίδι δεῖν τὸν τοξότην ("Order the bowman to strip me and bind

---

[131] Kassel–Austin express doubt about the latter point, but without explaining their reasoning. Meineke suggested that the Ischomachus mentioned at Arar. fr. 16.2 might be a nephew of the man referred to by Cratinus.

[132] For the proverb, cf. Zenob. 2.23 μία Μύκονος with Bühler 1982. 185–9.

me to the plank!"; Inlaw, having been caught infiltrating a city ritual in which women alone are allowed to participate, and eager to avoid as much public humiliation as possible, pleads with the Proboulos to remove the women's clothing he is wearing before he is punished). Cf. Phot. σ 68 σανίς· καὶ ἐν ᾗ τοὺς κακούργους ἔδουν καὶ ἐν ᾗ τὰς δίκας ἐνεχάραττον· τὸ μὲν ἐν Θεσμοφοριαζούσαις, τὸ δὲ ἐν Σφηξὶ (848) δεδήλωται ("sanis: both [the plank] to which they bound evil-doers and the one on which they inscribed [notices of] trials; the former sense is on display in Thesmophoriazusae, the latter in Wasps (848)"; identified by Erbse as Ael. Dion. σ 7). Note also Hsch. δ 926 δῆσαι πρὸς σανίδι· Ἀττικῶς· βασανίσαι ἐν τῷ δεσμωτηρίῳ ("to bind to a plank: Attic style; to torture in the prison"); Phot. σ 65 σανίδα· τὸ δεσμωτικὸν ξύλον ("sanis: the piece of wood used for imprisonment").

Interpretation "The plank" (σανίς or τύμπανον, whence the term ἀποτυμπανισμός) was a form of public execution akin to crucifixion, in which the victim was fixed to a length of wood by means of two-pronged iron pins that held him fast at the neck, wrists and ankles (but without piercing his flesh) and was allowed to die (often perhaps only after a number of days of suffering). Cf. Ar. Pl. 476 (τύμπανα as instruments of torture); [A.] PV 52–81 (Prometheus' punishment for defying Zeus' authority) with Men. fr. 508.1–2 and Griffith 1983 on 26; Hdt. 7.33 (the penalty for defiling a sanctuary); Lys. 13.56 (punishment for treason and/or murder?), 67–8 (punishment for murder and stealing clothes); D. 8.61; 9.61; 10.63; 19.137 (all punishment for treason); 21.105 (punishment for inter alia murder); Arist. Rh. 1385ᵃ9–13; Duris FGrH 76 F 67 (the victims survive for ten days, until Pericles orders their heads smashed in and their bodies unceremoniously dumped) ap. Plu. Per. 28.2 with Stadter 1989 ad loc. See in general Gernet 1924. 261–95; Bonner–Smith 1938. 279–87; Todd 1993. 141. For capital punishment, see also fr. 424.

fr. 367 K.–A. (348 K.)

Phot. ο 363 = Suda ο 399
ὄνου πόκαι· ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων καὶ μὴ ὄντων λέγεται ἡ παροιμία ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀττικῶν· ὥσπερ αἱ τοιαῦται, πλίνθον πλύνειν, ἀσκὸν τίλλειν, χύτραν ποικίλλειν, εἰς κόπρον θυμιᾶν. Ἀρίσταρχος δὲ διὰ τὸ Κρατῖνον ὑποθέσθαι ἐν ᾄδου τινὰ (Suda : τινὰ om. Phot. : ⟨Ὄκνον⟩ τινὰ Erbse) σχοινίον πλέκοντα, ὄνον δὲ τὸ πλεκόμενον ἀπεσθίοντα, οἷον ἀποκείροντα donkey shearings: The proverb is used by Attic-speakers in reference to what is impossible and non-existent, like proverbs of the following sort: to wash a brick, to pluck a hide, to decorate a cookpot, to burn incense against [the smell of] dung.[133] But Aristarchus [explains the saying] by reference to the fact that Cratinus imagined someone (thus Suda : Photius omits "someone" : "a certain Ocnus" Erbse) in Hades plaiting a rope, and a donkey consuming it as it was being plaited, i.e. shearing it off

Prov. Coisl. 372
ὄνου πόκαι· ἐπὶ τῶν ἀχρήστων ἢ εἰς ἀδύνατον ὑπερβαλλομένων. Ἀρίσταρχος γὰρ Κρατῖνον ὑποθέσθαι φησί τινα ἐν Ἅιδου σχοινίον πλέκοντα, ὄνον δὲ τοῦτο κατεσθίοντα donkey shearings: in reference to what is unprofitable or utterly impossible. For Aristarchus says that Cratinus imagined someone in Hades plaiting a rope, and a donkey eating it up

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.203–4; Fritzsche 1845. 117–20; Welcker 1848. 52; Dobree 1874. 47; Kock 1880 I.114; Roemer 1908. 380; Marzullo 1989. 415–23; Dover 1993 on Ar. Ra. 186; Lelli 2006. 78–81

Assignment to known plays Welcker tentatively assigned the fragment to Cheirônes.

Text At Ar. Ra. 186, Charon lists among his various destinations in the Underworld ὄνου πόκας (thus the codd.; Ὀνουπόκας Radermacher), and Aristarchus' comment appears to represent an attempt to explain the toponym via reference to Cratinus. Plaiting (πλέκοντα) a rope that a donkey (ὄνον) immediately eats is an odd but comprehensible image for endless labor yielding no results and is thus reminiscent of the endless water-bearing of the Danaids in Hades and of the punishments of Sisyphus and Tantalus. But Aristarchus' use of the idea to explain the phrase ὄνου πόκαι ("donkey shearings") makes no sense, and Kaibel accordingly suggested that the lemma in Phot. = Suda and Prov. Coisl. be emended to ὄνου πλοκαί ("donkey plaitings"). This is no improvement, however, for (1) donkeys are thinly covered with short, coarse hairs, and trying to shear one is a good match for the other futile activities listed in the first half of the note;[134] (2) a rope rather than a donkey is plaited in Cratinus, and "donkey plaitings" is incomprehensible as short-hand for "plaitings of [a rope subsequently eaten by] a donkey"; and (3) the change [133] Or, if εἰς is intrusive, "to burn dung as incense".

[134] A mud-brick never becomes clean, but simply melts gradually away; a hide has already been stripped of hair; a cookpot is placed on the fire, and any decoration on it is immediately obscured; no matter how much incense is burnt, it cannot cancel the smell of dung.

severs the connection to Frogs (unless one chooses to print the still-incomprehensible ὄνου πλοκάς there).

Bergk proposed Ὄκνου πλοκάς at Ar. Ra. 186 (see Interpretation). Regardless of whether Aristophanes wrote this, it would seem to be what Aristarchus read, with most of the other material in Phot. = Suda to be explained as a separate gloss on the version of the text that has come down to us in the manuscripts.

Citation context Two versions of the same note (originally a set of glosses on Ar. Ra. 186; see Text), which Erbse traced to Paus.Gr. ο 13 drawing on Tarrhaios, i. e. Lucillus of Tarrha. Related material, but with no mention of Cratinus, is preserved at

- Paus.Gr. ε 21 εἰς ὄνου πόκους· ἐπὶ τῶν ἀκερδῶν καὶ ἀλυσιτελῶν. Ἀριστοφάνης (Ra. 186) ⟨δὲ⟩ χωρίον ἐν Ἅιδου διατετύπωκεν ‘Ὄνου πόκας’. λέγεται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων καὶ ἀτελῶν, ὅτι καὶ ὄνος οὔτε κείρεται οὔτε ἐξ αὐτοῦ πόκος γίνεται, ὥσπερ αἱ τοιαῦται, πλίνθον πλύνειν, ἀσκὸν ⟨δέρειν, ὠὸν⟩ τίλλειν, χύτραν ποικίλλειν, εἰς κόπρον ἀναθυμιᾶν (“to donkey shearings: in reference to what brings no profit or gain. ⟨But⟩ Aristophanes (Ra. 186) has imagined ‘Donkey Shearings’ as a place in Hades. [The expression] is used in reference to what is impossible and cannot be accomplished, since a donkey is not sheared, nor is any fleece produced from it, like [proverbs of] the following sort: to wash a brick, ⟨to flay⟩ a skin, to pluck ⟨an egg⟩, to decorate a cookpot, to burn incense against [the smell of] dung”)
- Σ Ar. Ra 186 ἐκ δὲ τοῦ δευτέρου τὸ ἀδύνατον τῶν καθ’ Ἅιδου δηλοῖ, τοῦ ἢ εἰς ὄνου πόκας. ἀδύνατον γὰρ πόκας ἀποκείρασθαι τῶν ὄνων. φαίνεται δὲ καὶ παροιμιῶδες ἤδη εἶναι … ὄνου δὲ πόκας τὸ ἄχρηστον· οὐδὲ γὰρ αἱ τοῦ ὄνου πόκες χρησιμεύουσιν. ἡ παροιμία δὲ λέγεται ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων, ἐν ᾧ τρόπῳ καὶ τὸ χύτραν ποικίλλεις, καὶ κόπρον ἀναθυμιᾷς. ἀνήνυτα δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐν Ἅιδου. διὰ τοῦτο οὖν ὄνου πόκας ἀνέπλασε ποιητικῶς (“But by his second reference, ‘to the Donkey Shearings’, [Charon] makes clear the powerlessness of those in Hades, namely ‘or into donkey shearings’ (ê eis onou pokas), since it is impossible to shear wool from donkeys. But it seems already to be proverbial … Donkey shearings are what is useless, since a donkey’s shearings are not put to any use. The proverb is said of impossible things, in the same way as ‘you’re decorating a cookpot’ and ‘you’re burning dung as incense’. The situation in Hades is also impossible, so for this reason he imagined poetically a donkey’s shearings”)
- Hsch. ο 926 ὄνου ποκαί· χωρίον ἐν ᾅδου διατετύπωκεν Ἀριστοφάνης (Ra. 186), οὕτω λεγόμενον πλάσας. ἔστι δὲ καὶ παροιμία τις· ὄνου ποκαί, ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων καὶ ἀτελῶν· οὐδὲ γὰρ αἱ πέξεις τῶν ὄνων καὶ κάρσεις δύνανταί τι. ὥσπερ εἰ λέγοι τις ὄνον κείρεις· παρόσον οὖν τὰ ἐν ᾅδου

ἀνήνυτά ἐστι καὶ τὸ μηδέν, παρὰ τοῦτο τὰς τοῦ ὄνου ποκὰς ἔπλασεν ("donkey shearings: Aristophanes (Ra. 186) conceives of a place in Hades, presenting it as referred to thus. There is also a proverb: donkey shearings, in reference to things that are impossible and unrealized; for shearing and trimming donkeys is utterly impossible. It is as if someone were to say 'You're shearing a donkey;' to the extent then that the situation in Hades is impossible and for naught, with reference to that he produced 'the shearings of a donkey'")

– Prov. Bodl. 708 ὄνου πόκας· ὁ Ἀριστοφάνης (Ra. 186) χωρίον ἐν ᾅδου διατετύπωκεν ὄνου πόκας. λέγεται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων καὶ ἀτελῶν, ὅτι καὶ ὄνος οὔτε κείρεται οὔτε ἐξ αὐτοῦ πόκος γίνεται ("donkey shearings: Aristophanes (Ra. 186) conceives of a place in Hades (called) Donkey Shearings. The expression is used of things that are impossible and unachievable, since a donkey is not shorn nor does wool come from it").

For other proverbs having to do with donkeys, e. g. fr. 56 ("the donkey is rained upon", i. e. "ignored"); Eup. fr. 279 ("a donkey hears a trumpet" with Olson 2016 ad loc. (with extensive bibliography on the animal itself); Ar. V. 191 περὶ ὄνου σκιᾶς ("about a donkey's shadow", i. e. "about nothing at all") with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Av. 1328 ("slow as a donkey"); Ra. 159 ("a donkey celebrating the Mysteries", i. e. "getting no pleasure out of the event"); Paus.Gr. o 17–21, 23–4; Petron. 63.1 asinus in tegulis ("a donkey on the roof").

Interpretation What Phot. = Suda and Prov. Coisl. mean by ὑποθέσθαι is unclear. But there is no obvious reason to take the point to be that Cratinus represented an Underworld scene featuring the man and the donkey that tormented him, as opposed to having a character make verbal reference to them. Cf. the mention of the Danaids and their endless water-bearing in Hades at Philetaer. fr. 17.5; and for the theme of Underworld torment, the catalogue of evil-doers punished via submersion in muck and a river of shit at Ar. Ra. 145–51 and the sufferings of Tantalus and Sisyphus as described at Od. 11.582–600.

Ὄκνος (lit. "Hesitator") was depicted in a painting at Delphi of Odysseus' visit to the Dead by Cratinus' rough contemporary Polygnotus (Paus. 10.29.1–2; cf. Plin. Nat. 35.137; Stansbury-O'Donnell 1990); for his punishment in the Underworld[135], see also Plu. Mor. 473c; Prop. 4.3.21–2; and cf. Poll. 4.142; Arnott

[135] The reason for Oknos' punishment is unknown, although one would expect it to be related to his diffident unwillingness to act (hence his name; see in general Lavery 1998. 8–9), and at Apul. Met. 6.18 Oknos sits helpless before a donkey that has stumbled, as its load of wood falls to the ground. According to Paus. 10.29.2, by 1962; Graf 1974. 188–94; Hoffmann 1994; Felten, LIMC VII.1.33–5. Roemer reasonably took Cratinus to have been referring specifically to Oknos—which is insufficient grounds, however, for Erbse's attempt to insert his name into the text of Phot. = Suda (and presumably the Prov. Coisl. as well).

For rope and rope-making, see Ar. Pax 35–7 with Olson 1998 ad loc.

fr. 368 K.–A. (332 K. = Margitês test. 2 Gostoli)

Eustratius in Arist. EN 6.7 (CAG XX pp. 320.36–321.1 Heylbut) = Margitês test. 1 Gostoli παράγει δ' εἰς μαρτυρίαν τοῦ εἶναι τὸν ὅλως σοφὸν ἕτερον παρὰ τόν τινα σοφὸν καί τινα ποίησιν Μαργίτην ὀνομαζομένην Ὁμήρου. μνημονεύει δ' αὐτῆς οὐ μόνον αὐτὸς Ἀριστοτέλης ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ Περὶ ποιητικῆς (1448^{b}30) ἀλλὰ καὶ Ἀρχίλοχος (fr. 303) καὶ Κρατῖνος (Ἀρχιλόχοις Κρατῖνος Bergk) καὶ Καλλίμαχος (fr. 397) ἐν τῷ ἐπιγράμματι, καὶ μαρτυροῦσιν εἶναι Ὁμήρου τὸ ποίημα

He brings forth as evidence that the one who is clever in all respects is different from the one who is clever only at certain things a poem by Homer called Margitês. Not only does Aristotle himself mention (this poem) in Book 1 of the Poetics (1448^{b}30), but so do Archilochus (fr. 303) and Cratinus ("Cratinus [in] Archilochoi" Bergk) and Callimachus (fr. 397) in his epigram, and they provide evidence that the poem is by Homer

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.188; Bergk 1882 II.430; Bakola 2010. 18 n. 15, 78

Assignment to known plays Bergk's conjecture attributes the fragment to Archilochoi.

Citation context A comment on Aristotle's quotation of Margites fr. 2 West in the course of his discussion of wisdom (sophia) in the Nichomachean Ethics. Eustratius dates to the 12th century CE and must be drawing all this information from some now-lost secondary source.

Interpretation The Margitês ("Madman", < μάργος, "mad"), written in the Ionic dialect and composed of hexameters alternating irregularly with trimeters, survives only in fragments (presented most recently in West 2003. 240–53; Gostoli 2007. 46–65) and is repeatedly if dubiously attributed by ancient sources to Homer. The poem is called after its central character, who was proverbially stupid (fr. 3 West "He had abilities, all of them defective"); he had no idea how to consummate his marriage, for example, and had to be tricked contrast, Oknos was a symbol of a hard-working man whose wife wasted whatever he earned. D.S. 1.97 mentions a performance of the myth at Acanthi, an Egyptian city, in which one man plaited a rope and others behind him undid it.

---

by his wife into having sex (fr. 5 West), and at one point he managed to get his penis caught in a chamber pot (fr. 7 West). See in general also Langerbeck 1958; Forderer 1960; Bossi 1986 (assigning the poem to Xenophanes); West 2003. 225–8. For a modern parallel, cf. 45 (although the Homeric Margitês is never described as a criminal or a traitor).

If Archilochus knew the Margitês, as Eustratius seemingly reports, it must date to the 7th century BCE or earlier. More likely this is bad information or the text is corrupt, as Bergk suggested, and the reference to the poem in Cratinus—assuming it is legitimate—is the earliest that survives.

fr. 369 K.–A. (331 K.)

Ath. 13.596b–c
ἐνδόξους δὲ ἑταίρας καὶ ἐπὶ κάλλει διαφερούσας ἤνεγκεν καὶ ἡ Ναύκρατις· Δωρίχαν τε, ἣν ἡ καλὴ Σαπφὼ (fr. 254c) ἐρωμένην γενομένην Χαράξου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτῆς κατ' ἐμπορίαν εἰς τὴν Ναύκρατιν ἀπαίροντος διὰ τῆς ποιήσεως διαβάλλει ὡς πολλὰ τοῦ Χαράξου νοσφισαμένην. Ἡρόδοτος (2.135.1) δ' αὐτὴν Ῥοδῶπιν καλεῖ ἀγνοῶν ὅτι ἑτέρα τῆς Δωρίχας ἐστὶν αὕτη, ἡ καὶ τοὺς περιβοήτους ὀβελίσκους ἀναθεῖσα ἐν Δελφοῖς (cf. Hdt. 2.135.4), ὧν μέμνηται Κρατῖνος διὰ τούτων· (b^A : διὰ Πλούτων Meineke)

Naucratis also produced famous and exceptionally beautiful courtesans, including Doricha, who was a lover of Sappho's brother Charaxus, who sailed to Naucratis on a trading journey; the lovely Sappho (fr. 254c) abused her in her poems for extracting a substantial amount of money from Charaxus. Herodotus (2.135.1) refers to her as Rhodopis, being unaware that this is a different person from Doricha; [Rhodopis] also dedicated the notorious spits in Delphi (cf. Hdt. 2.135.4), which Cratinus mentions in the following (thus $Ath.^A$: "in Ploutoi" Meineke)

Discussion Lidov 2002. 219–21, 229–33

Assignment to known plays Meineke's conjecture attributes the fragment to Ploutoi.

Citation context A brief discussion of Doricha in the course of a long treatment of famous courtesans. Similar material referring to Doricha/Rhodopis and Sappho (but with no mention of Cratinus) is preserved at

- Str. 17.808 ἣν Σαπφὼ μέν, ἡ τῶν μελῶν ποιήτρια, καλεῖ Δωρίχαν … ἄλλοι δ' ὀνομάζουσι Ῥοδῶπιν ("whom Sappho, the lyric poetess, calls Doricha … but other authorities refer to as Rhodopis")
- Phot. ρ 137 = Suda ρ 211 Ῥοδώπιδος ἀνάθημα· ἐν Δελφοῖς ὀβελίσκοι πολλοί· Ἀπελλᾶς δὲ ὁ Ποντικὸς οἴεται καὶ ἐν Αἰγύπτωι πυραμίδα, Ἡροδότου ἐλέγχοντος τὴν δόξαν· ἦν δὲ Θρᾶσσα τὸ γένος· ἐδούλευσε δὲ σὺν Αἰσώπω

Ἰάδμονι Μιτυληναίῳ· ἐλυτρώσατο δὲ αὐτὴν Χαράξας ὁ Σαπφοῦς ἀδελφός· ἡ δὲ Σαπφὼ Δωρίχαν αὐτὴν καλεῖ ("Rhodopis' offering: numerous spits at Delphi; Apelles of Pontus thinks this was also a pyramid at Egypt, although Herodotus refutes the notion. She was Thracian by birth, but was a fellow-slave of Aesop of Iadmon from Mytilene. Charaxas the brother of Sappho ransomed her; but Sappho calls her Doricha").

Interpretation The passage of Cratinus has fallen out of the text.

According to Herodotus (2.134–5)—a contemporary of Cratinus—Ῥοδῶπις (lit. "Rosy-faced", i. e. "Rosy-cheeked", and thus probably a professional working-name; mentioned also in adesp. com. fr. *489) was a 6th-century BCE courtesan from Thrace who belonged to Iadmon of Samos (also the master of Aesop) but was brought to Naucratis in Egypt by Xanthes of Samos during the reign of Amasis II (570–526 BCE). In Naucratis Rhodopis met Charaxus, the brother of the poetess Sappho, who paid a large amount of money to set her free; Sappho responded with a poem abusing Charaxus.[136] Rhodopis remained in Naucratis after her manumission and used a tenth of her income to dedicate large iron spits for cooking oxen at Delphi; Herodotus reports that in his day they lay behind an altar in front of the temple. Herodotus (2.134.1) also reports that it was commonly said that Rhodopis had built the third pyramid, but calls the story absurd (2.134.2); Pliny the Elder nonetheless passes it on as fact (Nat. 36.82).[137] How the Rhodopis who dedicated the spits in Delphi mentioned by Cratinus came to be associated with the woman with whom Charaxus was involved—apparently called Doricha in Sappho's poems[138]—is unclear. But Athenaeus is probably right that Herodotus is confused or has been taken in by a source; see in general Lidov 2002.

Lidov 2002. 230, comparing Cratinus' use of various literary figures onstage in e. g. Archilochoi, Odysseis, Dionysalexandros and Kleobulinai, suggests that Cratinus used the legendary Rhodopis as a foil for Sappho (represented as a courtesan) in one of his plays, and that the comedy may have served as 136 Athenaeus, by contrast, says that the poem was directed against Rhodopis and accused her of extorting money out of Charaxus.

---

137 See in general Coche-Zvie 1972. 131–7. A variant of the tale preserved in Diodorus Siculus (1.64.14) and Strabo (17.808) has the pyramid built by Rhodopis' lovers to be her tomb rather than by Rhodopis herself. Strabo and Aelian (VH 13.33) also claim that one day, as Rhodopis was bathing in Naucratis, an eagle snatched up one of her sandals, flew away with it, and dropped it in the lap of the Egyptian king, who sought out the owner and, once he found her, made her his queen.

138 Wilamowitz restored Doricha's name in Sapph. fr. 15.11, but there is no other trace of her in the poems and little reason to think that the supplement is correct.

the source of Herodotus' information about Rhodopis' dedication in Delphi. This is merely a guess, made less credible by the fact that Athenaeus reports only that Cratinus mentioned Rhodopis' spits, not that Rhodopis herself was a character in one of the comedies, and it is easier to think that the story is a bit of historical embroidery associating a well-known dedication with a notorious literary figure that was manufactured at Delphi and passed on to a credulous visitor.

fr. 370 K.–A. (330 K.)

Ath. 2.69d
Κρατῖνος δέ φησι Φάωνος ἐρασθεῖσαν τὴν Ἀφροδίτην ἐν καλαῖς θριδακίναις αὐτὸν ἀποκρύψαι. Μαρσύας δ' ὁ νεώτερος ἐν χλόῃ κριθῶν

Cratinus says that after Aphrodite fell in love with Phaôn, she hid him away among beautiful lettuce plants. Whereas Marsyas the Younger (FGrH 135–6 F 9) claims that it was in a field of unripe barley

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.178; Kock 1880 I.110

Text Meineke and Kock treat καλαῖς θριδακίναις as a direct quotation of Cratinus.

Citation context From a section of a discussion of lettuce (thridax) that stresses (1) the vegetable's association with the story of Adonis (citing Nic. fr. 120; Call. fr. 478) and (2) its reputation as a cause of impotence (citing Amphis fr. 20; Eub. fr. 13). Similar material, but without mention of Cratinus, is preserved at Ael. VH 12.18 τὸν Φάωνα κάλλιστον ὄντα ἀνθρώπων ἡ Ἀφροδίτη ἐν θριδακίναις ἔκρυψε ("Aphrodite hid Phaon, who was the most beautiful of mortals, in lettuce plants").

Interpretation According to Aelian (VH 12.18), Lucian (DMort. 19.2) and Ovid (Her. 15), Φάων was a ferryman at Mitylene on Lesbos. At some point Aphrodite came to him, disguised as an old woman, and asked him to take her across to the coast of Asia Minor. Phaon complied, and as a reward Aphrodite gave him an alabaster vase containing perfume, with which Phaon anointed himself and became young again and indeed the handsomest man on Lesbos. Among the women who fell in love with him, according to Ovid and Paus.Gr. φ 4, was Sappho—distinguished from the poetess by Pausanias—who ultimately threw herself into the sea from a cliff when Phaon wanted nothing more to do with her; cf. Men. fr. 258 Körte = Leucad. fr. 1. According to Aelian, Phaon was eventually killed when he was caught committing adultery. Phaon was the title character of a comedy by Plato Comicus and is named by Plautus as one of only two men ever loved so much by a woman (Mil. 1246–7). Paus.Gr. φ 4 claims that "Phaon" was proverbial for a lovely but arrogant man; cf. Luc. DMeretr. 12; Liban. ep. 257.2. See in general Berger-Doer, LIMC VII.1.364–5; Pirrotta 2009. 338–40. This is the earliest reference to the story.

Athenaeus does not explain why Cratinus' Aphrodite placed Phaon in a bed of lettuce. But a few lines earlier he glosses a similar story about Aphrodite and Adonis (Call. fr. 478) by claiming that this is "the poet's way of saying allegorically that men who eat too much of [the vegetable] lose their sexual powers" (2.69c), so what the goddess was likely trying to do in both cases was to keep her human favorite from being of any use to mortal rivals.

θριδακίνη (identified as pre-Greek vocabulary by Beekes 2010 s. v. θρίδαξ) is attested elsewhere in Attic comedy at Amphis fr. 20.1; Eub. fr. 13.1 (both from the same section of Athenaeus), and is identified as an Atticism at Trypho 19.3, hence presumably its presence in Phrynichus (Ecl. 101) and in various Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Luc. VH 1.13; Lex. 4; Alciphr. 4.13.17 (twice)). Poll. 1.247 counts lettuce among the potherbs (lachanai). See in general Whitaker 1969; Zohary–Hopf–Weiss 2012. 155–6, and on kitchen gardening generally, Leach 1982.

fr. 371 K.–A. (374 K.)

Phot. α 267 = Synag. B α 301
ἀ γ ρ ο β ό α ς (sic Phot.[z] : γροβόας Phot.[b] : ἀγροῖκος Synag. B) ἀ ν ή ρ· ὁ ἀγροίκως φθεγγόμενος καὶ οὐκ ἀστείως οὐδὲ ἐμμελῶς. οὕτως Κρατίνος a n a g r o b o a s (thus Phot.[z] : groboas Phot.[b] : agroikos, "rustic" Synag. B) m a n: one who speaks in a manner that is rustic and not sophisticated or appropriate. Thus Cratinus Meter Kock (giving all of ἀγροβόας ἀνήρ to Cratinus (see Interpretation) and comparing Ar. Ach. 570 τειχομάχας ἀνήρ) took this to be a dochmiac:

⏑⏑⏑–⏑–

Discussion Kock 1880 I.118

Text γροβόας in Phot.[b] is a crude error, while the Synagoge (perhaps influenced by the gloss that follows) has substituted a common term for a much rarer one.

Citation context An Atticist note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge B commonly referred to as Σ′′′. A more substantial version of the same note, but with the reference to Cratinus stripped out, is preserved at Phryn. PS p. 26.16–17 ἀγροβόας ἀνήρ· ὁ ἀγροίκως φθεγγόμενος καὶ οὐκ ἐμμελῶς. χρῶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀηδῶν καὶ μεγαλοφώνων ("an agroboas man: one who speaks crudely and inappropriately. Use (the word) of those who are unpleasant and speak in a loud voice").

Interpretation Cratinus likely used only ἀγροβόας (case unknown), and ἀνήρ has been supplied by the lexicographic tradition to make clear that the adjective was applied to a person. Cf. frr. 381–2 with nn.; Eup. fr. 141 ἐγχώριος ἀνήρ; Amips. fr. 28 ἄκοπος ἀνήρ.

In most compounds in ἀγρο-, the first constituent has the locative sense "in the field/country"; cf. ἀγροβότης, "feeding in the field" (S. Ph. 214 (lyric); E. Cyc. 54 (lyric; ἀγροβάτης Tr[3])); ἀγρομενής, glossed ὁ ἐν ἀγρῷ διατρίβων καὶ εἰς ἄστυ μὴ κατιών ("a man who spends his time in the country and does not visit the city") at Hsch. α 822, citing Call. fr. 371. The literal sense of ἀγροβόας (a hapax) should thus be something like "shouting in a field," which is not what the gloss in Phryn. ~ Phot. = Synag. claims. It is a small leap, however, from the idea of shouting in a field to that of shouting as if in a field or out in the countryside, as a farmer or herdsman might, i. e. employing one's "outdoor voice". The use of "Doric alpha" suggests that the word is designed to evoke high-style compounds such as ἀδεισιβόας ("not fearing the battle-cry"; Bacch. 5.155; 11.61), ὀξυβόα ("shrill-shouting"; A. Ag. 57 (lyric); subsequently at Luc. JTr. 3) and καλλιβόας ("beautiful-sounding"; S. Tr. 640 (lyric)).

Ar. fr. 706 mentions an ordinary urban dialect (mesên poleôs) as distinct from an effeminate urban dialect (asteian hypothêlyteran), on the one hand, and a servile rural dialect (aneleutheron hypagroikoteran), on the other. Here the reference is to the way the individual in question talks (too loudly for polite society) rather than his accent or vocabulary. But lurking behind it is in any case the idea of country folk as less socially polished than city-dwellers. Cf. adesp. com. fr. *947 ἀγροίκου μὴ καταφρόνει ῥήτορος ("Don't look down on a rustic speaker!"); Pl. Lg. 880a ἄγροικος καὶ ἀνελεύθερος ἂν λεγόμενος ἀνδραποδώδης τε ("a rustic, servile man speaking like a slave"); the Platonic idiom ἀγροίκως λέγειν (literally "to speak in a rustic manner", i. e. crudely; e. g. Ap. 32d; Grg. 486c; 509a; Euthd. 283e, 284e; R. 361e, 613e); and for the character of the agroikos (likely a stock-figure in late 5th-century comedy; cf. Strepsiades in Aristophanes' Clouds and the farmer/goatherd figure in Eupolis Aiges), see Thphr. Char. 4 and more generally Ribbeck 1888; Konstantakos 2005.

fr. 372 K.–A. (339 K.)

Phot. α 505 = Synag. B α 497
α ἰ γ ε ί ρ ο υ θ έ α καὶ ἡ παρ' αἴγειρον θέα· Ἀθήνησιν αἴγειρος ἦν, ἧς πλησίον τὰ ἴκρια ἐπήγνυον εἰς τὴν θέαν πρὸ τοῦ τὸ θέατρον γενέσθαι. οὕτως Κρατῖνος a p o p l a r v i e w and the view alongside a poplar.[139] There was a poplar tree at Athens, near which they used to set up the grandstands as the viewing spot before the Theater existed. Thus Cratinus

Discussion Bergk 1838. 262–3; Meineke 1839 II.189; Kock 1880 I.112; Roselli 2011. 72–5; Storey 2011. 423

Text Kassel–Austin (following Meineke and Kock) take the words αἰγείρου θέα to be drawn more or less direct from Cratinus, although the note in Photius = Synagoge might just as easily be understood as assigning him responsibility for the information contained in the gloss rather than for the initial lemma.

Citation context From the common source of Photius and the Synagoge B generally referred to as Σ‴. Wilamowitz thought the source for the material was the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (Paus.Gr. α 128), but very similar material at Hsch. π 513 (omitting the mention of Cratinus) shows that much of it goes back to Eratosthenes: παρ' αἰγείρου θέα· Ἐρατοσθένης (fr. 3 Strecker) φησὶ ὅτι πλησίον αἰγείρου τινὸς θέα (αἴγειρος δέ ἐστι φυτοῦ εἶδος) ἐγγὺς τῶν ἰκρίων. ἕως οὖν τούτου τοῦ φυτοῦ ἐξετείνετο καὶ κατεσκευάζετο τὰ ἰκρία, ἅ ἐστιν ὀρθὰ ξύλα ἔχοντα σανίδας προσδεδεμένας, οἷον βαθμούς, ἐφ' αἷς ἐκαθέζοντο πρὸ τοῦ κατασκευασθῆναι τὸ θέατρον ("a view from beside a poplar: Eratosthenes (fr. 3 Strecker) says there was a viewing place near a certain poplar—a poplar is a kind of tree—close to the ikria. The ikria, then, were extended and set up as far as this tree; ikria are vertical lengths of wood with boards lashed to them like steps, on which they used to sit before the Theater was constructed").

Additional traces of the same note are preserved at – Hsch. α 1695 = Suda αι 35 αἰγείρου θέα· αἴγειρος ἦν Ἀθήνῃσι πλησίον τοῦ ἱεροῦ, ἔνθα πρὶν γενέσθαι θέατρον τὰ ἴκρια ἐπήγνυον ("a poplar view: there was a poplar at Athens near the sanctuary, where they used to set up the ikria before there was a theater")

---

[139] Not "the poplar" (Rusten 2011. 218, offering the same translation in Hsch. π 513 (quoted below)).

- Hsch. θ 166 θέα παρ' αἰγείρῳ· τόπος αἴγειρον ἔχων, ὅθεν ἐθεώρουν. εὐτελὴς δὲ ἐδόκει ἡ ἐντεῦθεν θεωρία· μακρόθεν γὰρ ἦν καὶ εὐώνου ὁ τόπος ἐπωλεῖτο ("a view beside a poplar: a place with a poplar, from where they used to watch (the shows). Watching from there was apparently inexpensive, since it was far away and the place was sold for a low price")
- Phot. θ 47 θέαν παρ' αἴγειρον· τὴν πόρρωθεν λέγουσιν· αἴγειρος γὰρ ἦν τῶν ἰκρίων πλησίον ("a view alongside a poplar: They refer (thus) to the view from a distance, because there was a poplar near the ikria"; tentatively traced by Erbse to Aelius Dionysius (θ *5))
- Suda α 2952 = Synag. B α 1651 ἀπ' αἰγείρου θέα καὶ παρ' αἴγειρον· ἡ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐσχάτων. αἴγειρος γὰρ ἐπάνω ἦν τοῦ θεάτρου, ἀφ' ἧς οἱ μὴ ἔχοντες τόπον ἐθεώρουν ("a view from a poplar and (a view) beside a poplar: the view from the furthest distance, since there was a poplar above the Theater, from where those who lacked a place (to sit) used to watch the show")
- Eust. p. 1523.53–5 = i.199.44–6 = Paus.Gr. α 128 ἦν γοῦν φασιν αἴγειρος Ἀθήνῃσιν ἐπάνω τοῦ θεάτρου ἀφ' ἧς ἐθεώρουν οἱ μὴ ἔχοντες τόπον. ὅθεν καὶ ἡ ἀπ' αἰγείρου θέα ἐλέγετο. καὶ παρ' αἴγειρον θέα, ἡ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐσχάτων. καὶ ἦν φασιν εὐωνοτέρα ἡ παρ' αἴγειρον θέα ("there was at any rate, they say, a poplar at Athens above the Theater from which those who lacked a place (to sit) used to watch the show, whence also the saying 'the view from a poplar'. Also 'a view beside a poplar,' meaning the one from the furthest distance. And they say that the 'view beside a poplar' was quite inexpensive").[140]

Interpretation For the ἴκρια (temporary wooden stands erected in the Theater area for shows before stone seating was installed in the second half of the 4th century BCE), see fr. 360.3 n. According to Eratosthenes (whose sources other than the Cratinus fragment are obscure), a poplar tree stood on the slope above the last row of seats, and one could pay for the right to watch from there (standing rather than sitting, like SRO places at the back of some modern theaters?) rather than buying a more expensive ticket for a seat in the stands. See Roselli (who posits that this fragment suggests that Cratinus—i. e.

---

[140] Hsch. α 5716 ἀπ' αἰγείρων· Ἀνδροκλέα τὸν ἀπ' αἰγείρων (adesp. com. fr. 278) ἀντὶ τοῦ συκοφάντην, ἐπειδὴ ἐκ τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ αἰγείρου τὰ πινάκια ἐξῆπτον, τουτέστιν ἐξήρτων, οἱ ἔσχατοι ("from poplars: Androcles from poplars (adesp. com. fr. 278) instead of 'the sycophant', since those furthest away used to fasten, i. e. hang, the tablets from the poplar in the Agora"; obscure) refers to different poplar trees (note the plural), but might be connected somehow with the tradition that there were not only ἴκρια but also dramatic performances early on in the Agora (see fr. 360.3 n.).

Cratinus' chorus—addressed the members of the audience located by the poplar tree, a thesis to which the text itself lends no support).[141]

fr. 373 K.–A. (22 Dem.)

Phot. α 830 = Synag. B α 758
ἄ κ ο ς (sic Synag. : κος Phot.) π ε ρ ί α π τ ο ν· Ἀττικῶς εἴρηται. κέχρηται τῇ συνθήκῃ Κρατῖνος a r e m e d y h u n g a b o u t o n e s e l f (thus Synag. : the beginning of the first word is missing in Phot.): an Attic expression. Cratinus uses the combination

Citation context An Atticist note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′′′, but ultimately to be traced to a more complete version of Phryn. PS p. 26.11–13 ἄκος περίαπτον· Ἀττικῶς εἴρηται κατὰ σύνθεσιν ⟨μετὰ⟩ τοῦ ἄκος. τὸ δὲ περίαπτον κατὰ μόνον ⟨ἐπὶ τοῦ περιάμματος⟩ καθωμίληται ("an amulet: an Attic expression involving a combination ⟨with⟩ akos ('cure'). But periapton alone is conventionally used in reference ⟨to an amulet⟩").

Interpretation For περιάπτω and cognates referring to the fastening of magical objects about relevant portions of one's body to ward off or cure disease, Pi. P. 3.52–3 γυίοις περάπτων πάντοθεν / φάρμακα ("fastening remedies to their limbs from every side"; among the medical resources of the mortal Asclepius); Bonner 1950. 3–4; Jouanna 2011. 50–4 (Galen). For magic amulets and rings generally, see Bonner 1950. 1–22; Nagy 2012, esp. 89–102; Dasan 2015 (with particular attention to the Roman period); Faraone 2017. For similar magical devices, cf. Ar. Pl. 883–5 (a ring proof against stings from venomous creatures); Antiph. fr. 175.3–5 (a ring that guards against an upset stomach; sold for one drachma); Anaxil. fr. 18.6–7 (Ephesêia grammata, magical words supposedly written on the cult statue of Artemis at Ephesus and inscribed on a leather charm) with Bernabé 2013.

---

[141] Roselli further maintains that spectators were not charged for watching plays "from the poplar". Hsch. θ 166 and Eustathius (the only ancient sources to address the question) disagree, asserting that watching from here was merely less expensive than purchasing a regular seat. Nor is there is any obvious reason why whoever owned the rights to the show would have passed up the revenue "poplar view" spectators represented.

Despite Phrynichus, ἄκος περίαπτον seems less likely to be an Attic colloquialism than a high-style poetic periphrasis ("a fastened-about cure" meaning "something that is wrapped about one and produces a cure").

ἄκος is not otherwise attested in comedy.

Elsewhere in the classical period, περίαπτον is a noun meaning "an object fastened about (a person)" and thus "an amulet" (LSJ s. v. II; confined to Attic prose, although most likely only via the accidents of attestation).

fr. 374 K.–A. (21 Dem.)

Phot. α 808
ἀκοῦσαι ὀργῶ· Κρατῖνός φησιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ Θουκυδίδης (4.108.6)· Λακεδαιμονίων ὀργώντων. σημαίνει δὲ τὸ ὀργᾶν ⟨τὸ⟩ πάνυ ἐπαίρεσθαι πρὸς τὸ πρᾶξαί τι ἢ ἀκοῦσαι. … συγγραφικὴ μέντοι ἡ φωνὴ ἡ ἀκοῦσαι ὀργῶ

I'm eager to hear: Cratinus uses the expression, as does Thucydides (4.108.6) as well: the Spartans being eager. orgân means to be extremely excited to do or hear something … However, the phrase "I'm eager to hear" (akousai orgô) is more suited to prose

Citation context From a richly informed Atticist note that nonetheless confounds ὀργάω with ὀργάζω ("soften"; cf. Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 266), which is from a different root. Drawn at least in part from a more complete version of Phryn. PS p. 8.12–13, which has otherwise been transmitted only in the truncated form ἀκοῦσαι ὀργῶ· σημαίνει τὸ πάνυ ἐπαίρομαι πρὸς τὸ πρᾶξαί τι ἢ ἀκοῦσαι ("I'm eager to hear: means 'I'm very excited to do or hear something'").

Interpretation For ὀργῶ similarly used in the sense "be bursting with eagerness (to do something)" (an Atticism, as Phrynichus observes), cf. Ar. Av. 462 with Dunbar 1995 ad loc.; Lys. 1113 (both better included under LSJ s. v. II.2, "to be eager or ready, to be excited" than under LSJ s. v. II.1, "swell with lust, wax wanton, be rampant"); A. Ch. 454 ὄργα μαθεῖν; Th. 8.2.2 ὀργῶντες κρίνειν.

fr. 375 K.–A. (380 K.)

Phot. α 889–90 = Synag. B α 832
ἀλαζών· ὑπερήφανος (= Lex. Boys. p. x[a] 3). κυρίως δὲ ὁ ἀπατευών. ἀ λ α ζ ὼ ν κ α ὶ κ ο μ π ό ς (ἀλαζὼν om. Phot.[b], gl. 889 et 890 conflatis : κυρίως … κόμπος om. Synag. B)· ψεύστης καὶ κομπαστής. οὕτως Κρατῖνος alazôn: arrogant (= Lex. Boys. p. x[a] 3); but properly a deceiver. a l a z ô n a n d b o a s t f u l ("a deceiver and boastful" Phot.[b], conflating α 889 et 890; "properly … boastful" omitted by Synag. B): a liar and a boaster. Thus Cratinus Meter Unknown; the words as transmitted scan ⏑————× and might be accommodated in e. g. anapaests or dactyls.

Discussion Theodoridis 1979. 29–30

Text The second κομπός fell out of the text in Phot.[b], while Synag. B omits everything between ὑπερήφανος and ψεύστης. In both cases, the result is that what are properly two notes are run together into one.

Citation context A note traced by Cunningham to the common source of Photius and the Synagoge B conventionally referred to as Σ´´´, and taken by Erbse to be drawn from Aelius Dionysius (α 72, arbitrarily restored ἀλαζών· κυρίως ὁ ἀπὸ ἄλης ζῶν καὶ ἀγύρτης, μεταφορικῶς δὲ ὁ ψεύστης καὶ κομπαστής. οὕτω Κρατῖνος ("alazôn: properly one who lives by wandering and a vagabond, but metaphorically a liar and a boaster. Thus Cratinus"). Related material, but with no mention of Cratinus, is preserved at

- Hsch. α 2731 ἀλαζών· ὑπερήφανος. ψεύστης ἢ ἀπὸ ἄλης ζῶν ("alazôn: arrogant; a liar or someone who lives from wandering")
- Suda α 1057 ἀλαζών· πλάνος, ὑπερήφανος, ψευδής. παρὰ τὸ ἐν ἄλῃ ζῆν. καὶ ἀλαζονοχαυνοφλύαρος (Archestr. fr. 59.12), ὁ μέθυσος καὶ λῆρος. ἢ ἀλαζών, ἄλλως ζῶν, ὁ ἐστι ματαίως. ἰδίως δὲ ἀλαζόνας τοὺς ψεύστας ἐκάλουν, ἐπεὶ λέγειν ἐπαγγέλλονται περὶ ὧν μὴ ἴσασιν ("alazôn: an impostor, arrogant, lying. From en alêi zên ('to pass one's life in wandering'). Also alazonochaunophlyaros (Archestr. fr. 59.12), an alcoholic babbler. Or alazôn, allôs zôn ('living to no purpose'), i. e. pointlessly. But idiosyncratically they used to call liars alazones, because they profess to speak on topics about which they know nothing")
- Et.Gen. α 391 ἀλαζών· ὁ ἀπατεὼν † ἢ κομπαστής, ὁ ἐν ἄλῃ καὶ πλάνῃ ζῶν. ἢ ὁ ἐκ τοῦ ἀλᾶν ζῶν οὐκ ἐξ ἐπιτηδεύματος ἀλλ' ἀπὸ ἀπάτης ("alazôn: a deceiver † or a boaster, one who passes his life in wandering and vagrancy. Or one who lives from wanderings not as a business but from deception").

Interpretation An ἀλαζών (etymology uncertain) is a "bullshitter" vel sim., defined by Aristotle (EN 1108ᵃ21–2, 1127ᵃ20–2; EE 1221ᵃ24–5) as a person who boasts of abilities he does not have. Such boasting is not necessarily bad, in Aristotle's view: individuals who behave thus for no gain are foolish rather than evil (EN 1227ᵇ9–11), while those who exaggerate for the sake of honor or reputation are not particularly reprehensible (EN 1227ᵇ11–12). But ἀλαζόνες who aim for profit are utterly shameful people (EN 1227ᵇ12–13). See in general Thphr. Char. 23 with Diggle 2004 ad loc.; Tract. Coisl. 38–9 (XII Janko), identifying ἀλαζονεία as one of the three character types of comedy, the others being τὰ βωμολόχια ("buffoonery") and τὰ εἰρωνικά ("insincerity"), with Janko 1984. 214–18; Ribbeck 1882, esp. 1–51; MacDowell 1990. The word is colloquial 5th- and 4th-century Attic vocabulary, well attested in comedy (e. g. Ar. Ach. 109; Eq. 269; Nu. 102, 449; Pax 1045; Av. 983, 1016; Ra. 909; Alc. Com. fr. 37; Anaxandr. fr. 50.1 with Millis 2015 ad loc.; Men. Georg. 27; cf. Plaut. Mil. 86–7) and prose (e. g. X. Mem. 1.1.5, 7.2; Cyr. 1.6.22; 2.2.12; Pl. Phd. 92d; R. 486b, 490a; Aeschin. 3.99), and picked up as an Atticism at e. g. Luc. Gall. 4; DMeretr. 10.1, 4; 15.3; Alciphr. 2.11.1.

κομπός (cf. κόμπος, "din" and thus by extension "boast"[142]) is otherwise attested only at E. Ph. 600 κομπὸς εἶ σπονδαῖς πεποιθώς, αἵ σε σῴζουσιν θανεῖν ("you are boastful, relying on truces that save you from death") and Call. Aet. fr. 96.1 θεοὶ πάντες κομποῖς νεμεσήμονες ("all the gods are resentful of the boastful"; cf. Hsch. κ 3478 κομποῖς· ὑπερηφάνοις, "kompois: arrogant"). LSJ s. v. (followed by Montanari s. v.) treats the word as a noun ("= κομπαστής"), but it seems rather to be an adjective.[143]

---

[142] Perhaps connected with k*(ᵘ)emp–, "zittern, beben ('shiver, shake')"—whence, according to LIV s. v., Skt. kampáyāmi, "lasse zittern ('make shiver')" and perhaps sam-pra-kampante, "zittern, sind in erregter Bewegung ('shiver, are in agitated motion')"; YAv. kafsan*, "sollen zittern ('ought to shiver')"; cf. Cheung 2007 s. v. kamp* for doubts. For the semantics, cf. Engl. swagger, "walk with a swaying motion; brag", which is a frequentative of swag, "sway".

[143] Thus Mastronarde 1994 on E. Ph. 600. Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 187.20–7), noting that disyllabic words ending in -pos and having -o- in the root correspond to verbs with -e- in the root (e. g. τρόπος, "way", but τρέπω, "turn"), suggests that the place of accentuation is determined by whether the word is a noun (in which case the root is accented; thus τρόπος) or an adjective (in which case it has word-final accent; thus τροπός, "twisted leather thong"). Although some of the word-final-accented forms Herodian adduces are difficult to construe as adjectives (e. g. πομπός, "escort"; λοπός, "peel"), the phenomenon—that the same derivational suffix forms both adjectives and nouns, but the adjectives generally have one kind

fr. 376 K.–A. (23 Dem.)

Phot. α 1151
ἄ μ α χ ο ν π ν ῖ γ ο ς· τὸ ὑπερβάλλον κατὰ τὴν ἰσχύν, ὡς μηδὲ μαχέσασθαι πρὸς αὐτό. οὕτως Κρατῖνος. ἐρεῖς δὲ καὶ ἄμαχος χειμὼν καὶ ἄμαχον πρᾶγμα (Men. fr. 297.6)

i r r e s i s t i b l e h e a t: (heat) that is overwhelmingly powerful, making it impossible to fight against it. Thus Cratinus. You can also say "an irresistible storm" and "an irresistible problem" (Men. fr. 297.6)

Citation context Taken by Reitzenstein to be drawn from Phrynichus (= PS fr. *168). Cf. Phryn. PS p. 22.8–9 = Phot. α 1152 ἄμαχον τὸ κακόν· ὑπερβολικῶς, πρὸς ὃ οὐκ ἄν τις μαχέσαιτο ("the trouble is irresistible: hyperbolically, (trouble) against which one could not fight"), which might originally have been part of the same note.

Interpretation πνῖγος (lit. "choking, suffocation") is heat so intense that one can barely breathe (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 191 οἷον αὖ τὸ πνῖγος, ὡς ἀσελγές, "and what heat, how nasty!"; Ar. Av. 726, 1091; Hp. Aer. 10 = 2.42.15 Littré; Pl. Phdr. 279b), and which there is accordingly no point in struggling against (i. e. by trying to remain active). Cf. Hes. Op. 582–96, where the recommendation is to deal with the situation by feasting and drinking wine in the shade. According to Σ^{EG} Ar. Ach. 659, the word πνῖγος was also applied to an anapaestic section at the close of a parabasis, presumably because such sections were supposed to be pronounced without taking a breath; this use is not attested in the classical period.

For ἄμαχος in the sense "against which one cannot fight", e. g. Antiph. fr. 7 ῥαγδαῖος, ἄμαχος, πρᾶγμα μεῖζον ἢ δοκεῖς ("violent, irresistible, a bigger problem than you imagine"); Men. Dysc. 193 κάλλους ἀμάχου ("what irresistible beauty!"); Pi. P. 2.76 ἄμαχον κακόν ("an irresistible evil"); A. Pers. 90 ἄμαχον κῦμα ("an irresistible wave"); Ag. 733 ἄμαχον ἄλγος ("irresistible grief"); Bacch. 16.23 ἄμαχος δαίμων ("an irresistible deity").

fr. 377 K.–A. (24 Dem.)

Phot. α 1488
ἀ ν α ι δ ὲ ς κ α ὶ θ ρ α σ ὺ β λ έ π ε ι ν· ἀναιδὴς μὲν καὶ θρασὺς καθωμίληται, τὸ δὲ ἀναιδὲς καὶ θρασὺ βλέπειν καινῶς εἴρηκε Κρατῖνος. ἡ λέξις Φρυνίχου (cf. PS p. 14.6) of accent, whereas the nouns generally have another—obtains among other suffixes as well (e. g. -ρο-, -το-, -νο-, -λο-). See Probert 2006. 149–54.

---

t o c a s t a s h a m e l e s s , b o l d g l a n c e: "impudent and bold" is a conventional expression, but Cratinus' "to cast a shameless, bold glance" is put in an innovative way. The gloss is from Phrynichus (cf. PS p. 14.6)

Text Phryn. PS p. 14.6 has βλέπει, which might be what Cratinus wrote.

Citation context The note is explicitly traced to Phrynichus, although in the version of the Praeparatio Sophistica that has come down to us nothing is preserved except the lemma ἀναιδὲς καὶ θρασὺ βλέπει. Suda α 2198 ἀναιδές· τὸ θρασὺ βλέπειν ("shameless: to cast a daring glance") appears to be another version of the same material.

Interpretation The use of a form of βλέπω with a colorful adverbial accusative of manner (here a neuter adjective, as at e. g. V. 900 κλέπτον βλέπει; Ra. 562 ἔβλεψεν … δριμύ; Pl. 424 βλέπει … μανικόν τι καὶ τραγῳδικόν; Euphro fr. 9.16 γλίσχρον βλέπει; a noun at e. g. Ar. Ach. 254 βλέπουσα θυμβροφάγον, 566 βλέπων ἀστραπάς; V. 455 βλεπόντων κάρδαμα; Pax 1184 βλέπων ὀπόν; Av. 1169 πυρρίχην βλέπων; Ra. 603a βλέποντ' ὀρίγανον; Ec. 292 βλέπων ὑπότριμμα; Timocl. fr. 12.7 Ἄρη βλέπων) appears to be an Attic colloquialism (attested only in comedy); see Kühner–Gerth 1898 I.309.

ἀναιδὲς καὶ θρασύ Shamelessness and boldness—the latter sometimes presented as a positive characteristic of a person, but here colored by the first term in the description, as at Ar. Eq. 181 πονηρὸς κἀξ ἀγορᾶς εἶ καὶ θρασύς, "you're base and from the Agora and bold"—are contrasting ways of describing the same quality, as a failure to take conventional standards of decency into account, on the one hand, and a positive readiness to trample them, on the other. For the collocation, cf. X. HG 2.3.54 (both superlative); D. 22.47; ep. 4.4.

fr. 378 K.–A. (356 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 9.6–7
ἀ ν α π η δ ᾶ ν ἐ ν δ ή μ ῳ· Κρατῖνος ἐπί τινος ἀκόσμως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις ἀναπηδῶντος

t o l e a p u p i n t h e p e o p l e: Cratinus in regard to someone leaping up in their Assemblies in a disorderly fashion

Meter Unknown. The words scan ⏑⏑–––––.

Discussion Kock 1880 I.115; Hall 1995. 53

Citation context An isolated Atticist note apparently concerned with the use of δῆμος (lit. "people" in a political sense) in reference to the Athenian ἐκκλησία (Assembly).

Interpretation For the extended use of δῆμος (common in the classical period), e. g. fr. 327.2; Ar. V. 590 "the Council and the people", i. e. "and the Assembly"; Ec. 399 "the people began to shout" (in an anecdote regarding the Assembly); Antiph. fr. 194.11–12 "the people sit there, seeing and hearing nothing" (a description of the Assembly); Th. 8.54.3. For the Assembly itself and Assembly procedures, see Hansen 1983.

ἀναπηδᾶν is first attested at Il. 11.379, but is otherwise absent from elevated poetry, and in the classical period is confined to comedy (Ar. V. 1042; Av. 490; Lys. 929; Ra. 566; Antiph. fr. 152.5; Philemo fr. 82.15; Men. Pk. 357) and 4th-century prose (e. g. X. HG 2.3.52; An. 7.2.20; Pl. Smp. 213b; R. 561d). Members of the Athenian Assembly sat, and individuals rose to speak and then moved up onto the βῆμα (the speaker's platform; cognate with βαίνω) if they were recognized and given the floor. Leaping to one's feet presumably indicates an eagerness to contribute, here with disregard for proper decorum; see in general fr. 422 n. (on gait and correct physical deportment generally). Cf. Ar. Ec. 427–9 εὐπρεπὴς νεανίας / … ἀνεπήδησ' … / δημηγορήσων ("a good-looking young man leapt up in order to address the people"); Aeschin. 1.71; 3.149 ἀναπηδήσας ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ("after he leapt up in the Assembly"), 173 ἀνεπήδησεν ἐπὶ τὸ βῆμα ("he leapt up onto the speaker's platform"). Aeschines elsewhere (3.2) advises that speakers approach the platform "prudently" (sôphronôs), as Solon's legislature regarding the orderly conduct of speakers (peri tês tôn rhêtorôn eukosmias) supposedly demanded.

fr. 379 K–A. (384 K.)

Phot. α 1617 = Suda α 2305 = Synag. B α 1305
ἀ ν ε π τ ε ρ ῶ σ θ α ι τ ὴ ν ψ υ χ ή ν· οἷον ἀνασεσοβῆσθαι. Κρατῖνος καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 407) (Κρατῖνος καὶ Εὔπολις om. Suda : add. in marg. Phot.^{z})

t o h a v e h a d o n e' s s o u l f u r n i s h e d w i n g s: i. e. to have been shaken up. Cratinus and Eupolis (fr. 407) ("Cratinus and Eupolis" omitted by the Suda; added in the margin in Phot.^{z})

Meter Unknown, although the words as preserved can be understood as iambic trimeter, e. g.

⏑–⏑– –|–⏑– ⟨×–⏑–⟩

Citation context An Atticist note traced by Cunningham to the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge B conventionally referred to as Σ′, which most likely goes back to Phrynichus; cf. PS p. 15.6–7 ἀνεπτερῶσθαι

τὴν ψυχήν· οἷον ἀνασεσβῆσθαι, ἔκπτοιον εἶναι ("to have had one's soul furnished with wings: i. e. to have been shaken up, to be scared"). Note also Antiatt. α 70 ἀναπτερῶσαι· Ξενοφῶν Συμποσίῳ (9.5) ("to furnish with wings: Xenophon in the Symposium (9.5)"), which may be a separate part of the ancient discussion of the status of the word.

Interpretation A late 5th- and 4th-century metaphor for restless ("birdlike") agitation, driven by fear or excitement, first attested at A. Ch. 227; elsewhere in comedy at Ar. Av. 433 with Dunbar 1995 ad loc., 1439–45, esp. 1444–5; Men. Epitr. 958 with Gomme–Sandbach 1973 ad loc.; see Taillardat 1965 § 826. The metaphor is picked up by Longus (2.7.1) and later by Christian authors (e. g. Hippol. in Ps. 17).

τὴν ψυχήν is an accusative of respect, as in Storey 2011. 425 (Cratinus), rather than the subject of the infinitive, as in Storey 2011. 263 (Eupolis).

fr. 380 K.–A. (26 Dem.)

Phot. α 1924
ἀ ν η μ έ ρ ω τ ο ς γ ῆ· ἡ ὕλης ἀνάμεστος καὶ μὴ κεκαθαρμένη πρὸς γεωργίαν. Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 825) καὶ Κρατῖνος εἶπον (εἶπον om. Phot.[b]) u n t a m e d e a r t h: that which is full of timber and not cleared for farming. Sophocles (fr. 825) and Cratinus used the expression ("used the expression" omitted by Phot.[b])

Meter The words as transmitted are consistent with iambic trimeter, e. g.

⏑–⏑– ⏑|–⟨⏑– ×–⏑–⟩

But see Interpretation.

Discussion Reitzenstein 1907. xviii

Assignment to known plays Tentatively attributed to Seriphioi by Storey 2011. 425 (no reason specified, but presumably because this might be one of the places to which Perseus is sent).

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note, probably from an Atticist source.

Interpretation The fragments of Sophocles and Cratinus cited by Photius are the earliest attestations of ἀνημέρωτος ("untamed") in place of the more common poetic ἀνήμερος ("not tame, savage", with less emphasis on agency: Anacr. PMG 348.7; A. Eu. 13–14 χθόνα / ἀνήμερον τιθέντες ἡμερωμένην, "making a savage land tamed", 803; [A.] PV 716; E. Hec. 1077–8; Men. Dysc.

122).[144] But cf. Phot. α 808 ὀργάδες καλοῦνται πάντα τὰ ἀνειμένα εἰς ὕλην καὶ ἀνημέρωτα καὶ ἀργά, ὡς καὶ Σόλων φησίν ("they use the term orgades for all land that has reverted to woods and is untamed and wild, as Solon also says"). γῆ may simply be a place-holder, like ἄνθρωπος in fr. 381 (see n.), and Radt suggests that Sophocles at least may have written e. g. γαῖα or χθών instead. Reitzenstein hypothesized that the fragment represents a direct reference by Cratinus to Sophocles, which is possible but not a necessary conclusion, particularly if Solon used the word.

fr. 381 K.–A. (343 K.)

Phot. α 1975 = Suda α 2537 = Synag. B α 1410
ἄ ν θ ρ ω π ο ς λ υ π η σ ί λ ο γ ο ς· σημαίνει τὸν λυποῦντα (Phot. : μὲν ὁ λυπῶν Suda, Synag. B) διὰ τοῦ λέγειν τοὺς πέλας. οὕτως (Phot.[b] : om. Phot.[z] Suda Synag. B) Κρατῖνος a l u p ê s i l o g o s p e r s o n: denotes a man who annoys (lupôn; thus Phot. : Suda and Synag. B have the nom. rather than the acc.) his neighbors by talking (legein). Thus ("Thus" Phot.[b] : omitted by Phot.[z] Suda Synag. B) Cratinus Meter ἄνθρωπος is probably a place-holder (see Interpretation), and λυπησίλογος scans ⏑—⏑⏑⏑ and is easily accommodated in iambic trimeter regardless of the case, number and gender in which Cratinus used the word.

Discussion Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context An Atticist note drawn from the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge B conventionally referred to as Σ′. The Epitome of Phrynichus (PS p. 13.11–12) preserves identical material, but without mention of Cratinus, and the original source of Σ′ must thus be the unabbreviated version of the Praeparatio Sophistica.

Interpretation λυπησίλογος—the only verb-initial compound from λυπέω attested[145] and the only one in -λογος before the 2nd century CE (note εὑρησίλογος, "clever at finding arguments, sophistic", at D.L. 4.37)—is a mocking high-style epithet (cf. frr. 66 ἀγερσικύβηλις with Tribulato 2015. 290–1;

---

[144] In ἀνημερόω (attested only at S. fr. 905 ὃς παρακτίαν / στείχων ἀνημέρωσα κνωδάλων ὁδόν, "I who on my way cleared the coastal road of wild beasts"; the speaker is presumably Theseus, see Lloyd-Jones 1994. 391) the prefix is not an alpha-privative but the preposition ἀνά.

[145] Tribulato 2015 misses the word.

470 μείξοφρυς) perhaps intended to represent the polar opposite of ἡδύλογος (literally "sweet-speaking"; e. g. fr. 256.3 (of wisdom; lyric)).

Kaibel thought that ἄνθρωπος as well was to be attributed to Cratinus. More likely the word is simply a place-holder designed to indicate the field of reference of the adjective, as in e. g. fr. 382; Eup. fr. 409 (both also from Phrynichus); Ar. fr. 729; Phryn. PS pp. 2.4 ἀκρότητος καὶ ἄπορος ἄνθρωπος; 8.6 ἄνθρωπος πρόδοξος; 11.4–5 ἀτεράμων ἄνθρωπος καὶ πρίνινος καὶ στιπτὸς καὶ σφενδάμνινος (cf. Ar. Ach. 180); 31.16 αὐτογνώμων ἄνθρωπος; 33.9 ἀτενὴς καὶ ἀτεράμων ἄνθρωπος (cf. Ar. V. 730); 43.10 ἀνωφρυασμένος ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *577); 61.9 δημεχθὴς ἄνθρωπος; 63.11 δικολύμης ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. 591); 70.22 ἐπιτριπτότατος ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *601); 71.1 ἐπιχαιρέκακος ἄνθρωπος (Alex. fr. 52, where ἄνθρωπος is in fact absent from the line quoted); 76.3 ἰχθυολύμης ἄνθρωπος (cf. Ar. Pax 811); 94.15 ὀνόγαστρις ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *638); 105.1 περικεκρουμένος ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *653); 109.19 στραγγαλιώδης ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *663); 112.6 τραχηλόσιμος ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *668), 12 τρισέχθιστος ἄνθρωπος (= adesp. com. fr. *669); 116.1 ὑποζυγιώδης ἄνθρωπος; 124.11 φιλάμπελος ἄνθρωπος, etc. Cf. the similar use of ἀνήρ in fr. 371 (again from Phrynichus) and of γῆ in fr. 380.

fr. 382 K.–A. (27 Dem. = adesp. com. fr. 841 K.)

Phot. α 1979
ἄ ν θ ρ ω π ο ς φ ι λ ο π ρ α γ μ α τ ί α ς· πεποίηται μὲν ἡ φωνὴ ὁμοίως τῷ ληματίας, δηλοῖ δὲ τὸν φιλοῦντα καὶ σπουδάζοντα πάντα τρόπον μεταχειρίζεσθαι πράγματα. οὕτως Κρατῖνος ἄνθρωπος φιλοπραγματίας Phot. : φιλοπραγματίας ἄνθρωπος Kock

a m e d d l e s o m e p e r s o n: the word is formed like lêmatias, and it denotes someone who loves and is eager to get involved in matters in any way possible. Thus Cratinus Meter ἄνθρωπος is probably a place-holder (see fr. 381 n. Interpretation; thus tentatively Kock), and φιλοπραγματίας scans ⏑⏑–⏑⏑⏑ and is easily accommodated in iambic trimeter regardless of the case, number and gender in which Cratinus used the word.

Discussion Kock 1888 III.555–6

Text If ἄνθρωπος is to be retained, Kock proposed reversing the order of the words and reading φιλοπραγματίας ἄνθρωπος, which scans ⏑⏑–⏑⏑––– × and might thus be taken as anapaestic; but see Meter.

Citation context Similar material, but without reference to Cratinus, is preserved in the Epitome of Phrynichus (PS p. 2.1–3): ἄνθρωπος φιλοπραγματίας: δηλοῖ τὸν φιλοῦντα καὶ σπουδάζοντα πάντα τρόπον πράγματα μεταχειρίζεσθαι ("a meddlesome person: denotes someone who loves and is eager to get involved in matters in any way possible") and at Suda α 2539 ἄνθρωπος φιλοπραγματίας· ἐπὶ πολυπράγμονος ("a meddlesome person: in reference to a polypragmôn"). All three versions of the note likely go back to the unabridged form of the Praeparatio Sophistica.

Kock knew the fragment only from the Epitome of Phrynichus and therefore treated it as an adespoton.

Interpretation A φιλοπραγματίας is someone characterized by philopragmosynê, a synonym of the more common polypragmosynê, a restless disposition toward becoming involved in matters that are either none of one's business (~ "meddlesomeness") or better left to other persons (~ "officiousness"). Cf. Eup. fr. 238 with Olson 2016 ad loc.; Thphr. Char. 13 with Diggle 2004 ad loc.; Ehrenberg 1947; Mette 1962; Dover 1974. 188–9; Adkins 1976; Leigh 2013. 16–53. Above all else, the philopragmôn involves himself in legal business and politics (Is. 4.30; Pl. R. 549c τιμὰς καὶ ἀρχὰς καὶ δίκας καὶ τὴν τοιαύτην πᾶσαν φιλοπραγμοσύνην, "honors and offices and trials and all such philopragmosynê"; D. 1.14; 4.41–2; 39.1; Arist. EN 1142ᵃ2), but he also noses into the private affairs of other people (Lys. 24.24). The 2ⁿᵈ-century BCE comic poet Crito wrote a Philopragmôn; cf. Heniochus', Timocles' and Diphilus' Polypragmôn. φιλοπραγματίας is attested nowhere else before the Roman period, hence presumably Phrynichus' interest in the word. For the formation, see on fr. 422.

fr. 383 K.–A. (357 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 19.14–16
ἁ π α λ ὸ ς ε ἴ σ π λ ο υ ς τ ο ῦ λ ι μ έ ν ο ς· ὥσπερ Ὅμηρος (cf. Od. 5.425) τοὺς δυσόρμους λιμένας τραχεῖς λέγει, οὕτως Κρατῖνος ἐπὶ τῶν εὐόρμων τὸ ἁπαλόν ἐκ τοῦ ἐναντίου εἶπεν

a n e a s y e n t r a n c e t o t h e h a r b o r: just as Homer (cf. Od. 5.425) refers to harbors that are difficult to anchor in as tracheis ("rough"), so Cratinus used the antonym hapalos (lit. "soft") in reference to those that are easy to anchor in

Phot. α 2234
ἁ π α λ ὸ ς ε ἴ σ π λ ο υ ς τ ο ῦ λ ι μ έ ν ο ς· ἀντὶ τοῦ τραχέος λαβὼν ὁ Κρατῖνος τὸ ἁπαλὸς σύνταξιν ἡδίστην ἐποίησεν "ἁπαλὸς εἴσπλους λιμένος" εἰπών a n e a s y e n t r a n c e t o t h e h a r b o r: Cratinus, using hapalos (lit. "soft") instead of trachys ("rough"), came up with a highly pleasing turn of phrase when he wrote: "an easy entrance to a harbor"

Discussion Körte ap. Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Körte tentatively attributed the fragment to Odysseis, presumably on the basis of Phrynichus' comparison between Homer and Cratinus.

Citation context Both versions of the note must go back to the unabridged form of the Praeparatio Sophistica.

Interpretation If Phrynichus' gloss is correct, εἴσπλους τοῦ λιμένος refers not to a voyage into a harbor (thus Storey 2011. 426; cf. LSJ s. v. εἴσπλοος I) but to the harbor-entrance itself (LSJ s. v. εἴσπλοος II; cf. Th. 4.8.5 τοὺς ἔσπλους τοῦ λιμένος ἐμφάρξαι, "to blockade the harbor-entrances"; D.S. 13.78.4; 14.48.3), and ἁπαλός is a transferred epithet that actually describes the harbor rather than its entrance ("an easy entrance to the harbor" ~ "an entrance to an easy harbor").

For ἁπαλός in its conventional sense "soft, tender", see frr. *195.3; 257.1. The version of Phrynichus' note preserved in Photius makes it clear that Cratinus' use of the word represents an unexpected extension of its meaning. Homer at Od. 5.425 in fact applies τραχύς to a shore rather than a harbor (τόφρα δέ μιν μέγα κῦμα φέρε τρηχεῖαν ἐπ' ἀκτήν, "at that moment a great wave bore him against the rough shore"; of Odysseus trapped in the sea off the Scherian coast).[146]

fr. 384 K.–A. (342 K.)

Phot. α 2616 = Suda α 3496 = Synag. B α 1935
ἀ π ο ρ ε ῖ ν κ α ὶ σ φ α κ ε λ ί ζ ε ι ν τῷ δεινῷ (codd. : τῷ δίνῳ Bergk)· τὸ μὲν σφακελίζειν φλεγμαίνειν ἐστὶ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο σπᾶσθαι. Κρατῖνος

t o b e a t a l o s s a n d t o s h u d d e r in reaction to something terrible (thus the codd. : "with vertigo" Bergk): sphakelizein means to suffer from a fever and to be convulsed on that account. Cratinus

---

[146] For the distinction between limên ("harbor") and aktê ("coast, shore"), cf. Il. 12.284.

Discussion Bergk 1838. 258; Blaydes 1896. 14; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context An Atticist note traced by Cunningham to the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge B conventionally referred to as Σ′. Cf. Hsch. σ 2839 σφακελίζει· … ὀδυνᾶται. σπᾷ. διασπᾶται. ἀλγύνεται. σφακελισμός γὰρ καὶ σφάκελος ἡ ἄμετρος ὀδύνη ("sphakelizei: … suffers pain; convulses; is wrenched in various directions; suffers grief. For sphakelismos and sphakelos are measureless pain"); Σ S. Ai. 833 σφαδάζειν δὲ ἔλεγον τὸ σπᾶσθαι καὶ σφακελίζειν ("they used sphadazein to mean to be convulsed and shudder").

Blaydes thought that this fragment belonged with fr. 498 and accordingly emended various portions of the text of Phot. = Suda = Synag. B to render the language more medical. No change is necessary.

Interpretation How much of the initial lemma is to be traced to Cratinus is unclear. Kaibel (followed by Kassel–Austin) took τῷ δεινῷ to be an explanatory gloss by the grammarian who produced the note, and the use of ἀπορέω does not seem striking enough to require comment. If both points are true, σφακελίζειν alone belongs to Cratinus.

For σφακελίζω (lit. "suffer from sphakelos ('gangrene')") in the extended sense "suffer convulsions, shake" (patently colloquial, hence Phrynichus' notice of the usage), cf. Pherecr. fr. 85.4 κᾆτα σφακέλιζε καὶ πέπρησο καὶ βόα ("and then suffer convulsions and be feverish and shout!"; the consequences of a dangerous decision to eat figs at midday).

fr. 385. K.–A. (369 K.)

Poll. 2.17
καὶ Φρύνιχος (fr. 71) μὲν ὁ κωμικὸς τὰς νέας ἀφήλικας λέγει· ἦσαν δὲ καὶ γυναῖκες ἀφήλικες. Φερεκράτης (fr. 231) δὲ τὴν γεραιτέραν ὡς ἀφηλικεστέραν, ὡς καὶ Κρατῖνος ἀ φ ή λ ι κ α γ έ ρ ο ν τ α (Poll.[FS] : ἀφήλικον γέροντα Poll.[M])

And the comic playwright Phrynichus (fr. 71) refers to young women as aphêlikai: there were also aphêlikes women. But Pherecrates (fr. 231) (refers to) an older woman as aphêlikestera, just as Cratinus too (says) a p h ê l i k a g e r o n t a ("an aphêlix old man"; thus Poll.[FS] : Poll.[M] has aphêlikon geronta)

Text ἀφήλικον in Poll.[M] is declined as though from a second-declension adjective ἀφηλικός, which is otherwise first attested only in the 6th century CE (PMasp. 6.2).

Citation context A short but well-informed discussion of terms for mature women embedded within a longer treatment of words used of women at various stages of life, much of it seemingly drawn from Aristophanes of Byzantium. Related material is preserved at

- Phryn. Ecl. 56 ἀφῆλιξ λέγοντες ἁμαρτάνουσιν οἱ ῥητορικοί, τοὐναντίον γὰρ ἥ δεῖ χρῶνται· τὸν μὲν γὰρ πρεσβύτερον ῥητέον ἀφήλικα· οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τοῦ μηδέπω τῆς ἐννόμου ἡλικίας χρῶνται ("Rhetoricians are in error when they say aphêlix, since they use it in the opposite way from how they should. For an older man should be referred to as aphêlix, but they use the word of a child not yet of legal age")
- Phryn. PS p. 1.1–6 ἀφηλικέστεροι· οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, ὡς ἄπο τῆς ἡλικίας ὄντες. ἡλικίαν γὰρ ἔλεγον τὴν νεότητα οἱ ἀρχαῖοι … πλὴν κατὰ σύγκρισιν ἡ λέξις προφέρεται καὶ ἐν ὑπερθέσει, ἀφηλικέστατος καὶ ἀφηλικέστατοι. οἱ δὲ ἀπολελυμένως λέγοντες ἀφῆλιξ, ἀφήλικες ἀμαθέστατοι ("aphêlikesteroi: elders, inasmuch as they are away from the prime of life (apo têsêlikias). For people in ancient times used to say hêlikia to mean neotês ('youth') … But the word is cited in the comparative and in the superlative, aphêlikestatos and aphêlikestatoi, whereas those who use it in the positive degree—aphêlix, aphêlikes—are supremely ill-educated")
- Moer. α 153 ἀφηλικεστέραν τὴν πρεσβυτέραν Ἀττικοί· τὴν νεωτέραν Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (call) an older woman aphêlikestera; Greeks generally (call such a person) neôtera")
- [Hdn]. Philet. 168 ἀφηλικέστερος· ὁ τὴν ἡλικίαν προβεβηκώς ("aphêlikesteros: one who is advanced in age")
- Hsch. α 8635 ἀφηλικεστέραν· νεωτέραν ("aphêlikesteran (fem.): younger")
- Hsch. α 8636 ἀφῆλιξ· καταδεής[AS], ἀτελὴς[S] τὴν ἡλικίαν[ASn] ("aphêlix: lacking[AS], incomplete[S] as regards age[ASn]")
- Phot. α 3340 = Suda α 4603 = Synag. α 1154 (cf. Synag. B α 2529) ἀφήλικα· τὸν πρεσβύτην. τινὲς δὲ χρῶνται τῇ λέξει ἐπὶ τοῦ μηδέπω τῆς ἐννόμου ἡλικίας παιδός, ὅπερ δεῖ φυλάττεσθαι· ἐπὶ γὰρ τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου λέγεται ("aphêlika: an old man. But some authorities use the word in reference to a child not yet of legal age, which ought to be avoided; for the word is used in reference to an elder").

Interpretation Phryn. PS p. 1.1–2 (quoted in Citation context) argues that ἀφῆλιξ means "away from the prime of life" and thus by extension "old", as in Cratinus and at e. g. hDem. 140 γυναικὸς ἀφήλικος ("an old woman"); Hdt. 3.14.7 (comparative as superlative); Hp. Morb. I 22 = 6.186.12 Littré (superlative as positive?).[147] Pollux claims that in Phryn. Com. fr. 71 ἀφῆλιξ is used of young women, i. e. those who are "away from the prime of life" because they have not yet attained it. Whether this is right is impossible to say, but this sense of the adjective (for which, cf. the lexicographers quoted in Citation context) is not attested elsewhere in the classical period. Phrynichus' emphatic further claim at PS p. 1.3–6 that the positive form of ἀφῆλιξ is not used appears to be an error.

fr. 386 K.–A.

Phot. α 3403
Ἀ φ ρ ο δ ί τ η Ψ ί θ υ ρ ο ς· Κρατῖνος. ἔστι δὲ ὄντως ἐν Ἀθήναις ἱερὸν Ἀφροδίτης Ψιθύρου ἀπὸ τοῦ τὰς εὐχομένας πρὸς τὸ οὖς αὐτῆς εὔχεσθαι

P s i t h y r o s ("Whispering") A p h r o d i t e: Cratinus. There is actually a temple of Aphrodite Psithyros in Athens that derives its name from the fact that the women who pray do so into her ear

Citation context Similar material, probably all drawn from the same original source—taken by Erbse, following Eustathius, to be the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (ψ 2)—but with no mention of Cratinus, is preserved at

- Harp. ψ 3 Ψιθυριστὴς Ἑρμῆς· Δημοσθένης ἐν τῷ Κατὰ Νεαίρας (59.39). ἦν τις Ἀθήνησιν Ἑρμῆς οὕτω καλούμενος. ἐτιμᾶτο δ' Ἀθήνησι καὶ Ψίθυρος Ἀφροδίτη καὶ Ἔρως Ψίθυρος ("Psithyristês Hermes: Demosthenes in his Against Neaira (59.39). There was a Hermes by this name in Athens. Psithyros Aphrodite was also venerated in Athens, as was Eros Psithyros")[148]
- Hsch. α 8769 Ἀφροδίτη Ψίθυρος ("Aphrodite Psithyros")
- Eust. p. 1888.1–3 = ii.223.20–4 διὸ καὶ Ψιθύρου Ἀφροδίτης κατὰ Παυσανίαν (ψ 2) ἱερὸν ἦν Ἀθήνῃσι καὶ Ἔρωτος δέ· οὗ καὶ Δημοσθένης, φησὶ, μέμνηται ἐν τῷ Κατὰ Νεαίρας. ἐκαλεῖτο δέ, φασι, Ψίθυρος διὰ τὸ τὰς εὐχομένας αὐτῇ πρὸς τὸ οὖς λέγειν, ὅ περ ἐδήλου μὲν χρῆναι μυστηριάζεσθαι τὰ τοιαῦτα ("wherefore, according to Pausanias (ψ 2), there was also a temple of Psithyros Aphrodite in Athens and one of Eros as well; Demosthenes

---

147 Note also S. fr. 528a ἀφήλικες θέαμα ("an aphêlikes sight" or "aphêlikes in appearance"). The adjective is picked up as an Atticism at e. g. Luc. Pseud. 15 γέρων ὢν καὶ ἀφῆλιξ ("being an old man and aphêlix"); Ael. NA 8.16 (superlative); Alciphr. 1.6.3; 2.31.1 (both superlative).

148 Also preserved in condensed form at Suda ψ 100 (from the Epitome of Harpocration).

too, he says, mentions it in his Against Neaira (59.39). They say that she was called Psithyros because of the fact that the women who pray to her spoke into her ear, which made it clear that it was necessary to keep such matters quiet")

– Suda ψ 99 Ψιθυριστοῦ Ἑρμοῦ καὶ Ἔρωτος καὶ Ἀφροδίτης· ἅπερ πρῶτος ἐποίησεν, ὥς φησι Ζώπυρος (FHG IV.533, fr. 6), Θησεύς, ἐπεὶ Φαῖδρα, ὥς φασιν, ἐψιθύριζε Θησεῖ κατὰ Ἱππολύτου διαβάλλουσα αὐτόν. οἱ δὲ ἀνθρωπινώτερόν φασιν Ἑρμῆν Ψιθυριστήν, παρὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπους ἐκεῖ συνερχομένους τὰ ἀπόρρητα συντίθεσθαι καὶ ψιθυρίζειν ἀλλήλοις περὶ ὧν βούλονται ("of Psithyristes Hermes and Eros and Aphrodite: which, according to Zopyrus (FHG IV.533, fr. 6), Theseus was the first to make, when Phaedra, so they say, whispered to Theseus against Hippolytus when she was slandering him. Some authorities say that Hermes Psithyristes is quite human, given that the people who congregate there compose obscenities and whisper to one another about what they want").

Interpretation According to Photius and Eustathius (the latter expressly drawing on Pausanias), the epithet Ψίθυρος ("Whispering"; for the extended sense "slanderer", cf. Ar. fr. 172) was used of deities in whose cultic presence prayers were not expressed out loud. The epithet is otherwise known only from Hsch. α 188 ψιθύρα· ἐξ ὧν τὸ σύνηθες καὶ ἥρως Ἀθήνησιν ὄνομα ("psithyra ('whisperings'): whence in common use the name of a hero at Athens"; see Roscher 1902–9 s. v. Psithyros) and as a divine name in a 2nd-c. CE inscription from Lindos (Lindos II.484 = Sokolowski 1962 no. 86). Cf. Mercurius Sussurio ("Whispering Mercury") at CIL 13.13005, and see in general Usener 1904; Radke 1959; Pirenne-Deforge 1994. 46–8.

fr. 387 K.–A.

Phot. α 3447
ἀ χ ν υ μ έ ν η σ κ υ τ ά λ η· Κρατῖνος τὴν ἄχθεσθαι ποιοῦσαν εἶπεν

a t r o u b l e s o m e s t a f f: Cratinus referred thus to one that produces vexation

Discussion Tsantsanoglou ap. K.–A.; Lelli 2006. 90

Assignment to known plays Tentatively attributed to Archilochoi by Tsantsanoglou.

Citation context Probably drawn originally from a discussion of Archil. fr. 185 (for which, see Interpretation). Very similar material is preserved at Diogenian. 3.25 ἀχνυμένη σκυτάλη· ἐπὶ τῶν λυπηρὰς ἀγγελίας ἀγγελλόντων ("a troublesome staff: in reference to those that announce bad news").

Interpretation At Archil. fr. 185.2, the narrator seemingly refers to himself as an ἀχνυμένη σκυτάλη[149] before beginning an ainos ("fable") about a monkey and a fox (for which, see Ar. Ach. 119–20 with Olson 2002 ad loc.). What is meant by this was a matter of scholarly dispute already in the Hellenistic period (A.R. fr. XXII Michaelis ap. Ath. 10.451d; Ar. Byz. fr. 367 ap. Ath. 3.85e–f), and the passage of Photius that preserves the fragment of Cratinus is most likely a remnant of that discussion. For Archilochus in Cratinus and other comic poets, cf. test. 17; fr. 211 ~ Ar. Pax 1298; fr. dub. 505; Ar. Av. 869 with Dunbar 1996 ad loc.; Lys. 360–1; Ra. 704; Bianchi 2016. 15 (with further bibliography).

A σκυτάλη (no etymology) is a Spartan message-baton and by extension the leather strap wrapped about it to produce and later decode a text; cf. Ar. Lys. 991–2; Th. 1.131.1; X. HG 3.3.8–9 ("a skytalê, on which were written [the names of those] who were to be arrested"); Arist. fr. 509 Rose ap. Phot. σ 390.[150] For the word used in an even more extended sense to mean "messenger", cf. Pi. O. 6.90–1 ἐσσὶ γὰρ ἄγγελος ὀρθός, / ἠϋκόμων σκυτάλα Μοισᾶν ("you are a forthright messenger, a skytala of the fair-haired Muses").

ἄχνυμαι, a by-form of ἀχεύω ("grieve; aggrieve"), is elevated poetic vocabulary (e. g. Il. 19.57; Hes. Th. 623; hDem. 37; Thgn. 619; Pi. I. 8.5; S. Ant. 627 (lyric)); attested nowhere else in comedy.

fr. 388 K.–A. (372 K.)

Poll. 7.28
ἔρια οἰσυπηρὰ Ἀριστοφάνης (Ach. 1177), καὶ ἐ ρ ί ω ν π ι ν α ρ ῶ ν π ό κ ο ν (sic Poll[AC] : ἐρίον πιναρῶν πόκων Poll.[FS] : πέκων Poll.[B]) Κρατῖνος

Aristophanes (Ach. 1177) (says) "wool full of grease", and Cratinus "a t u f t o f f i l t h y w o o l" (thus Poll.[AC] : "wool of filthy tufts" Poll.[FS] : pekôn only Poll.[B])

---

149 West reads ἀχνυμένῃ σκυτάλῃ "with a troublesome staff".

150 West 1988 argues that this can hardly be the sense intended by Archilochus on the grounds that Archilochus composed his poems at a time when the ability to read and write fluently was rare, that poets of the archaic period seldom refer to writing, and that a baton and leather strap is an easily deciphered and thus ineffective means of communicating a secret message. West suggests that the skytalê was instead some symbolic or mnemonic device, the exact nature of which was already unclear to ancient commentators; but this is to explain obscurum per obscurius.

Discussion Körte ap. Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Assignment to known plays Tentatively attributed to Dionysalexandros by Körte; cf. frr. 39 (on shearing scissors); 45; 48.

Text The variants in Poll.[FS] likely represent an unsuccessful attempt to expand the readings in an abbreviated exemplar (ἐρί^0 πιναρ^0 πόκ^0 vel sim.).

Citation context From the beginning of a collection of words related to wool and wool-working. Fr. 48 is cited a few lines later.

Interpretation Raw wool (ἔρια οἰσυπηρά or πόκος; Lat. oesypum)—here referred to as "filthy wool" (cf. Erot. p. 105.18–19)—was first washed and then, after it was dry, picked clean and carded before being spun into thread for weaving. Cf. Ar. Lys. 574–9; Ec. 215–17;[151] Chrysipp. Stoic. fr. 546; and see in general Blümner 1912. 98–134, esp. 106–8; Forbes 1964. 8–26, esp. 20–1; Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 344 (with further bibliography).

ἔριον (attested elsewhere in comedy at e. g. Pherecr. fr. 51; Amphis fr. 27.1; Antiph. fr. 21.3; Eub. fr. 89.3; Alex. fr. 178.6; Men. Her. 39) is properly a diminutive of the much less common εἶρος ("wool"; cf. fr. 181 εὐέρων, "fleecy" vel sim.; of sheep).

πιναρῶν (< πίνος, "filth") is poetic vocabulary; cf. Eup. fr. 280.2–3 πιναρὸν ἔχοντ' ἀλουσίᾳ / κάρα ("having a head filthy from lack of washing") with Olson 2016 ad loc.; E. El. 184 σκέψαι μου πιναρὰν κόμαν ("Behold my filthy hair!"; lyric).

πόκον (< πέκω, "shear") is a tuft of shorn wool or a complete fleece; cf. Ar. Av. 714 ἡνίκα πεκτεῖν ὥρα προβάτων πόκον ἠρινόν ("when it's time to shear the spring wool of sheep"); Lys. 574; Il. 12.451 πόκον ἄρσενος οἰὸς ("a ram's fleece"); S. Tr. 675 ἀργῆς οἰὸς εὐείρῳ πόκῳ ("a wooly tuft of a white ewe"; used to smear a supposed love-charm on a garment); E. El. 513 οἶν μελάγχιμον πόκῳ ("a ram black in fleece"); and note adesp. com. fr. 797 αὐτόποκον ἱμάτιον (a garment made direct from a fleece).

---

151 Taken by Ussher 1973 ad loc. to be a reference to dyeing. But very little home-spun wool will have been dyed, whereas 217 stresses the universality of the practice among Athens' women, nor can dyeing wool reasonably be presented as an example of old-fashioned behavior and thus of old-fashioned virtue, which is the point of the entire passage.

fr. 389 K.–A. (358 K.)

Phyrn. PS p. 69.4
ἐ φ ι π π ά σ α σ θ α ι λ ό γ ο ι ς· οἷον καταδραμεῖν. Κρατῖνος

t o c a v a l r y - c h a r g e w i t h w o r d s: i. e. to run over/inveigh against. Cratinus Citation context An isolated Atticist note.

Interpretation The compound ἐφιππάζομαι (cf. ἔφιππος, "on horseback") is attested nowhere else before the Roman period and then in a different sense (see LSJ s. v. 2 "ride upon"). Here the word is used figuratively of rhetoric, and thus most likely of action in either the courts or the Assembly, the underlying idea being of a horseman charging and routing an individual foot-soldier or small group of foot-soldiers, as in the aftermath of a battle. Cf. the very similar use of καταδρομή (literally "running down", but by extension "invective assault") at Pl. R. 472a; Aeschin. 1.135. For the prefix in the hostile sense "against", see LSJ s. v. ἐπί G.I.2.c, and cf. the cognates ἔφιππον ("on horseback") at Eup. fr. 29 and ἐφιππεύω at D.S. 17.19.6 ἐφίππευσε τοῖς Πέρσαις ("he charged the Persians"); 20.3 ἐφίππευσε τῷ βαρβάρῳ ("he charged the barbarian"). The only other compound of ἱππάζομαι attested in the classical period is καθιππάζομαι, "ride down", i. e. "trample underfoot" vel sim. (A. Eu. 150, 779 (both lyric)).

fr. 390 K.–A. (371 K.)

Poll. 1.242
τῆς δὲ συκῆς ὁ καρπὸς … σῦκα, ἰσχάδες, παλάθη. ἰσχὰς νέα καὶ χλωρά, ἢ ἀρχαία καὶ ξηρά· οἱ δὲ κωμῳδοὶ καὶ ἰ σ χ ά δ α κ ο π τ ὴ ν λέγουσιν

The fruit of the fig-tree (is) … figs, dried figs, fig-cake. A dried fig can be fresh and green, or old and dried up; the comic poets also use the term m i n c e d d r i e d f i g

Poll. 6.81
παλάσια, ἃ καὶ Κρατῖνος ἰ σ χ ά δ α κ ο π τ ὴ ν καλεῖ palasia, which Cratinus in fact refers to as m i n c e d d r i e d f i g

Citation context Poll. 6.81 assigns the fragment specifically to Cratinus in the course of a brief discussion of different types of figs, whereas Poll. 1.242 merely attributes it generally to comic playwrights in a discussion of names for the fruit of a fig tree. Both references likely go back to the same (unidentified) source.

Interpretation A παλάθη or παλάσιον was a pressed cake made of chopped dried fruit or the like, often but not necessarily figs; cf. Hdt. 4.23.3 (apparently plum paste); Ar. Pax 574 with $\Sigma^{RΓ}$; Thphr. HP 4.2.10 ξηραίνουσι τὸν καρπὸν καὶ τὸν πυρῆνα ἐξαιροῦντες κόπτουσι καὶ ποιοῦσι παλάθας ("they dry the fruit, remove the stone, chop it up and produce palathai"; of plums); Luc. Pisc. 41 παλάθην ἰσχάδων ("a palathê of dried figs"); [Hdn.] Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 563.11 = Hsch. π 155 παλάσια τὰ συγκεκομμένα σῦκα. καὶ διὰ τοῦ θ παλάθια καὶ παλάθη ("palasia are minced figs; and with a theta palathia and palathê"); Hsch. η 68 παλάθην συγκειμένην ἐξ ἰσχάδων ("a palathê composed of dried figs").

ἰσχάς (< ἰσχνός, "dry") is first attested in Hipponax (frr. 28.1; 123). For dried figs as a basic, common foodstuff, e. g. Pherecr. fr. 74; Hermipp. fr. 63.16; Ar. V. 297; fr. 681; Alex. fr. 122 with Arnott 1996 ad loc. For figs generally, see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 801–3; Orth 2009 on Stratt. fr. 4.1; Zohary–Hopf–Weiss 2012. 126–30.

For κοπτός in the sense "minced", cf. Antiph. fr. 131.8 τυρὸς κοπτός ("minced cheese").

fr. 391 K.–A. (461 K.)

Poll. 7.161
κ ε ρ ά μ ι ο ν ο ἰ ν η ρ ὸ ν Ἡρόδοτος (3.6.1) καὶ Κρατῖνος

Herodotus (3.6.1) and Cratinus (use the term) w i n e - j a r

Discussion Kock 1880 I.130

Citation context From a collection of words pertaining to potters and pottery; Ar. fr. 743 (quoted in Interpretation) is referenced immediately after this.

Interpretation Kock connected the fragment with fr. 199.6 κοὐδ' ὀξύβαφον οἰνηρὸν ἔτι κεκτήσεται ("and he won't even have a vinegar dish for his wine any longer"; from Pytinê).

κεράμιον is a generic term for an earthenware jar[152] most often used to store or transport wine (e. g. X. An. 6.1.15 οἴνου δὲ κεράμια χίλια καὶ πεντακόσια, "1500 jars of wine"; 6.2.3 οἴνου κεράμια δισχίλια, "2000 jars of wine"; [D.] 35.18 οἴνου κεραμίοις, "jars of wine"; Alex. fr. 85.2 οἴνου κεράμιον, "a jar of wine"; Arist. Cat. 15^{b}24; Ph. 211^{b}3–4; IG II^{2} 1368.162 οἴνου κεράμιον ἕν, [152] Not "cup" (Storey 2011. 427).

"one jar of wine"; cf. Men. Sam. 303) or other liquids (e. g. Ar. fr. 743 κεράμιον ὀξηρόν, "a vinegar jar"; Hp. Mul. 114 = 8.246.14 Littré ἐλαιηρῶν κεραμίων, "olive-oil jars"; Arist. HA 534ᵃ21 ταριχηρῶν κεραμίων, "saltfish jars", i. e. containing saltfish packed in brine; fr. 505 κεραμίων ἐχόντων πίτταν, "jars containing pitch").

οἰνηρόν is attested elsewhere in comedy at fr. 199.6 (quoted above); Alex. fr. 56.2 οἰνηρὸν ἀγγεῖον ("wine pot"). For the formation, cf. ἀνθηρός ("flower-like"; Diph. fr. 64.1), ἰχθυηρός ("used for fish"; Ar. fr. 547, of a platter), μελιτηρός ("used for honey"; Ar. fr. 525, of a vessel of some sort), μυρηρός ("used for perfume"; Ar. fr. 210.1, of a flask), οἰσυπηρός ("full of grease"; Ar. Ach. 1177, of wool), ὑδατηρός ("used for water"; A. fr. 96*.2, of a pitcher).

fr. 392 K.–A. (347 K.)

Hsch. λ 691
Λ έ ρ ν η θ ε α τ ῶ ν· παροιμία τίς ἐστιν Ἀργολικὴ Λέρνη κακῶν, ἣν ἀποδιοπομπούμενοι ἔλεγον. τὰ γὰρ ἀποκαθάρματα εἰς τοῦτο τὸ χωρίον ἐνέβαλλον. Λέρνην οὖν θεατῶν ἔφη ὁ Κρατῖνος τὸ θέατρον διὰ τὸ σύμμικτον εἶναι καὶ παντοδαπὸν ὄχλον ἔχειν a L e r n a of s p e c t a t o r s: There is a proverb "an Argolic Lerna of bad people/troubles," which they said when they were getting rid of someone/something; because they threw their garbage into this place. Cratinus accordingly called the Theater a "Lerna of spectators" because it was a jumble and contained a motley crowd

Phot. λ 204 = Suda λ 302
Λ έ ρ ν η θ ε α τ ῶ ν· ἀντὶ ⟨τοῦ⟩ κακῶν θέατρον. Κρατῖνος. οἱ μὲν διὰ τὴν Ὕδραν, οἱ δὲ διὰ τὸ τοὺς Ἀργείους τὰ καθάρματα ἐκεῖ ἀποφέρειν· ὁ γὰρ Δαναὸς ἐν τῇ Λέρνῃ τὰς κεφαλὰς τῶν Αἰγυπτιαδῶν ἀπέθετο· καί, ὡς εἰκός, ἐφ' ὕβρει ἐκέλευσεν τὰ † δεισαια † ἐκεῖ ῥίπτειν a L e r n a of s p e c t a t o r s: in place of "a theater of bad people/troubles". Cratinus. Some authorities claim (that this expression is used) on account of the Hydra, others because the Argives carried their garbage off there; for Danaus deposited the heads of the sons of Aegyptus in Lerna, and as a (further) form of abuse, apparently, he ordered (the people) to throw their † deisaia † there

Meter The words as preserved scan ––⏑⏑–.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.201–2; Kock 1880 I.113–14; Lelli 2006. 133

Citation context Traced by Erbse to the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (λ 11). Related material, although without the reference to Cratinus, is preserved at – Hsch. λ 690 Λερναία χολή ⟨καὶ⟩ Λέρνη κακῶν· παροιμία· διὰ τὸ τοὺς Ἀργείους ⟨τὰ⟩ καθάρματα εἰς αὐτὴν βάλλειν, ἢ διὰ τὸ τὸν Δαναὸν τῶν Αἰγυπτιαδῶν ἐκεῖ καταθεῖναι τὰς κεφαλάς ("Lernaean bile ⟨and⟩ a Lerna of bad people/troubles: a proverb; because of the fact that the Argives used to throw ⟨their⟩ garbage into it, or because of the fact that Danaus deposited the heads of the sons of Aegyptus there") – Str. 8.371 δείκνυται δὲ καὶ Ἀμυμώνη τις κρήνη κατὰ Λέρνην. ἡ δὲ Λέρνη λίμνη τῆς Ἀργείας ἐστὶ καὶ τῆς Μυκηναίας, ἐν ᾗ τὴν Ὕδραν ἱστοροῦσι· διὰ δὲ τοὺς γινομένους καθαρμοὺς ἐν αὐτῇ παροιμία τις ἐξέπεσε Λέρνη κακῶν ("Near Lerna one is shown a spring called Amymônê. Lerna is a marsh in Argive and Mycenian territory, in which they report the Hydra (lived). A proverb 'a Lerna of bad people/troubles' arose from the purifications carried out in it")

– Diogenian. 6.7 Λέρνη κακῶν· ὡς Ἰλιὰς κακῶν. διὰ τὸ τοὺς Ἀργείους ἐκεῖσε ἐν τῇ Λέρνῃ τὰ καθάρματα βάλλειν ("a Lerna of bad people/troubles: like 'an Iliad of bad people/troubles'. Because of the fact that the Argives in the area used to throw their garbage in the Lerna").

Interpretation The extradramatic reference to the Theater audience suggests that the phrase is drawn from a parabasis. For similarly disparaging remarks about the spectators, cf. fr. 360; Ar. Ra. 273–6, and in general Eup. fr. 308. Whether Hesychius' claim that Cratinus was referring specifically to the audience's diversity (of social class? or place of origin?) is anything more than a guess is impossible to say. Perhaps "Lerna" stands instead via synecdoche for the Lernaean Hydra, and what Cratinus meant was that the audience had many heads and was thoroughly nasty.

Λέρνη, a marshy area a few miles southwest of Argos, is often mentioned in connection with its homonymous river and numerous springs (e. g. Hippon. fr. 105.10; [A.] PV 677; E. Ph. 613; A.R. 3.1241–2) and above all else because of the Hydra, an enormous, multi-headed water snake that lived there and was eventually killed by Heracles (e. g. Hes. Th. 313–18; S. Tr. 1094; E. HF 419–24; Ion 191–2; Str. 8.368; [Apollod.] Bib. 2.77–80; Venit 1989; Kokkorou-Alewras 1990, esp. 41–3; Gantz 1993. 384–6). For Lerna as the place where the daughters of Danaus decapitated the sons of Aegyptus (as in Photius = Suda), see [Apollod.] Bib. 2.5; Paus. 2.24.2. For the association specifically of Amymone (one of the Danaids) with Lerna (as in Strabo; see Citation context), cf. E. Ph. 187–8; [Apollod.] Bib. 2.14–15; Paus. 2.37.1, 4; Hyg. 169.

θεατής is late 5th-century vocabulary, in comedy always of the actual audience in the Theater; see in general Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 205.1 (with additional examples of the use of the word in parabases).

fr. 393 K.–A. (359 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 89.1
μ η δ ὲ ν ὑ π έ ρ φ ε υ· Κρατῖνος ἐπὶ τοῦ μηδὲν ἄγαν

n o t h i n g o v e r m u c h: Cratinus instead of mêden agan ("nothing in excess")

Meter The words as preserved scan —⏑⏑——; taken by Meineke to be anapaestic.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.215; Fraenkel 1950 on A. Ag. 377

Citation context An isolated Atticist note. Cf. discussions of ὑπέρφευ alone at

- Phyrn. PS p. 120.14–15 ὑπέρφευ· οἷον ὑπερβαλλόντως καὶ ἐκπληκτικῶς. τὸ γὰρ φεῦ ἐπὶ ἐκπλήξεως τίθεται ("hyperpheu: i. e. exceedingly and astonishingly, since pheu is used to express astonishment")
- Hsch. υ 486 ὑπέρφευ· ὑπεράγαν ("hyperpheu: in excess").

Interpretation Fraenkel suggests that Cratinus' μηδὲν ὑπέρφευ is just as likely a colorful variation of the commonplace mêden agan ("nothing in excess"; e. g. E. Hipp. 265; Pl. Phlb. 45d—this is described as ὁ παροιμιαζόμενος λόγος, "the proverbial saying"; Prt. 343b, where the words are said to have been inscribed at Delphi along with γνῶθι σαυτόν, "Know yourself!"; Arist. Rh. 1395ᵃ19–20), as a bit of paratragedy (below). It might be either—or both—and simple metrical considerations may also have played a role in the poet's choice of words.

The adverb ὑπέρφευ is attested elsewhere only in Attic tragedy in moralizing contexts and with a negative sense: A. Pers. 820 ὡς οὐχ ὑπέρφευ θνητὸν ὄντα χρὴ φρονεῖν ("that he who is mortal should not think hyperpheu"; the ghost of Darius discussing the defeat the Persian army suffers for its hybris); Ag. 377–8 φλεόντων δωμάτων ὑπέρφευ / ὑπὲρ τὸ βέλτιστον ("the house was hyperpheu full, beyond what is best"; the chorus sing of Zeus' justice (lyric)); E. HF 1320–1 καίτοι τί φήσεις, εἰ σὺ μὲν θνητὸς γεγὼς / φέρεις ὑπέρφευ τὰς τύχας, θεοὶ δὲ μή; ("And yet what will you say, if you, being mortal, take your fate hyperpheu hard, but the gods do not?"); Ph. 549–50 τί τὴν τυραννίδ', ἀδικίαν εὐδαίμονα, / τιμᾷς ὑπέρφευ καὶ μέγ' ἥγησαι τόδε ("Why do you honor tyranny, a prosperous wrong, hyperpheu and think so much of it?"; Jocasta urges her sons to stop fighting). Presumably < φεῦ ("alas!"), with the prefix adding an intensive sense ("φεῦ and beyond" vel sim.; cf. ὑπέρμορα, "beyond due measure", on the one hand, and ὑπέρευ "extremely well" < εὖ "well", on the other), and thus when used as an adverb "in a way that produces excessive grief".

fr. 394 K.–A. (344 K.)

Ath. 15.676f
δεῖξαι γὰρ οὐκ ἔχεις ὅτι † διαλελυμένως † τις εἴρηκε ῥόδων στέφανον καὶ ἴων στέφανον· τὸ γὰρ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ κατὰ παιδιὰν εἴρηται· † ν α ρ κ ι σ σ ί ν ο υ ς ὀ λ ί σ κ ο υ ς † (sic Ath.[A] : ναρκίσσου στεφανίσκους Casaubon : ναρκισσίνους ὀλίσβους Schweighäuser : ναρκισσίνους ὀχίσκους vel ναρκισσίνους ὀσχίσκους Bothe : Ναρκίσσου ὀλίσβους vel Ναρκίσσου ὀβελίσκους Meineke)

For you cannot show that anyone ever referred to a garland made of roses or violets † using an uncontracted form †; for Cratinus' † n a r k i s s i n o u s o l i s k o u s † (thus Ath.[A] : "little garlands of narcissus flowers" Casaubon : "narcissus dildoes" Schweighäuser : "little narcissus carts" or "little narcissus branches" Bothe : "Narcissus' dildoes" or "Narcissus' little spits" Meineke) is said as a joke

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.181–2; Bothe 1855. 57; Meineke 1867 IV.327; Kock 1880 I.113

Text The adjective ναρκίσσινος ("made of narcissus") is otherwise confined to medical writers, where it is often used of suppositories, while ὀλίσκους is not a form of any word.[153] Casaubon's ναρκίσσου στεφανίσκους ("little garlands of narcissus flowers"; cf. Anacr. PMG 410.1 σελίνων στεφανίσκους; Anacreont. 42.5 στεφανίσκους δ' ὑακίνθων; 44.15 ῥοδίνοισι στεφανίσκοις) restores a readable text that fits the context in Athenaeus, but is too far from the paradosis to inspire much confidence. Schweighäuser's ὀλίσβους ("dildos"), Bothe's ὀχίσκους (an unattested diminutive of ὄχος, "cart") or ὀσχίσκους (an unattested diminutive of ὄσχος, "branch") and Meineke's two proposals (referring to the mythological figure Narcissus rather than the flower) are easier corrections of ὀλίσκους, but require that the text was already corrupt when Athenaeus or his source cited it as part of a discussion of garlands.

Citation context Part of a challenge issued by Myrtilus to Ulpian introducing a long discussion of garlands offered by the latter. Myrtilus orders Ulpian not to rely exclusively on Aelius Asclepiades' Garlands. But Ulpian cites the work (otherwise obscure) in passing at 15.679b, and it is tempting to think that it is one of the major sources of this portion of the Deipnosophists although not necessarily of the fragment of Cratinus.

Interpretation The text is too problematic for any substantial conclusions to be drawn about its meaning. Garlands of narcissus flowers (as in Casaubon's ναρκίσσου στεφανίσκους) are mentioned at Chaerem. TrGF 71 F 7 κισσῷ τε ναρκίσσῳ τε τριέλικας κύκλῳ / στεφάνων ἑλικτῶν ("triple coils of helik-toi garlands, with ivy and narcissus round about"); Artemid. 1.77 στέφανοι ναρκίσσων πεποιημένοι πᾶσι κακοί ("garlands made from narcissus are bad for everyone"). For dildoes (as in Schweighäuser's ὀλίσβους), see fr. 354 n. For the narcissus, see Atchley 1938. 48.

---

153 Formally it seems to be a diminutive of ὀλός ("cuttlefish ink"), which makes no obvious sense.

fr. 395 K.–A. (329 K.)

Ael. VH 2.13
εὐδοκίμει δ' οὖν αὐτῷ τὸ δρᾶμα. καὶ γάρ τοι καὶ τὸ τοῦ Κρατίνου τοῦτο συνέβη εἴ ποτε ἄλλοτε καὶ τότε τῷ θεάτρῳ, ν ο σ ῆ σ α ι τ ὰ ς φ ρ έ ν α ς

But his comedy was well-received. In fact, if ever at any point the following remark by Cratinus was to the point, it was at that moment for the Theater: t o b e s i c k i n t h e h e a d

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.172; Kock 1880 I.110; Luppe 2007. 402; Wright 2012. 53; Telò 2016. 9

Text Meineke suggested that τῷ θεάτρῳ might belong to the fragment as well and proposed reading τῷ δὲ θεάτρῳ 'νόσησαν τὰς φρένας (–⏑⏑– | –⏑–⏑–⏑–; part of a Eupolidean), while Kock suggested καὶ τῷ θεάτρῳ τότε νοσῆσαι τὰς φρένας, in which case it would scan e. g. ––⏑– –|⏑⏑|⏑– ––⏑–; iambic trimeter).

Citation context From a long, foolish story about how Anytus and others, well aware of the high regard in which the Athenian people generally held Socrates, plotted against him by convincing Aristophanes to attack the philosopher in a play (i. e. Clouds).

Interpretation Although Aelian applies Cratinus' words to the Theater (i. e. the Theater audience), this does not necessarily mean that Cratinus himself did; but cf. frr. 342; 360; 392; Pherecr. fr. 163; Teleclid. fr. 4; Eup. frr. 205; 392 with Olson 2014 ad loc.; Ar. Nu. 520–5; Pax 43–4.

The collocation νοσέω φρένας ("be mentally ill", i. e. "act crazy") is attested elsewhere only at Phryn. PS p. 91.4 νοσεῖν τὰς φρένας, νοσεῖν τὸν νοῦν, νοσεῖν τὴν ψυχήν[154] ("to be mentally ill, to be intellectually ill, to be spiritually ill") and then in the 4th century CE at Lib. decl. 33.42 τὰς φρένας νοσεῖς; or. 1.62 ἐνόσει … τὰς φρένας, and in various Church Fathers (as an Atticism).[155] For the idea, cf. Diph. fr. 23.5 αἱ κρίσεις θ' ἡμῶν νοσοῦσι (lit. "and our ability to make decisions is ill"). The verb is first attested only in the second half of the 5th century[156] and seems mostly to be used absolutely ("be sick"); elsewhere in 5th-century comedy only at Ar. V. 71; Av. 31 (both with νόσον as an internal accusative).

[154] Cf. [Men.] Mon. 75 βέλτιόν ἐστι σῶμά γ' ἢ ψυχὴν νοσεῖν.

fr. 396 K.–A. (370 K.)

Poll. 6.23
καὶ οἰναγωγὸν πλοῖον παρὰ Κρατίνῳ and a wine-transport ship in Cratinus

Meter The words as preserved scan –⏑–––×.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.211

Citation context From a catalogue of compounds and derivatives of οἶνος; fr. 199 is quoted immediately after this.

Interpretation πλοῖον (< πλέω, "sail") is a generic term for a ship, with the adjective here serving to make it clear that this is a particular sort of merchant vessel (also known as a holkas < ἕλκω, "draw"; e. g. Eup. fr. 99.7; Ar. Eq. 171; Pax 37 with Olson 1998 ad loc.; fr. 439; E. Cyc. 505; Th. 1.137.2; X. An. 1.4.6). For ships specifically described as οἰναγωγά, cf. Pherecr. fr. 152.4–5 βαθείας κύλικας ὥσπερ ὁλκάδας / οἰναγωγούς, περιφερεῖς, λεπτάς, μέσας γαστροείδας ("deep cups like wine-transport vessels, perfectly round, thin-walled, pot-bellied in the middle"; the only other attestation of the adjective; cf. σιταγωγός, "grain-transport", at e. g. Hdt. 7.147.2 πλοῖα … σιταγωγά; Th. 6.30.1 σιταγωγοῖς ὁλκάσι; 8.4.1 σιταγωγοῖς ναυσίν). That οἰναγωγός is poorly attested means not that the word was rare, but only that our sources display little interest in rough commercial vocabulary of this sort. For merchant shipping, see in general Casson 1995. 169–200. For the wide range of goods imported into Attica by sea, see Hermipp. fr. 63 (but without reference to wine, 155 At E. fr. 644.2 νοσεῖν τίθησι τὰς ἀμεινόνων φρένας, the accusative is the subject of the verb rather than an accusative of respect (of the body part affected, as also at e. g. Hdt. 3.149 νοσῆσαι τὰ αἰδοῖα).

---

156 νοῦσος is attested already in Homer (e. g. Il. 1.10).

despite the fact that the business is imagined as conducted by Διόνυσος ἐπ' οἴνοπα πόντον ("Dionysus on the wine-dark sea"; v. 2). For imported wine in particular, e. g. fr. *195.1 (from Mende); Eup. fr. 271.2 (from Naxos); Ar. fr. 334.2 (from Chios, Thasos or Peparethos); Stratt. fr. 64.2 (from Sciathos).

fr. 397 K.–A. (364 K.)

Σ^{A} Il. 18.521b
οὐχ ὅσα μέντοι ἐν ῥήμασιν ἔκτασιν ἔχει καὶ ἐν ὀνόμασιν· παρὰ γὰρ τὸ ἄσσω καὶ κατάσσω καὶ μέλλοντα τὸν ἄξω καὶ προστακτικὸν τὸ ἆξον, (Il. 6.306) ——, ἡ ἀξίνη συστέλλει τὸ α, παρά τε τὸ ἀρῶ καὶ ἀρῶμαι ἐκτεινόμεν⟨ον συστέλλομεν⟩ ὄνομα ἀρήν· π ι σ σ ο κ ω ν ί α ς ἀ ρ ή ν (sic Nauck : ἀρην Σ : Ἄρης Bergk : Ἄρην Lehrs) Κρατῖνος

(This is) not (the case) in fact for any verbs or nouns that have syllabic lengthening. For by contrast with assô ("break"), katassô ("weaken"), the future axô ("will break") and the participle axon ("about to break"), (Il. 6.306) ——, axinê ("axe") shortens the alpha, and by contrast with the long-vowel arô ("plough") and arômai ("pray"), ⟨we shorten⟩ (the alpha in) the noun arên ("lamb"); Cratinus p i s s o k ô n i a s a r ê n ("a pitch-smeared lamb"; thus Nauck : the accent is missing in Σ : "Ares" (nom.) Bergk : "Ares" (acc.) Lehrs)

Hsch. κ 4849
κωνῆσαι· πισσοκωνῆσαι· καὶ κύκλῳ περιενεγκεῖν. καὶ πισσοκώνητον μόρον λέγουσιν (A. fr. dub. 478 = adesp. tr. fr. 226a), ὅταν πίσσῃ καταχρισθέντες τινὲς ὑπὸ πυρὸς ἀποθάνωσιν· Αἰσχύλος Κρήσσαις (fr. 118). καὶ Κρατῖνος π ι σ σ ο κ ω ν ί α ν ἀ ρ ή ν νῦν φησι, διότι ⟨πίσσῃ⟩ (sic Kassel–Austin : πισσοκωνίαν Ἄρην νῦν φησι, διότι ⟨πίσσῃ⟩ Kaibel : πισοκονία γὰρ νῦν πισιδίαδτι Hsch.) χρίουσι τὰ παρίσθμια τῶν προβάτων kônêsai ("to cover with pitch"): pissokônêsai ("to smear with pitch"); also to lead in a circle. They also refer to "a pitch-smeared fate" (A. fr. dub. 478 = adesp. tr. fr. 226a) whenever people are burnt to death after being covered with pitch. Aeschylus in Krêssai (fr. 118)[157]. And Cratinus now says pissokônian arên ("a p i t c h - s m e a r e d l a m b "), because of the fact that they smear the throats of sheep and goats ⟨with pitch⟩ (thus Kassel–Austin : "now says 'pitch-smeared Ares, because of the fact that … ⟨with pitch⟩" Kaibel : "for pitch-smearing now † pisidiadti †" Hsch.)

Meter The words as preserved scan —⏑—⏑—⏑— and are compatible with iambic trimeter.

Discussion Bergk 1838. 255; Meineke 1839 II.227–8; Lehrs 1857. 310; Kock 1880 I.116–17; Kaibel 1895. 440

---

[157] πισσοκωνήτῳ πυρί

Text The explanation at the end of the note in Hesychius appears to be drawn from Hsch. π 2364 πισσοκωνίας· Διόδοτος πισσοκωνίαν εἶπεν διὰ τὸ τὰ πρόβατα πίσσῃ χρίεσθαι ("pissokônias: Diodotus[158] used pissokônia on account of the fact that sheep and goats were smeared with pitch"). This is at any rate some support for printing ἀρήν ("lamb") rather than a form of Ἄρης ("Ares") in the fragment of Cratinus. There is no evidence anywhere else for a "pitch-smeared Ares".

Citation context The scholion is commenting on the length of the initial syllable in ἀρδμός ("watering hole"; < ἄρδω, "water") at Il. 18.521 ἐν ποταμῷ, ὅθι τ' ἀρδμὸς ἔην πάντεσσι βοτοῖσιν ("in a river, where there was a watering hole for all their herds"); traced by Lentz to Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 109.15–22).

Interpretation Presumably a reference to a prophylactic medical measure of some sort carried out by shepherds. For pitch and pitch-production, see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 188–90 with further bibliography. For smearing human beings with pitch before setting fire to them as a horrific means of execution, see Heracl. Pont. fr. 50 Wehrli = fr. 23 Schütrumpf ap. Ath. 12.524a.

fr. 398 K.–A. (319 K.)

Excerpta cod. Darmst. 2773 fol. 329r ap. Hermann 1828 III.40
ἔοικε τὸ φενακίζειν καὶ ἡ φενάκη ἀπὸ τοῦ πηνηκίζειν καὶ τῆς πηνήκης γίνεσθαι … καὶ δῆλον ὅτι οἱ παλαιότεροι κωμικοὶ πηνήκην καὶ πηνηκίζειν ἔλεγον. Κρατῖνος· π ο ν η ρ ο ὺ ς ἀ ν θ ρ ώ π ο υ ς π η ν η κ ί ζ ω ν ἐ ξ α π α τ ᾷ. λέγεται δὲ πηνήκη ἡ ἐπίθετος κόμη, ὅθεν τὸ ῥῆμα πονηρούς cod. : πονηρῶς Kock phenakizein ("to cheat") and phenakê ("wig") appear to come from pênêkizein ("to cheat") and pênêkê ("wig") … and it is clear that the ancient comic playwrights used to say pênêkê and pênêkizein. Cratinus: h e d e c e i v e s b a d p e o p l e b y c h e a t i n g t h e m . Hair that is added (to one's head) is referred to as a pênêkê, whence the verb [158] The manuscript transmits ἀόδοτος, which is easily explained as in origin a crude majuscule error (A for Δ; corrected by Meineke). Kaibel took the Diodotus in question to be the Augustan-period physician and student of Asclepiades (RE Diodotos #14), but he might be anyone.

Phot.^{z} ined. = Suda ε 2189
ἐπηνήκιζεν· ἐξηπάτα. οὕτως Κρατῖνος epênêkizen: he used to deceive. Thus Cratinus

Meter The words as preserved scan ⏑–––––––––––⏑⏑–. Meineke suggested that these might be the remains of two Eupolideans, e. g. πονηροὺς ἀνθρώπους / πηνηκίζων ἐξαπατᾷ (⟨⏑⏑–×–⏑⟩⏑– ––––⟨–⏑–⟩ / –––––⏑⏑– ⟨⏑⏑–×–⏑–⟩). But see Text.

Discussion Meineke 1847 I.63; Fritzsche 1855. 21; Kock 1880 I.106; Blaydes 1896. 13; Kaibel ap. Kassel–Austin

Text Kock took ἐξαπατᾷ in the Excerpta to be a gloss (cf. Phot. = Suda) and proposed reading πονηρῶς for the transmitted πονηρούς, yielding πονηρῶς ἀνθρώπους πηνηκίζων ("basely cheating people"; supposed meter left unspecified). Kaibel similarly found πηνηκίζων ἐξαπατᾷ redundant and argued that the only word that could be securely attributed to Cratinus was ἐπηνήκιζεν in Phot. = Suda.

The paradosis πονηρούς ("bad, rascally") makes the situation ironic (the subject's victims get what they deserve), whereas Kock's πονηρῶς ("miserably, wretchedly") would lend some pity to the sentiment.

Citation context Material related to the anonymous grammarian's note and traced by Erbse to Paus.Gr. π 21 is collected in fr. 304 Citation context. Note also Hsch. π 2205 πηνηκίζειν· ἀπατᾶν ("pênêkizein: to try to deceive"; traced by Erbse to Ael. Dion. ε *51).

Interpretation Although Kassel–Austin follow Kock in combining this material, these might better have been treated as two separate fragments.[159] For the tone, see Text.

φενακίζω is widely attested in the comic poets (e. g. Ar. Ach. 90; Pax 1087; Ra. 921; Theopomp. Com. fr. 9.1; Men. Sam. 315), πηνηκίζω (if sound) only here and in the compound διαπηνηκίζω in fr. 304 and the lexicographic sources collected under Citation context there. φενάκη is first attested at Luc. Alex. 59. For πηνήκη, see fr. 304 n.

ἐξαπατάω The compound is attested already in Homer (e. g. Il. 9.371) and is widely distributed thereafter (elsewhere in comedy at e. g. Ar. Eq. 1103; Th. 343; Men. Perinth. 14), but is attested in tragedy only at E. Hipp. 1406, presumably for metrical reasons.

---

[159] Cf. Kock himself: "Suidae verba ad hoc fragmentum pertinere non necesse est".

fr. 399 K.–A. (353 K.)

Poll. 2.28
κικίννους δὲ Ἀριστοφάνης (V. 1069; fr. 229) τε εἴρηκε καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 457)· τούτους δὲ καὶ παρωτίδας ὠνόμαζον. Κρατῖνος δὲ στημονίας κικίννους εἶπε τοὺς στήμονι ὁμοίους ὑπ' ἰσχνότητος

Both Aristophanes (V. 1069; fr. 229) and Eupolis (fr. 457) use the word kikinnoi; they also referred to these as parôtides ("beside-the-ear (hair)"). And Cratinus referred to locks that due to their thinness resemble warp-threads (stêmônes) as stêmoniai kikinnoi ("thread-like ringlets")

Hsch. σ 1823
στημονίας κικίννους· τοῖς στήμοσιν ὁμοίους

stêmoniai kikinnoi (acc.): those that resemble warp-threads (stêmônes)

Citation context The citation in Pollux is part of a small collection of words meaning "locks" or the like amid a larger assembly of words pertaining to hair generally; a discussion of terms for hairstyles follows. The entry in Hesychius is patently drawn from the same source, although with Cratinus' name omitted.

Interpretation κίκιννοι (taken by Beekes 2010 s. v. to be substrate vocabulary; borrowed as Latin cincinnus) are "ringlets" of hair, typically mentioned in pejorative descriptions of overly pretty young men; cf. Ar. V. 1069–70 ("the ringlets of young men and their posture and their wide-assed-ness") with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Theoc. 11.10; 14.4; Alciphr. 3.19.3; and in Latin sources Plaut. Capt. 647–8; Mil. 923–4; Truc. 287–8, 609–10 moechum malacum, cincinnatum, umbraticulum, tympanotribam amas, hominem non nauci ("you love a soft, curly-haired, shade-dwelling, tambourine-beating adulterer, a man of no worth"); Var. Men. fr. 375 Astbury; Apul. Met. 8.24; Juv. 6.492.

στημονίας is a hapax. For the formation, see on fr. 422.

fr. 400 K.–A.

Phot.^{z} ined.
χλωρὸν τυρόν· τὸν ἁπαλόν. Κρατῖνος green cheese: that which is soft. Cratinus

Citation context Material probably drawn from the same (Atticist) source, but with no mention of Cratinus, is preserved at Moer. χ 9 χλωρὸν τυρόν Ἀττικοί· ἁπαλὸν δὲ Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (say) 'green cheese'; Greeks generally (say) 'soft'"); Hsch. χ 554 χλωρὸν τυρόν· ἁπαλόν ("green cheese: soft"). Cf. Phryn. PS p. 127.7–8 χλωρὸς τυρός· ὁ νέος καὶ πρόσφατος ("green cheese: that which is new and fresh"); Σ^{D} Il. 11.630 (μέλι χλωρόν) πρόσφατον, νέον. οὕτω γὰρ καὶ ἡμεῖς χλωρὸν τυρὸν λέγομεν τὸν νέον ("(green honey) fresh, new. For in this way we too call new (cheese) chlôros tyros"). Note also Hsch. τ 1281 τράφαλλος· ὁ χλωρὸς τυρός. οἱ δὲ τραφαλλίδα ("traphallos: green cheese. But some call it traphallis"); Poll. 6.48, 57; 7.175; 10.19; Eust. p. 1001.51 = III.689.18 χλωρὸς τυρός, ὁ νεοπαγής ("green cheese, that which is recently curdled").

Interpretation χλωρὸς τυρός is soft, fresh cheese (caseus recens or mollis in Latin, e. g. Var. R. 2.11.3; Plin. Nat. 28.161; Apul. Met. 8.19) of the sort being drained by the Cyclops at Od. 9.219, as opposed to hard, aged cheese with a rind (τυρὸς ξηρός; caseus siccus or vetus in Latin, e. g. Plaut. Capt. 851; Var. R. 2.11.3; Plin. Nat. 28.156, 233). For green cheese mentioned elsewhere in Attic comedy, Ar. Ra. 559; Antiph. fr. 131.7 (in a catalogue of types of cheese); Alex. fr. 178.12 τυροῦ τροφάλια χλωρὰ Κυθνίου ("green wheels of Cythnian cheese") with Arnott 1996 ad loc. For the green-cheese market in Athens, Lys. 23.6.

χλωρός (< *$g^{h}elh_{3}$–, "green, yellow"; related to Lat. helvus, "pale"; holus, "cabbage"; Engl. "yellow" and "gold") here refers to a pale, whitish yellow; cf. fr. 43 (of cow-dung, and thus "greenish-yellow"); Ar. Lys. 255 (of an olive tree or olive-tree wood, and thus perhaps "dull green"); Nicopho fr. 20.2 (of figs, meaning "unripe"); Axionic. fr. 4.8 (of a culinary paste, presumably made from fresh herbs and thus "green"); Crobyl. fr. 9.1 (of a chickpea, and thus either "fresh" or "yellowish brown"); Eub. fr. 27 (of a fabulous plant eaten by horses, and thus probably "green"); Alex. fr. 84.5 (of spices, and thus probably "green"). In general, see Irwin 1974. 31–78, esp. 60–2.

τυρός (< teuH*–, "swell"; related to Av. tûiri– "whey") and its cognates are attested already in Homer (e. g. Od. 4.88; 9.219; in the Iliad only at 11.639). For cheese as a basic foodstuff, see Olson–Sens 2000 on Archestr. fr. 14.5; Biles–Olson 2015 on Ar. V. 676.

fr. 401 K.–A. (366 K.)

Phryn. Ecl. 337
ὅ ρ κ ω σ ε (sic Phryn.^{bBCEm} : ὁρκῶσε Phryn.^{VL} : ὥρκισε Phryn.^{x} : ὥρκησε Phryn.^{F}) καὶ ὁ ρ κ ω τ ὴ ς (sic edd. : ὁρκώτης Phryn.^{xbBEF} : ὡρκωτης Phryn.^{C} : ὁρκωτός Phryn.^{q} : ὁρκω της Phryn.^{V}) δ ' ἐ γ ώ (sic Phryn.$^{VNu.CEFq}$: δ' om. Phryn.^{xB} : δ' ἐγώ om. Phryn.^{W})· οὕτω Κρατῖνός φησιν. μᾶλλον δὲ διὰ τοῦ ω λέγε ἢ διὰ τοῦ ι ὥρκισεν he/she made (someone) swear an oath but I (thus Phryn.[VNu.CEFq] : "but" omitted in Phryn.[xB] : "but I" omitted in Phryn.[W]) ⟨am/was⟩ its administrator: thus says Cratinus. And use by preference the form with an omega rather than hôrkisen with an iota Meter The words as transmitted scan ——⏑ and ———⏑—, respectively, and are compatible with iambic trimeter.

Discussion Meineke 1847. vii; Kock 1880 I.117; Fraenkel 1910 I.200

Text The textual variants are all crude errors by copyists encountering unfamiliar vocabulary.

For the accent of nomina agentis in -της such as ὁρκωτής, see fr. 494 n.

Citation context 2nd-century CE advice on how to speak or write "proper" (i. e. 5th-century Attic) Greek. Cf. Hsch. ο 1237 ὁρκωτής· ὁ ὁρκίζων ("horkôtês: one who makes (someone else) swear an oath"). The propriety of horkizô is argued for at Orus fr. B 123 ὁρκίζειν καὶ ὁρκοῦν· ἑκατέρως ("horkizein and orkoun: both ways"). But even Orus (fr. B 124) rejects the noun ὁρκιστής: ὁρκωτάς· οὐχὶ ὁρκιστάς, οὐδὲ ὁρκωμότας λέγουσιν ("horkôtai (acc.), not horkistai, and they do not say horkômotai").

Interpretation ὁρκόω (also e. g. IG I³ 39.3–4 (mostly restored; 446/5 BCE); Th. 4.74.2; 8.75.2; Lys. 20.26; Is. 5.33; X. HG 6.5.3; Hesperia 2 (1933) 403 #20.6 (end of the 4th century)) is Attic vocabulary and refers specifically to the entry into formally binding oaths; used elsewhere in Attic comedy at Ar. Lys. 187 τίν' ὅρκον ὁρκώσεις ποθ' ἡμᾶς ("What oath exactly are you going to make us swear?"; addressed to Lysistrata by one of the women enlisted for the sex-strike) with Henderson 1987 on 181–239; Th. 275–6 ἡ φρὴν ὤμοσεν. / ἡ γλῶττα δ' οὐκ ὀμώμοκ', οὐδ' ὥρκωσ' ἐγώ ("Your mind made a vow, and your tongue [alone] has not sworn an oath, nor did I force it to"; Inlaw, recalling the Hippolytus, reminds Euripides of his obligation to rescue him, should their plan go wrong). The word is eventually supplanted by the synonym ὁρκίζω (first attested in the 4th century, e. g. X. Smp. 4.10; D. 18.30; 19.278; IG II² 1126.13 (380/79 BCE)), which Phrynichus rejects. On the eventual fate of omicron-contract verbs, see Horrocks 2010. 308–9.

A ὁρκωτής is described at Antipho 6.14 as the official who administers a sworn oath in court. At X. HG 6.5.3, ὁρκωταί are used by the Athenians after the Battle of Leuctra in 371 BCE to extract promises for peace and mutual defense among the Greek cities, while in IG I³ 39.4 (446/5 BCE) they are mentioned in connection with an embassy from Eretria after a failed revolt from Athens. The disparaged synonym ὁρκιστής is not attested outside of the lexicographic sources noted in Citation context.

fr. 402 K.–A. (373 K.)

Phot. α 174 = Synag. B α 272
ἅ γ ι ο ς· ὁ σεβάσιμος. καὶ ἅγιον τὸ σεβάσμιον καὶ τίμιον. λέγοιτο δ' ἂν καὶ ἅγιος ὁ μιαρός, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἄγους, ὡς Κρατῖνος

h a g i o s ("holy"): a venerable man. And what is venerable and honorable is hagion. But a man who is miaros ("unclean, abominable") could also be called hagios, from agos ("expiation, pollution"), as Cratinus (uses the word)

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′′′. Parallel material is preserved at Eust. p. 1356.59–60 = IV.926.3–4 ἅγιος παρὰ τοῖς παλαιοῖς οὐ μόνον ὁ καθαρός, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ μιαρός, διὰ τὸ τοῦ ἄγους διπλόσημον ("In ancient authors, hagios (means) not only the man who is katharos ('pure') but also the one who is miaros ('unclean, abominable'), due to the double sense of hagos").

Interpretation That which is ἅγιος is "sacred" in a way that inspires awe, dread and reverence (cf. ἅζομαι) in those who encounter it, since it stands under a divine interdict of some sort (e. g. Ar. Nu. 304, of religious rites; Av. 522, of the Birds in the supposed past, when human beings felt respect for them as quasi-divinities; Lys. 261, of the olive-wood statue of Athena on the Acropolis; Antiph. fr. 145.7, of an eel in the eyes of a gourmand influenced by Egyptian ideas about theriomorphic gods; Mnesim. fr. 4.59, of Syria as a source of spices burnt as offerings; [Thesp.] TrGF 1 F [4.5], of altars; Hdt. 2.44.1, of a temple; Pl. Cri. 51a, of one's fatherland, judged even more ἅγιος than one's parents and ancestors; Criti. 166c, of a temple; [Arist.] Mir. 834^{b}11–12, of an oath). Although the term is normally used in commendation, therefore, it can reasonably be used to mean "awful, frightful" in a negative sense instead, as at D. 23.74 ὃ πάντων ἁγιώτατα τούτων ἔχει καὶ φρικωδέστατα (the only other obvious example from the classical period). Cf. εὐαγής ("pure") and ἐναγής ("impure"); Latin sacer, which is usually "sacred" (e. g. Plaut. Mer. 362; Catul. 7.6), but can also mean "abominable" (e. g. Plaut. Mos. 983 unus istic servos est sacerrimus, "one of the servants there is especially wicked"; Turp. com. 25 etiam me irrides, pessime ac sacerrime?, "Are you still mocking me in the worst and most abominable way?"; Afran. com. 185 o sacrum scurram et malum, "O abominable and wicked loafer"; Catul. 14.12 di magni, horribilem et sacrum libellum, "O great gods, what a terrible and abominable little book!"); and see in general see Williger 1922.

ἅγιος is first attested here, and is absent from epic, lyric and tragedy except for the fragment of [Thespis] cited above. The more common alternative form is ἁγνός (already in Homer at e. g. Od. 5.123 Ἄρτεμις ἁγνή). The connection between ἅγιος and ἄγος proposed by Photius and Eustathius is superficially attractive, but leaves the absence of a rough breathing on ἄγος unaccounted for.

fr. 403 K.–A. (375 K.)

Harp. pp. 7.8–8.9 Dindorf = A 22 Keaney ἀγυιᾶς· Δημοσθένης ἐν τῷ κατὰ Μειδίου (21.51)· "χοροὺς ἱστάναι κατὰ τὰ πάτρια καὶ κνισᾶν ἀγυιᾶς." ἔνιοι μὲν ὀξύνουσι θηλυκῶς χρώμενοι, οἷον τὰς ὁδούς· βέλτιον δὲ περισπᾶν ὡς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀγυιεύς. ἀγυιεὺς δέ ἐστι κίων εἰς ὀξὺ λήγων ὃν ἱστᾶσι πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν, ὡς σαφὲς ποιοῦσιν Ἀριστοφάνης τε ἐν Σφηξὶ (875) καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 420). ἰδίους δὲ εἶναι φασιν αὐτοὺς Ἀπόλλωνος, οἱ δὲ Διονύσου, οἱ δὲ ἀμφοῖν … εἶεν δ' ἂν οἱ παρὰ τοῖς Ἀττικοῖς λεγόμενοι ἀ γ υ ι ε ῖ ς οἱ πρὸ τῶν οἰκιῶν βωμοὶ, ὥς φασι Κρατῖνος καὶ Μένανδρος (fr. 481) agyias: Demosthenes in his Against Meidias (21.51): "to set up choruses according to the ancestral customs and to fill the agyias with the smell of roasting meat". Some authorities give the word an acute accent and treat it as feminine, as if to say "the streets"; but it is better to give it a circumflex on the theory that it is derived from agyieus. An agyieus is a column with a pointed end which they set up in front of their doors, as both Aristophanes in Wasps (875) and Eupolis (fr. 420) make clear. (Some authorities) say that these belong to Apollo, others to Dionysus, others to both gods … What Attic-speakers call a g y i e i s might be the altars in front of their houses, as Cratinus and Menander (fr. 481) say Citation context Cf. Lex.Rhet. AB I p. 268.8–10 ἐτιμᾶτο δὲ καὶ Ἀπόλλων ἀγυιεύς, ᾧ ἔθυον πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν βωμίσκους καὶ στύλους εἰς ὀξὺ ἀνατείνοντας στρογγυλώδεις ἀνιστῶντες ("And Apollo Agyieus was also honored, to whom they made sacrifice, erecting before their doors small altars and round stelae that rose to a point"; probably to be understood as another reference to this fragment); Suda α 383 = Synag. B α 200 (drawn from the Epitome of Harpocration, but with the reference to Cratinus removed). Related material, quite possibly all going back to a single, well-informed scholarly note, is preserved at Hsch. α 856; St.Byz. α 50 (citing Eup. fr. 420 and Ar. Th. 489); Phot. α 277 = Suda α 383 (citing Pherecr. fr. 92); Σ^{VT} Ar. V. 875.

Interpretation ἀγυιεύς is (1) an epithet of Apollo as guardian of roads (ἄγυιαι) (e. g. E. Ph. 631 Φοῖβ' ἄναξ Ἀγυιεῦ, "O Roadside Lord Phoebus", with Mastronarde 1994 ad loc.); (2) an altar (as here) or aniconic stele or pillar dedicated to Apollo Agyieus, on which offerings might be left; such altars were a common sight on Athenian streets (e. g. Ar. V. 875 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; Th. 489 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; S. fr. 370.1 ἀγυιεὺς βωμός, "roadside altar"; IG II^2 4719 Ἀπόλλωνι Ἀγυιε⟨ῖ⟩ τὸν βωμόν "the altar to Roadside Apollo"; Handley 1965 on Men. Dysc. 659; Finglass 2007 on S. El. 635; Kossatz-Deissmann, ThesCRA IV (2005) 396–7, 401–2). Whether the altars/stelae or the god to whom the altars were dedicated was first called agyieus is uncertain. On nouns in -ευς in general, see Chantraine 1933. 125–31.

fr. 404 K.–A. (376 K.)

Phot. α 399 = Synag. B α 386
Ἀδώνιος· Φερεκράτης (fr. 213) εἶπεν ἀντὶ τοῦ Ἄδωνις (Blaydes : Ἀδώνιδος codd.). λέγει δὲ καὶ τὴν αἰτιατικὴν τ ὸ ν Ἀ δ ώ ν ι ο ν. οὕτω δὲ καὶ Πλάτων (fr. *4) καὶ Κρατῖνος, ἀλλὰ καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 759) καὶ ἕτεροι. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ Ἄδωνιν αὐτὸν πολλάκις

Adônios: Pherecrates (fr. 213) said this instead of Adônis (Blaydes : Adônidos codd.), and he also uses the accusative A d ô n i o n. So too Plato (fr. *4) and Cratinus, as well as Aristophanes (fr. 759) and others. But they also often call him Adônis

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.694; Kock 1880 I.118

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′′′. Cf. Phot. α 400 = Suda α 515 Ἀδώνια· συνεσταλμένως. Ἀδώνι᾽ ἄγομεν καὶ τὸν Ἄδωνιν κλάομεν. Φερεκράτης (fr. 181). καλοῦσι δὲ καὶ τὸ εἴδωλον τοῦ Ἀδώνιδος οὕτως Ἀδώνιον ("Adônia: with a short final vowel. We are celebrating the Adonia and we weep for Adonis; Pherecrates (fr. 181). But they also refer to the image of Adonis in this way, as an Adônion").

ἀντὶ τοῦ should serve to compare equivalent forms, here words in the same case (e. g. Phot. α 2297 ἀπεδημηκότες· ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀποδεδημηκότες). Blaydes, taking Ἀδώνιος to be a nominative, accordingly restored nominative Ἄδωνις for the paradosis Ἀδώνιδος (attracted into the genitive by the presence of τοῦ). Cobet 1858. 182 instead emended the initial lemma Ἀδώνιος to Ἀδῶνος (genitive of Ἄδων); but Ἀδώνιος would seem to be confirmed by Ἀδώνιον later on in the note. Meineke, understanding Ἀδώνιος to be a genitive (thus seemingly also Storey 2011. 432 "of Adonis") and retaining the paradosis Ἀδώνιδος in Pherecrates, suggested emending Ἀδώνιον to Ἄδωνιν in Plato, Cratinus and Aristophanes, and Ἄδωνιν at the end of the note to Ἄδωνα.

Interpretation Ἀδώνιος is a by-form of Ἄδωνις, the name of a beloved of Aphrodite who died young. The name is likely a Semitic loanword (cf. Hebr.

ādōn, "lord") and is also attested in the form Ἄδων (e. g. Theoc. 15.149; Nossis AP 6.275.4; Hsch. α 1224[160]). See Attalah 1966. 303–8. For Ἀδώνιος, cf. (in addition to the comic fragments cited by Phot. = Synag. B) Sapph. fr. 117B.b ὦ τὸν Ἀδώνιον. Words in -ιος are more typically adjectives meaning "pertaining to X" (e. g. ἵππος, "horse" > ἵππιος, "pertaining to horses"; cf. Chantraine 1933. 33–8).

For Adonis and the various rites and festivals in his honor, cf. Ar. Lys. 392–3; Men. Sam. 39–46 with Sommerstein 2013 ad loc.; Atallah 1966; Burkert 1979. 105–11; Ribichini 1981; Baudy 1986; Reed 1995; Simms 1998; Dillon 2003; Parker 2005. 283–8; O'Bryhim 2007; Reitzammer 2008; Pirrotta 2009. 65–70 (on Pl. Com. Adônis). Comedies entitled Adônis were also composed by Araros, Antiphanes, Philiscus and Nicophon; Philippides and Philetaerus wrote plays entitled Adôniazousai ("Women Celebrating the Festival of Adonis"); and Adôniazousai was supposedly identified by some authorities as an alternative title for Aristophanes' Lysistrata (cf. Σ^{Γ} 389, rejecting the claim).

fr. 405 K.–A. (377 K.)

Suda αι 64
α ἴ γ λ η · βόλος κυβευτικός, λαμπηδών, αὐγή. Κρατῖνος. καὶ ποπάνου εἶδος δηλοῖ καὶ θυσίαν, ὥς φησι Λεαγόρας. ἔστι καὶ παιδιά τις. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ σελήνη οὕτω καλεῖται καὶ ὁ Ἀσκληπιός a i g l ê: a throw of the dice, shining, ray of light. Cratinus. It also means a type of cake and a sacrificial offering, according to Leagoras. It is in addition a game of some sort. But the moon and Asclepius are also referred to thus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.229

Citation context The entry in the Suda is a much abbreviated version of a note preserved at Phot. α 527 = Synag. B α 496 αἴγλη· λαμπηδών, αὐγή (λαμπηδών, αὐγή om. Synag. B), φέγγος, φῶς. καὶ ἡ θυσία δὲ ἡ ὑπὲρ τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ εἰς Δελφοὺς ἀπαγομένη αἴγλη ἐκαλεῖτο. καὶ ποπάνου τι εἶδος ἐν ᾧ διεπλάσσετο εἴδωλα. καὶ βόλος φαῦλος κυβευτικὸς αἴγλη ἐκαλεῖτο. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ σελήνη καὶ τοῦ ζυγοῦ τὸ περίμεσον. καὶ παιδιά τις ἐκαλεῖτο αἴγλη. καὶ ὁ Ἀσκληπιός. καὶ χλιδὼν δέ τις οὕτως ἐκαλεῖτο. ἔνιοι δέ φασι σημαίνειν καὶ τὸν περιπόδιον κόσμον ἢ τὸν ἀμφιδέα, ἢ ἁπλῶς ψέλλιον. σημαίνει δὲ καὶ τὴν πέδην (ἡ αἴγλη add. Synag. B), ὡς παρ' Ἐπιχάρμῳ (fr. 17) ("aiglê: a shining, ray of light ("a shining, ray of light" omitted by Synag. B), light, daylight. The offering taken to the people of Delphi on account of the flood was also called an aiglê. Also a type of cake into which likenesses were worked. A bad throw of the dice was also called an aiglê. So too the moon and the central part of a yoke. In addition, a game of some sort is called an aiglê. Also Asclepius. Also a type of bracelet was referred to thus. And some authorities say that it also denotes a bit of jewelry that goes around the foot or an anklet. Or simply an ankle-bracelet. But it ("the word aiglê" Synag. B) also denotes a fetter, as in Epicharmus (fr. 17)"), from which the reference to Cratinus is however missing. The basic source for the note must in any case be the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ′. Eustathius (p. 823.25 = III.127.10–11) traces the claim that αἴγλη οὐ μόνον ἡ λαμπηδών, ἀλλὰ καὶ ποπάνου εἶδος, … καὶ θυσία τις πεμπομένη εἰς Δελφοὺς καὶ κυβευτικὸς βόλος to the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (α 41), whence presumably most of what was in Σ′, but also notes (p. 823.27 = III.127.12) that the reference to an αἴγλη as a bad throw of the dice was from a different authority, who must then be Aelius Dionysius (cf. Erbse 1950. 18–22). The reference to the moon presumably means "the [light of the] moon"[161] and is to be connected with Od. 4.45 ὥς τε γὰρ ἠελίου αἴγλη πέλεν ἠὲ σελήνης ("for just like that of the sun or the moon was the aiglê"; in reference to the radiance of Menelaos' palace; = 7.84, of Alcinoos' palace), where a scholion glosses αἴγλη as λαμπηδών (thus also Σ^{G^2HMaPV} Od. 6.45). According to $\Sigma^{VE\Theta BarbRsV57}$ Ar. Pl. 701, citing Hermipp. iamb. fr. 1, Asclepius' youngest child was named Aiglê, which is perhaps to be connected with the claim that this was among the god's own names.

[160] A personal name at Str. 11.529 as emended by Meineke (Ἀδὼρ codd.).

Other traces of the same original note appear to be preserved at

- Poll. 2.63, 3.72 and 4.156 (αἴγλη included in lists of words meaning "light, shining" and the like); 5.99 (αἴγλη in a list of words for ankle-bracelets)
- Hsch. α 1729 αἴγλας· ἀμφιδέας, καὶ ψέλια τὰ περὶ τὴν ὕνιν τοῦ ἀρότρου ("aiglai (acc.): bracelets, and the rings around the blade of a plow"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus)
- Hsch. α 1730 αἴγλη· χλιδών, Σοφοκλῆς Τηρεῖ (fr. 537). [χιτών] καὶ πέδη παρὰ Ἐπιχάρμῳ ἐν Βάκχαις (fr. 17) ("aiglê: a bracelet, Sophocles in Tereus (fr. 537); [a cloak] and fetters in Epicharmus in Bacchai (fr. 17)"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus)

---

[161] LSJ s. v. I.1 offers as its initial gloss "the light of the sun or moon, Od. 4.45, (etc.)". But the word simply means "splendor, gleam" (thus Montanari s. v., which unfortunately goes on to miss all the other meanings recorded by Pausanias, which were dumped untranslated and unsorted into a catch-all note in the LSJ Supplement = s. v. III).

- Hsch. α 1731 αἴγλαις· λαμπηδόσι, λαμπρότησιν ("aiglai (dat.): shinings, brightnesses")
- Hsch. α 1732 αἴγλη· λαμπηδών, αὐγή, φῶς, λαμπρότης· ἔστι δὲ καὶ βόλος φαῦλος κυβευτικός ("aiglê: shining, ray of light, daylight, brightness. It is also a bad throw of the dice"; traced by Latte to the Homeric scholia and Diogenianus).

None of this tells us where the Suda got its reference to Cratinus or how he is supposed to have used αἴγλη. The Suda's Leagoras is otherwise unknown.

Interpretation Whether two separate words, αἴγλη, "light", and αἴγλη, "bracelet", have been confused in the lexicographic tradition, or whether the second sense is an extension of the first, is unclear; there is no etymology. αἴγλη is in any case otherwise confined to epic poetry (e. g. Il. 2.458; hAp. 302), epinician (e. g. Pi. O. 13.36; Bacch. 13.140) and tragedy (e. g. S. OT 207 (lyric); E. Supp. 990 (lyric); Tr. 321 (lyric)). The only attested cognate in comedy is the over-the-top dithyrambic στρέπταιγλος at Ar. Nu. 335.

fr. 406 K.–A. (378 K.)

Eust. p. 1484.28–9 = i.149.14–16
α ἰ γ υ π τ ι ά ζ ε ι ν ... τὸ πανουργεῖν καὶ κακοτροπεύεσθαι, ὡς ὁ κωμικός, φασι, Κρατῖνος δηλοῖ (codd. : φησὶ Κρατῖνος Δηλίασιν Kock)

a i g y p t i a z e i n ("to act like an Egyptian") ... means to behave badly (panourgein) and deal perversely (kakotropeuesthai), as the comic poet Cratinus, they say, makes clear (codd. : "says Cratinus in Dêliades" Kock)

Discussion Sofia 2016. 86–8

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Dêliades by Kock on the basis of his emendation of the text of Eustathius.

Citation context Phot. α 518 = Suda αι 75 = Synag. B α 494 = Et.Gen. B αἰγυπτιάζειν· τὸ πανουργεῖν καὶ κακοτροπεύεσθαι ("aigyptiazein: to behave badly and deal perversely"; from the common source generally referred to as Σ′) is an abbreviated version of the same note, as most likely is Hsch. α 1744 αἰγυπτιάζων· κακοτροπευόμενος ("acting like an Egyptian: dealing perversely"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus) as well. Erbse assigns the material to Ael. Dion. (α 49), who is presumably the source of Eust. p. 1494.10 = i.162.21–2 αἰγυπτιάζειν· τὸ πανουργεύεσθαι.

Interpretation αἰγυπτιάζω ("act like an Egyptian"; first attested here) refers to the Egyptian reputation for trickery and cleverness (A. fr. 373; Hyp. 3.3 with Whitehead 2000 ad loc.; Theoc. 15.48 with Gow 1952 ad loc.); cf. Ar. Th. 920–2, where Critylla connects her sense that Euripides and Inlaw are πανοῦργοι with the fact that they are "Egyptianizing"; St.Byz. α 112 αἰγυπτιάζειν τὸ πανοῦργα καὶ δόλια καὶ ὕπουλα πράττειν ("to act like an Egyptian is to perform wicked, deceitful and underhanded actions"); Taillardat 1965 § 409. For similar verbs, cf. Eust. p. 741.21–5 = II.677.14–16 εἰσὶ βλασφημίαι καὶ ἀπὸ ἐθνῶν καὶ πόλεων καὶ δήμων πολλαὶ ῥηματικῶς πεποιημέναι· ἐθνῶν μέν, οἷον κιλικίζειν καὶ αἰγυπτιάζειν τὸ πονηρεύεσθαι, καὶ κρητίζειν τὸ ψεύδεσθαι, ἐκ πόλεων δέ, οἷον λεσβιάζειν τὸ αἰσχροποιεῖν ("There are many insulting verbs derived from the names of ethnic groups, cities and peoples: from ethnic groups, e. g. kilikizein ('to act like a Cilician') and aigyptiazein ('to act like an Egyptian'), meaning 'to act like a villain', and krêtizein ('to act like a Cretan'), meaning 'to tell lies'; from cities, e. g. lesbiazein ('to act like someone from Lesbos'), meaning 'to act shamefully'[162]"; traced to Suet. περὶ Βλασφ. 13 by Taillardat); δωριάζω, "act like a Dorian", i. e. "go around with very little clothing on" (Anacr. PMG 399); κορινθιάζομαι, "act like a Corinthian", i. e. "have sex with prostitutes" or "pimp" (Ar. fr. 370); λακεδαιμονιάζω and λακωνίζω, "act like a Spartan" (Ar. frr. 97; 358; Eup. fr. 385.1 with Olson 2014 ad loc.); λυδίζω, "act like a Lydian" (Ar. Eq. 523; Hippon. fr. 95.1); σικελίζω, "act like a Sicilian" (Epich. fr. 207); σιφνιάζω, "behave like a Siphnian", and χιάζω, "act like a Chian", i. e. "play elaborate music" (Ar. fr. 930).

fr. 407 K.–A. (379 K.)

Phot. α 634 = Synag. B α 638
αἰμύλος· ὁ ἔμπειρος. ἢ ἡδὺς ἐν τῷ ἀπατᾶν καὶ κόλαξ. Πλάτων (Lg. 823e) αἰμύλος ἔρως φησί· καὶ Σοφοκλῆς (fr. 816). Εὐριπίδης δὲ (fr. 1095) καὶ αἰμύλην εἶπε θηλυκῶς. Σοφοκλῆς δὲ (Ai. 389) καὶ αἰμυλώτατον. Κρατῖνος δὲ α ἰ μ υ λ ό φ ρ ω ν εἶπε, καὶ α ἰ - μ υ λ ο π λ ό κ ο ς ὁ αὐτός haimylos ("wily"): an experienced man. Or one who enjoys deceiving and a flatterer. Plato (Lg. 823e) says haimylos erôs ("wily love"); also Sophocles (fr. 816). And Euripides (fr. 1095) also uses haimylên in the feminine. And Sophocles (Ai. 389) also said haimylotaton ("wiliest"). But Cratinus said h a i m y l o p h r ô n, and the same man also (said) h a i m y l o p l o k o s[163]

---

[162] i. e. "to give blowjobs"; cf. Ar. V. 1346 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.
[163] Or "and the same person is haimyloplokos".

Text Compounds in which a verbal second constituent has a passive sense are generally proparoxytone (e. g. πυρίπλοκος, "woven with fire"; θεόπομπος, "heaven-sent"), while those in which it has an active sense are generally either paroxytone or oxytone (e. g. δολοπλόκος, "weaving wiles"; ψυχοπομπός, "soul-escorting"). Assuming that the second word means "weaving wiles" rather than "woven with wiles", therefore, it should be accented αἰμυλοπλόκος rather than αἰμυλόπλοκος. Cf. Gunkel 2014; Tribulato 2015. 27.

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′′′.

Interpretation αἰμυλόφρων ("wily minded") and αἰμυλοπλόκος ("weaving wiles") are high-style hapax legomena. αἰμύλος (conventionally translated "flattering, wheedling, wily"; etymology uncertain, but see Weiss 1998. 55–6) is almost entirely confined to elevated poetry and is used pejoratively of deceptively clever words (e. g. Od. 1.56, Hes. Th. 890, Op. 78, 789 and Thgn. 704 αἰμυλίοι λόγοι, "wily words"; Hes. Op. 373–4 γυνὴ … / αἰμύλα κωτίλλουσα, "a woman making wily chatter"; Pi. N. 8.33 αἰμύλοι μύθοι, "wily stories"; cf. [A.] PV 206 αἰμύλας … μηχανάς, "wily devices") and of those who produce them (Sol. fr. 11.7 ἔπη αἰμύλου ἀνδρός, "words of a wily man"; S. Ai. 388 τὸν αἰμυλώτατον (Aias' description of Odysseus; lyric); E. fr. 715.1 οὐκ ἆρ' Ὀδυσσεύς ἐστιν αἰμύλος μόνος, "Odysseus is not alone in being wily then"; [E.] Rh. 498–9 ἔστι δ' αἰμυλώτατον / κρότημ' Ὀδυσσεύς, "Odysseus is the cleverest bit of mischief"; in 4th-century prose at Pl. Phdr. 237b). In comedy, the adjective is attested only at Ar. Eq. 685–6 δόλοισι ποικίλοις / ῥήμασίν θ' αἰμύλοις ("elaborate tricks and wily words"; lyric); Lys. 1269–70 τᾶν αἰμυλᾶν ἀλωπέκων παυάίμεθα ("let us give up wily foxes", i. e. "wily foxiness"; an imitation of Doric lyric). The only other known compound in αἰμυλο- is αἰμυλομήτης, "of winning wiles" (hHerm. 13).

Compounds in -φρων are generally elevated vocabulary, e. g. ἀγανόφρων ("gentle-minded"; fr. 256.3 (lyric); Il. 20.467; Ar. Av. 1321 (lyric)); αἰδόφρων ("respectful"; S. OC 237 (lyric); E. Alc. 659); ἀλκίφρων ("valiant"; A. Pers. 92 (lyric)); ἀνδρόφρων ("with a man's mind"; S. fr. 943); γεραιόφρων ("with an old man's mind"; A. Supp. 361 (lyric)); βαθύφρων ("profound"; Sol. fr. 33.1; Pi. N. 7.1); βλοσυρόφρων ("savage-minded"; A. Supp. 833 (lyric)); γυναικόφρων ("with a woman's mind"; E. fr. 362.34); δολόφρων ("treacherous"; Asclep. XXXIX.4 = AP 7.145.4; of personified Deceit); θηλύφρων ("female minded"; Ar. Ec. 110); μελίφρων ("gentle-minded"; Il. 2.34); πανεύφρων (fr. 480 with n.); στερεόφρων ("stout-minded", i. e. "stout-hearted"; S. Ai. 926 (lyric)); many are hapax legomena and presumably coinages. Cf. the similarly elevated δολοπλόκος ("weaving wiles", typically of a god; e. g. Sapph. fr. 1.2; Thgn.

1386) and μυθοπλόκος ("weaving stories", of Eros; Sapph. fr. 188). For "weaving" used metaphorically to refer to the production of plots and the like, cf. Ar. V. 644–5; LSJ s. v. πλέκω II.1; Blümner 1891. 103–4; Taillardat 1965 §§ 391, 417; Austin–Olson 2004 on Ar. Th. 433–5.

fr. 408 K.–A.

Lex. cod. Vat. gr. 12 ap. Reitzenstein 1892/1893. 4 ἀ κ μ ή ν· ἐπίρρημα. Αἰσχύλος (fr. 339a) καὶ Μένανδρος (fr. 504) … Κρατῖνος μέντοι τῷ (τὸ cod.) ἀκμήν ἐπιρρηματικῶς μέν, ἀντὶ ⟨δὲ⟩ τοῦ ἀκμαίως ἐχρήσατο a k m ê n: an adverb. Aeschylus (fr. 339a) and Menander (fr. 504) … Cratinus did indeed use akmên adverbially, ⟨but⟩ in place of akmaiôs ("in a timely fashion")

Citation context The anonymous author of this Atticist note seems prepared to accept adverbial ἀκμήν as legitimate Attic usage, as in the Antiatticist (α 21) ἀκμήν· ἀντὶ τοῦ ἔτι. Ὑπερείδης ὑπὲρ Κρατίνου (fr. 116 Jensen)[164] ("akmên: in place of eti ('still'). Hyperides On Behalf of Cratinus (fr. 116 Jensen)"). That the speech by Hyperides cited by the Antiatticist was entitled On Behalf of Cratinus, however, combined with the fact that the anonymous Vatican author appears to be concerned to correct some other authority, raises the possibility that his "Cratinus" is actually Hyperides' defendant, and thus that this is not a fragment of the comic poet. Less understanding for the adverbial use of ἀκμήν is expressed by Moeris (α 149) ἀκμήν οὐδεὶς τῶν Ἀττικῶν ἀντὶ τοῦ ἔτι, ἢ μόνος Ξενοφῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀναβάσει (4.3.26)· Ἕλληνες δὲ χρῶνται ("No Attic-speaker [uses] akmên in place of ἔτι, except Xenophon alone in the Anabasis (4.3.26); but the Greeks generally use it"; cf. Thom. Mag. p. 137.6) and especially by Phrynichus at Ecl. 93 ἀκμὴν ἀντὶ τοῦ ἔτι· Ξενοφῶντα λέγουσιν ἅπαξ αὐτῷ κεχρῆσθαι (An. 4.3.26), σὺ δὲ φυλάττου χρῆσθαι, λέγε δὲ ἔτι ("akmên instead of eti ('still'): they say that Xenophon uses it once (An. 4.3.26), but you be on guard against using it, and say eti"). Another, much-abbreviated echo of the discussion is preserved at Hsch. α 2449 = Suda α 906 ἀκμήν· ἔτι ("akmên: eti ('still')").

Interpretation ἀκμήν is the accusative of ἀκμή, "point", esp. "point of time" and thus "right time" (e. g. fr. 208.3; Eub. fr. 6.6; E. HF 532; Ph. 1081), used adverbially in the sense "at this point (of time), still; at the right time".

---

[164] Preserved in a slightly less expansive form also at Phot. α 769 = Suda α 904 = Synag. B α 696 ~ Σ^Δ Luc. p. 214.19 ἀκμή· … λαμβάνεται δὲ καὶ ἀντὶ τοῦ ἔτι. οὕτως Ὑπερείδης (from the common source generally referred to as Σ′).

Although adverbial ἀκμήν is not widely attested in Attic, the combination of the citations from Aeschylus, Xenophon, Hyperides and Menander leaves little doubt that it was legitimate usage regardless of whether Cratinus employed it. For the formation, cf. ἀκήν, "silently" < ἀκή, "silence"; πρῴην, "recently" (e. g. Il. 24.500; Th. 3.113.4; Ar. Ach. 615) < πρώιος, "recent"; βύζην, "closely pressed" (e. g. Th. 4.8.7; Luc. Lex. 4.7; cf. βύζω, "be frequent"); ῥύδην, "abundantly" (e. g. fr. 487; Hippon. fr. 36.1); χύδην, "in floods" (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 179; Diph. fr. 42.3); δήν ("for a long time"), πάλιν ("again") and λίαν ("excessively") from unknown nouns; and see in general Schwyzer 1953 II.67–70, 413 (with more examples).

fr. 409 K.–A. (381 K.)

Eust. p. 1446.25–30 = i.98.36–9
(εὕστρα) κατὰ Παυσανίαν (ε 84) δὲ τὸ ἐκ σταχύων καυθέντων ἔδεσμα τοὺς ἀνθέρικας ἀποβαλόντων, ἤτοι ὁ περικεκαυμένος στάχυς. ἕτεροι δὲ ὅτι ἡ ὡρίμη κριθή, ἡ καὶ ἀ μ φ ί κ α υ σ τ ι ς παρὰ Αἰλίῳ Διονυσίῳ (α 108). κωμικοὶ δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ γυναικείου μορίου φασί. Κρατῖνος (lac. indicat Erbse) δὲ τὴν ὀσφὺν οὕτως ἔφη

(heustra) According to Pausanias (ε 84), the edible portion of roasted ears of grain after they lose their beards, in other words parched grain. Others say that it is ripe barley, which (is) also (called) a m p h i k a u s t i s in Aelius Dionysius (α *108). But comic poets also use the word in reference to female genitals. And Cratinus (lacuna marked by Erbse) referred thus to the rump

Hsch. κ 1923
καῦστις· ἡ ἔκφυσις τῶν σταχύων. πυροὶ ἀδρυνόμενοι, καὶ χόρτος. τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ καὶ ἀμφίκαυστις. καὶ ἐπώνυμον Δήμητρος. Κρατῖνος δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ μορίου ἔταξεν αὐτό. καλεῖται δὲ καὶ εὕστρα καὶ στρῶμα kaustis: the first growth of the ears of grain; mature wheat, also fodder. The same thing is also amphikaustis. Also an epithet of Demeter. But Cratinus uses it in reference to the genitals. And (kaustis) is also called heustra and strôma

Σ Ar. Eq. 1236[VEI-3] εὕστρα ἡ ὡρίμη κριθή. εἴρηται δὲ καὶ ἀμφίκαυστις παρὰ κωμικοῖς καὶ τραγικοῖς (adesp. tr. fr. 591a) ἀπὸ τοῦ περικεκαῦσθαι. οἱ δὲ τὴν πρώτην ἔκφυσιν τῶν πυρῶν, ἣν λήϊον προσαγορεύουσιν ὡραῖον, διὰ τὸ τοὺς πρωΐμους καέντων τῶν ἀχύρων ἐπιτηδείους εἶναι εἰς τροφήν heustra is ripe barley. And amphikaustis too is used in the comic and tragic (adesp. tr. fr. 591a) poets, from perikekausthai ("to have been parched"). But some authorities (say that the word means) the first growth of the wheat, which they refer to as the ripe crop, on account of the fact that the early (grains of wheat), when their chaff is burnt off, provide good nourishment

Et.Gud. α 715 ~ EM p. 90.33–7 ἀμφίκαυτις· ἡ † ὀρεινὴ † κριθή, ἣν ἡμεῖς εὔστραν καλοῦμεν· καὶ οὕτω μὲν οἱ τραγικοί (adesp. tr. fr. 591a), οἱ δὲ κωμικοὶ τῶν αἰδοίων ἀμφίκαυστις ἀπὸ τοῦ περικεκαῦσθαι πρώτην ἔκφυσιν τῶν πυρῶν. ἢ λήϊον (ἡλήϊον cod.) προσαγορεύουσιν ὡραῖον, διὰ τὸ τοὺς πρωΐμους καέντων τῶν ἀχύρων ἐπιτηδείους εἶναι εἰς τροφήν. οὕτως Μεθόδιος ~

ἀμφίκαυστις· ἡ † ὀρεινὴ † κριθή, ἣν ἡμεῖς εὔστραν καλοῦμεν. καὶ οὕτω μὲν οἱ τραγικοί (adesp. tr. fr. 591a), οἱ δὲ κωμικοὶ τὸ αἰδοῖον ἀμφίκαυτις, ἀπὸ τοῦ περικεκαῦσθαι. οἱ δὲ τὴν πρώτην ἔκφυσιν τῶν πυρῶν, ἣν λήϊον προσαγορεύουσιν ὡραῖον, διὰ τὸ τοὺς πρωΐμους καέντων τῶν ἀχύρων ἐπιτηδείους εἶναι εἰς τροφήν. Μεθόδιος. εἴρηται μεταφορικῶς καὶ ἡ μάχη amphikautis: † mountain † barley, which we call eustra; thus also the tragic poets (adesp. tr. fr. 591a), whereas the comic poets (speak of) the amphikaustis of the genitals, from the fact that the first growth of the wheat is parched. Or they refer thus to the ripe grain-crop, on account of the fact that the early (grains of wheat), when their chaff has been burnt off, provide good nourishment. Thus Methodius ~ amphikaustis: † mountain † barley, which we call eustra; thus also the tragic poets (adesp. tr. fr. 591a), whereas the comic poets use amphikautis to mean "private parts", from perikekausthai ("to have been parched"). Some authorities say that it is the first growth of the wheat, which they refer to as the ripe grain-crop, on account of the fact that the early (grains of wheat), when their chaff has been burnt off, provide good nourishment. Methodius. It is also used metaphorically to mean "battle"

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.186; Henderson 1991 § 43

Citation context A collection of references to lexical material that Eustathius (commenting on Od. 2.300 αἶγας ἀνιεμένους σιάλους θ' εὕοντας ἐν αὐλῇ, "flaying goats and singeing swine in the courtyard"; the behavior of the Suitors after the Assembly) traces to Aelius Dionysius. Closely related material, likely going back once again to Aelius Dionysius but making no reference to Cratinus or the comic poets generally, is preserved at

- Hsch. α 4033 ἀμφίκαυστις· ἡ πρώτη τῶν ἀσταχύων ἔκφυσις. λέγεται δὲ καὶ καῦστις ("amphikaustis: the first growth of the ears of grain. But it is also called kaustis")
- Phot. α 1332 ἀμφίκαυστις· ἡ πρώτη τῶν ἀσταχύων ἔκφυσις. καλεῖται δὲ καὶ καῦστις, καθ' ὅσον εἰώθασιν ἔτι χλωροὺς ὄντας τοὺς πρώτους στάχυς καίειν. οἱ δὲ ἁπλῶς τὸν στάχυν φασίν. Φρύνιχος (PS fr. 18) δὲ ἀμφίκαυστιν τὴν ὡραιοτάτην. οἱ δὲ τὴν ἐρυσίβην. οἱ δὲ ἀμφίκαυστιν τὴν ὥριμον κριθήν. παρὰ δὲ τοῖς τραγικοῖς (adesp. tr. fr. 591a) καῦστις εἴρηται μεταφορικῶς ἡ μάχη, παρά τισι δὲ ἡ ὀσφῦς καὶ τὰ ἰσχία, παρ' ἐνίοις δὲ ὁ ξηρὸς χόρτος. ἔνιοι δὲ τὸ αἰδοῖον ("amphikaustis: the first growth of the ears of grain. But it is also called kaustis, insofar as they are accustomed to parch the first ears of grain while they are still green. But some authorities say it is simply grain, whereas Phrynichus (PS fr. *18) (says) that amphikaustis is the ripest (grain). Some authorities say it is grain-rust, others that amphikaustis is ripe barley. In the tragedians (adesp. tr. fr. 591a), battle is referred to metaphorically as kaustis, whereas in certain authorities it is the rump or the flanks, while in some it is dry fodder. And some (use it of) the private parts").

Interpretation The word used by Cratinus appears to have been ἀμφικαῦστις (not attested outside of the lexicographic sources cited above), which is < ἀμφί ("on all sides") + καίω ("burn"). But the testimonia are sufficiently confused and contradictory to leave it unclear whether he used the word of the ὀσφύς[165] (in this context probably "ass"; cf. Ar. V. 739–40 πόρνην, ἥτις τὸ πέος τρίψει / καὶ τὴν ὀσφῦν, "a whore who will rub his penis and his ass") or of the female genitals. Meineke compared Ar. Pax 965, where κριθή ("barley") is used of the penis, and Cratinus' ἀμφικαῦστις might simply be a riddling way of referring to a colloquial sexual metaphor. Alternatively, the word might have more point if it alluded to genital depilation by means of fire, which appears to have been common practice among Greek women (cf. Austin–Olson 2004 on Ar. Th. 216–17, with further bibliography). For agricultural terms used as sexual euphemisms in comedy, see Henderson 1991 §§ 31–44, 122–39, 279–95 (although much of the specific argument is either inaccurate or exaggerated; § 43 specifically with reference to this fragment), and compare cross-culturally e.g. the Gilgamesh Epic VI.7–8 (the goddess Ishtar demands that Gilgamesh be her bridegroom and give her his "fruit"); Shakespeare, All's Well I.iii.130–1 "this thorn / Doth to our rose of beauty right belong".

fr. 410 K.–A. (382 K.)

Suda α 1947
ἄ ν α λ τ ο ν· Ὅμηρος (e.g. Od. 17.228) καὶ Κρατῖνος ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀπλήρωτον, Δείναρχος (fr. incert. sed. 9 Conomis) δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦ χωρὶς ἁλῶν.

a n a l t o n: Homer (e.g. Od. 17.228) and Cratinus in place of aplêrôton ("unfilled/unfillable"), and Dinarchus (fr. incert. sed. 9 Conomis) in place of "without salt (hals; pl.)"[166]

---

165 A sense of ἀμφικαῦστις attested to by Photius and Eustathius (both presumably getting the definition out of Aelius Dionysius), but ignored by LSJ and Montanari s. v.

166 Perhaps "without wit", which would be far and away the earliest use of plural "salt" in this sense, although note Ar. fr. 158 with Kaibel ap. K.–A. ad loc.; Macho 274–5 τὸ μὲν τάριχος εἶπε ταχέως ἀποφέρειν / πρὸς τοὺς σπανίζειν ὁμολογουμένους ἁλῶν

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.229; Nauck 1894. 66

Citation context Related material, much of it originating as glosses on Homer, is preserved at

- Apollon. p. 35.28 ἄναλτον ἀπλήρωτον ("analton: aplêrôton ('unfilled/unfillable')"; in a Homeric lexicon, followed by a quotation of Od. 17.228 βούλεται αἰτίζων βόσκειν ἣν γαστέρ' ἄναλτον, "he wants to feed his insatiable stomach by begging"; said of the disguised Odysseus by the goatherd Melanthios)
- Hsch. α 4421 ἄναλτον· ἀναυξές, τουτέστιν ἱκανόν. ἢ ἀπλήρωτον. παρὰ τὴν ἄλσιν ("analton: not growing, i. e. sufficient. Or aplêrôton ('unfilled/unfillable'). From alsis ('growth')")
- Phot. α 1542 ἄναλτος· ἀπλήρωτος, παρὰ τὴν ἄλσιν (scripsimus : ἅλσιν codd.) καὶ τὴν ἐκ τῆς αὐξήσεως τελειότητα, παρ' ὃ καὶ ἄλση τὰ κατάφυτα χωρία· πλήρωσις γάρ τις ἡ θεραπεία τοῦ πεπονθότος καὶ λείποντος, ὅθεν καὶ τὸ θεραπεύεσθαι ἀλθέσθαι (scripsimus : ἄλθεσθαι codd.) λέγουσιν ("analtos: aplêrôtos ('unfilled/unfillable'), from alsis ('growth', our emendation : halsis ('leap') manuscripts) and the ultimate extent of increase, just as alsê ('groves') means places overgrown with trees; because plêrôsis is a sort of therapy for someone who is suffering or in need, whence also they say althesthai ('to get well') to mean therapeuesthai ('to be tended to')")
- Eust. p. 1840.23–4 = ii.143.9–11 γαστὴρ δὲ ἄναλτος ἡ ἀπλήρωτος καὶ μηδέ ποτε ἅλις ἔχουσα, ἢ ἀεὶ ἐν ταπεινώσει οὖσα καὶ μὴ ἀλδαινομένη, ὅ ἐστιν αὐξομένη ἐν τῷ κορέννυσθαι ("an analtos stomach is one that is unfilled/unfillable and never has enough, or that is always getting smaller and not growing, i. e. that increases in (its desire for) being glutted")
- Et.Gen. AB α 770 ἄναλτος· ἀηδής· ἀπὸ τῶν ὄψων τῶν μὴ ἐχόντων ἅλας καὶ ἀηδῶν ὄντων· σημαίνει δὲ καὶ τὸν ἀχρεῖον. ἢ ἀναυξὴς καὶ ἀτελής· παρὰ τὸ † ἄλλω[167] †, τὸ αὐξάνω, ὅθεν καὶ ἄλσος, τὸ εὐαυξὲς χωρίον. ἢ ὁ

(Gnathaena, embarrassed by the comic poet Diphilus' gifts, "said to quickly take the saltfish off to those who were generally agreed to be lacking in salt"), which might be a witticism ("those who lack wit"). To Plu. Mor. 854c, cited by LSJ s. v. IV (echoed at Montanari s. v.) as the first certain example of this use of the word, add Ath. 9.366b ἀνηδύντων δὲ ἁλῶν πλήρεις οἱ κυνικοί ("the Cynics are full of unseasoned salt", i. e. of tastelessly cutting remarks).

167 Perhaps a corrupted form of ἀλδαίνω ("make to grow, nourish"; cf. Eustathius) or (tentatively) an otherwise unattested verb formed from the same root as ἄναλτος and identical with Proto-Germanic aljan-* "nourish", which Kroonen 2013 s. v. suggests might be < $h_2$el-yo-*, although he concedes that the evidence from Germanic alone is too scanty to reconstruct the form.

ἀπλήρωτος καὶ ἀκόρεστος … παρὰ τὸ ἅλις, τὸ σημαῖνον τὸ δαψιλὲς καὶ ἱκανῶς, γίνεται ἄλος καὶ κατὰ στέρησιν ἄναλος καὶ πλεονασμῷ τοῦ τ ἄναλτος ("analtos: unpleasant; from food that lacks salt and is unpleasant: it signifies someone useless. Or not growing and incomplete; from † allô, to increase, whence also alsos ('grove'), a well-grown place. Or an individual who is unfilled/unfillable and insatiate … From halis ('sufficiently'), which means 'abundant' and 'sufficiently', comes halos ('salt' (gen. sing.)) and via negation analos ('unsalted') and, with a superfluous tau, analtos")

– Σ[VBQVind.133] Od. 17.228 (ἄναλτον) ἀπλήρωτον.[V] ἀκόρεστον, παρὰ τὸ μηδέποτε ἅλις ἔχειν. ὁ δὲ Ἡρωδιανὸς (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 160.29–30) τὴν γαστέρα ἀναύξητον, ἄναλδήν (scripsimus : ἄναλδόν codd.) τινα οὖσαν, τὴν ἀεὶ ξηρὰν καὶ ταπεινήν[BQVind.133] ("(analton): aplêrôton ('insatiable').[V] Unsatisfiable, from never having enough (halis). But Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 160.29–30) calls the stomach 'unaugmented', since it is something that is feeble (analdês), which is always withered and mean"[BQVind.133])

Interpretation ἄναλτος is otherwise attested only in the Odyssey (17.228; 18.114, 364), to which Cratinus may thus have been alluding, and in Crates Com. fr. 47 ἄναλτος χύτρα (which Nauck argued was probably the same fragment, Cratinus and Crates having been confused at some point in the lexicographic tradition). The adjective is related to ἀλδαίνω and Lat. alere (both "nourish"), and perhaps to ἀλθαίνω ("get well"), as Photius suggests, and νεᾱλής ("not tired"); cf. Beekes 2010 s. vv.

fr. 411 K.–A. (383 K.)

Hsch. α 4902
ἀ ν ε ξ ι κ ώ μ η· ἧς οὐκ ⟨ἂν⟩ (add. Bergk) ἀνάσχοιτο ὅλη κώμη. παρὰ Κρατίνῳ a n e x i k ô m ê: a woman whom an entire village could not endure. In Cratinus Meter The word as transmitted scans ⏑–⏑–– and is compatible with iambic trimeter.

Discussion Lobeck 1837. 464 n. 13; Bergk 1838. 255; Kock 1880 I.119; Bonanno 1972. 156

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note. ἀνέχω is attested occasionally with a genitive (LSJ s. v. C.II.2). It is nonetheless difficult to put much confidence in the text, which has been epitomized and from which one word (supplied by Bergk) appears to be missing in any case. Given all of that, it is tempting to think either that an accusative has fallen out of the text or been mistakenly removed by the epitomator ("a woman whose ⟨ … ⟩ an entire village could not endure"), or that ἧς should be corrected to ἥν.

Interpretation Hesychius—patently guessing—takes ἀνεξικώμη (a hapax) to be a compound of ἀνέχω ("support, endure") + κώμη ("village"), but treats ἀν- as simultaneously (1) a privative (οὐκ) and (2) a prepositional (ἀνά-) prefix, as if the word were ἀνανεξικώμη. Lobeck accordingly suggested that Cratinus actually meant "a whore who supports an entire village" (πόρνη ἡ ὅλην κώμην ἀνέχουσα).[168] [Arist.] Po. 1448ᵃ34–6 identifies κώμη as Doric rather than Attic vocabulary (although note e. g. Pherecr. fr. 10.4),[169] so perhaps the second part of the compound is instead < κῶμος, thus "she who/that which (fem.) puts up with a revel".[170] Compound adjectives normally have only two terminations (e. g. Pi. O. 3.5–6 φωνὰν … / ἀγλαόκωμον), but cf. Ar. Eq. 1177 ἡ Φοβεσιστράτη [sc. Ἀθήνη] ("[Athena] who terrifies the army"); S. Ai. 172 with Gray 1851 ad loc.; E. Med. 826 with Porson 1820 ad loc. (his line 822). Compounds in ἀνεξι- are otherwise restricted to the Roman period. On verb-initial compounds generally, see fr. 445 Text; Knecht 1946; Tribulato 2015 (who misses compounds in ἀνεξι-).

fr. 412 (28 Dem.)

Phot. α 2031
ἄνομον κατηγορίαν· Λυσίας (fr. 468) εἴρηκεν, ἀ ν ο μ ί α δὲ Κρατῖνος, ἀνόμως δὲ Φιλύλλιος (fr. 28), ἀνόμημα δὲ Λυσίας (fr. 467)

anomon katêgorian ("a lawless accusation"): Lysias (fr. 468) uses the term, while Cratinus (uses) a n o m i a ("lawlessness"), Philyllius (fr. 28) anomôs ("lawlessly"), and Lysias (fr. 467) anomêma ("lawless act")

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note collecting words in ἀνομ-, probably drawn from an Atticist source.

---

168 LSJ s. v. bowlderizes Lobeck's suggestion by omitting the first word. Montanari s. v. offers "woman who could take on a whole village", which inter alia ignores οὐκ.

169 Hsch. γ 248 γεγωνοκώμη· ἡ μέγα κεκραγυῖα ("gegônokômê: a woman who shouts loudly", i. e. "loud enough for the entire village to hear") was treated by Kock as adesp. com. fr. 1324, but is rejected by Kassel–Austin, who identify it as adesp. iamb. fr. 29 Diehl (not included in West's Iambi et Elegi Graeci).

170 cf. Ar. Ra. 218 κραιπαλόκωμος.

Interpretation ἀνομία ("lawlessness") is common in prose (e. g. Hdt. 1.96.2; Th. 2.53.1; Isoc. 4.114; Pl. R. 496d; X. Mem. 1.2.24) and is found elsewhere in poetry at E. HF 757 (lyric), 778 (lyric); IT 275; Ion 443; IA 1095 (lyric); Crit. TrGF 43 F 19.40. The cognate adverb ἀνόμως shows a similar distribution (in prose at e. g. Th. 4.92.7; Lys. 3.17; in tragedy at E. Med. 1000 (lyric)). Contrast ἀνόμημα, which is an unremarkable formation, but is nonetheless attested nowhere else before the Hellenistic period. Cratinus must thus have been cited in connection with ἀνομία simply as an example of a "good Attic author" who used the word.

fr. 413 K.–A. (385 K.)

Phot. α 2035 = Suda α 2563 = Synag. B α 1450
ἄ ν ο ρ γ ο ι· ἀντὶ τοῦ ἄνευ ὀργῆς. Κρατῖνος (sic Phot.[b] Suda : Κράτης Synag. B : om. Phot.[z]) a n o r g o i ("angerless"; nom. pl.): in place of aneu orgês ("without anger"). Cratinus (thus Phot.[b] Suda : "Crates" Synag. B : name omitted in Phot.[z])

Citation context From the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′ and taken by de Borries, comparing PS p. 2.11 ἄνοργοι· ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ ἀόργητοι ("anorgoi: it is the same as aorgêtoi"), to be drawing on the Atticist lexicographer Phrynichus (fr. 203). Related material is preserved at

- Moer. α 21 ἄνοργοι Ἀττικοί· ἀόργητοι Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (use) anorgoi; Greeks generally (use) aorgêtoi")
- Thom. Mag. p. 11.14 ἄνοργος, οὐκ ἀνόργητος ("anorgos, not anorgêtos").

As often (cf. frr. 335; 414; 424; 446; 472), the witnesses—patently dealing with an exemplar reading simply Κρα$^{\tau}$ vel sim. and expanding the abbreviation ad libitum—are divided between assigning the fragment to Cratinus (Phot.[b] Suda) or Crates (Synag. B; notice omitted in Phot.[z]). This might therefore better have been treated as a dubious fragment of Cratinus and/or also have been dubiously attributed to Crates.

Interpretation ἄνοργος ("not wrathful") is attested nowhere else. The alternative term ἀόργητος is first attested at Arist. EN 1108^{a}8 and is found several times in Lucian (Pisc. 34; Herm. 12), who seemingly regarded it as unproblematic, i. e. as acceptable Attic. Other compounds in -οργος or -οργής are rare and mostly restricted to elevated literature, e. g. δύσοργος ("quick to anger"; S. Ai. 1017; Tr. 1118; Ph. 377), περίοργος/περιοργής ("very angry"; A.

Ag. 216 (lyric); Th. 4.130.4), φιλοργής ("passionate"; Nic. Al. 175). For anger and control of it in classical Athens, see Harris 2001. 157–97, esp. 182, 193–4.

fr. 414 K.–A. (387 K.)

Phot. α 2231 = Suda α 2877 = Synag. B α 1594
ἀ π α λ λ ά ξ α ς· ἀντὶ τοῦ πείσας ἀποστῆναι. Κρατῖνος (sic Phot.^{z} Suda Synag. B : Κρα^{τ} Phot.^{b}) καὶ Δημοσθένης (24.37) καὶ ἄλλοι a p a l l a x a s: instead of peisas apostênai ("convincing to abandon"). Cratinus (thus Phot.^{z} Suda Synag. B : "Cra^{t}" Phot.^{b}) and Demosthenes (24.37) and others

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′. Κρα^{τ} in Phot.^{b} may well have been the reading in Σ′, which was expanded to Κρατῖνος in Photius, the Suda and Phot.^{z}, but which might also represent Κράτης; cf. fr. 413 Citation Context. This might therefore better have been treated as a dubious fragment of Cratinus and/or also have been dubiously attributed to Crates.

Interpretation ἀπαλλάσσω is normally "set free, deliver" someone (acc.) from something (gen.) (e. g. Ar. Ach. 201 πολέμου καὶ κακῶν ἀπαλλαγείς, "freed from war and troubles"; Pax 920 δεινῶν ἀπαλλάξας πόνων τὸν δημότην ὅμιλον, "after freeing the mass of demesmen from terrible troubles"; Anaxandr. fr. 81 κόρης ἀπαλλαττόμεθα ταμιείου πικροῦ, "we're free of the bitter storeroom girl"). But Demosthenes uses the verb in the sense "convince to abandon" a legal claim (LSJ s. v. A.I.3) at 24.37 ἂν ἀπαλλάξῃ τις τὸν ἐπιστάντα ("if someone convinces the prosecutor to step aside") and 53.11 ἐπειδὰν τοὺς ξένους ἀπαλλάξω ("when I get rid of the foreigners", i. e. "convince them to abandon their claim") (cf. [D.] 49.17), for which sense—ill-documented in LSJ and Montanari—compare Ar. Ec. 1046 τὴν γραῦν ἀπαλλάξασά μου ("convincing this old woman to leave me alone"); Pl. 316 τῶν σκωμμάτων ἀπαλλαγέντες ("after abandoning our jokes"); E. Cyc. 451 κώμου μὲν αὐτὸν τοῦδ' ἀπαλλάξαι ("to get him to give up this revel"); And. 1.122 ἀπαλλάξαι δὲ Κηφίσιον ("to call off Cephisius"); Th. 8.46.4 τοὺς Πελοποννησίους ἀπαλλάξαι ἐκ τῆς χώρας ("to get the Peloponnesians out of the country"); Isoc. 17.23 εἰ μή μ' ἀπαλλάξειεν οὗτος ("if he could not reach a settlement with me"); [D.] 49.17 ἀπαλλάξαι τὸν Φίλιππον ("to convince Philippos to drop his suit").

fr. 415 K.–A. (388 K.)

Phot. α 2525 = Synag. B α 1875
† ἀ π ο κ ρ ι π ά μ ε ν ο ς † (codd. : ἀποκρινάμενος Bergk : ἀποχρησάμενος Kaibel : ἀποκιρνάμενος Marzullo)· ἀποσεισάμενος (Phot. : ἀποσπεισάμενος Synag. B). οὕτως Κρατῖνος

† a p o k r i p a m e n o s † (codd. : "answering" Bergk : "using fully" Kaibel : "mixing up" Marzullo): shaking off (thus Photius : "pouring oneself a libation" vel sim. Synag. B). Thus Cratinus Discussion Bergk 1838. 258; Marzullo 1959. 153; Marzullo 1962. 551 n. 3; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text The paradosis ἀποκριπάμενος corresponds to no known verb; the witnesses offer different glosses, neither obviously satisfactory; and no easy solution presents itself. Bergk emended the lemma to ἀποκρινάμενος ("answering"), which is an easy change but makes little sense with either gloss. Marzullo's ἀποκιρνάμενος ("mixing up" vel sim., with the prefix meaning "to completion") assumes that the Synagoge's ἀποσπεισάμενος rather than Photius' ἀποσεισάμενος is correct, although the latter (in the dat. pl.) is also found in what may be a related note at Hsch. α 6810 (quoted in Citation context) and the compound is attested only in the late Roman period. Kaibel compared Hesychius' ἀποχρησαμένοις and suggested ἀποχρησάμενος. But the entry in Hesychius is itself difficult to understand, raising the possibility that it is similarly corrupt or (just as likely) merely represents a failed attempt to correct the more obviously problematic reading preserved in Phot. = Synag.

Citation context A lexicographic note drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ‴. What may be related material is preserved at

- Hsch. α 6407 † ἀποκρισάμενοι †· ἀπολ⟨ο⟩υσάμενοι, ἐπιπλυνάμενοι ("† apokrisamenoi (nom. pl.) †: washing oneself off, pouring washing water over oneself(?)"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus)
- Hsch. α 6810 ἀποχρησαμένοις· ἀποσεισαμένοις ("using fully (dat. pl.): shaking off"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).

fr. 416 K.–A.

Phot. α 2860 = Synag. B α 2149
ἀ ρ ρ ά β α κ α· τὴν ὀρχηστρίδα ἢ τὸν ὀρχηστὴν ἢ βλάσφημον. ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀρραβάσσειν, ὅ ἐστιν ὀρχεῖσθαι. οὕτως Κρατῖνος a r r a b a x (acc.): a dancing-girl or a dancer or slanderer; from arrabassein, which means "to dance". Thus Cratinus

Citation context Drawn from the common source of Photius and the Synagoge conventionally referred to as Σ‴, and traced to the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (α 156) at Eust. p. 1854.34–6 = ii.189.11–14 οὐκ ἂν δέ τις ἀπισχυρίσαιτο μὴ οὐκ εἶναι καὶ τὸν ἀρράβακα ἐθνικόν, ὅς ἐστι κατὰ τοὺς παλαιοὺς ὀρχηστὴς ἢ βλάσφημος. Παυσανίας δὲ καὶ ἐτυμολογίαν αὐτοῦ παραδιδοὺς γίνεσθαί φησιν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀρραβάσσειν, ὅ ἐστιν ὀρχεῖσθαι ("no one would deny that arrabax, which in ancient authors means 'dancer' or 'slanderer', is a dialect word. But when Pausanias gives its etymology, he says it comes from arrabassein, which means 'to dance'"). Another version of the same note, although without reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Hsch. α 7414 ἀρράβακα· ὀρχηστήν. ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀραβάσσειν, ὅ ἐστι ὀρχεῖσθαι. οἱ δὲ τὸν βλάσφημον ("arrabax (acc.): dancer, from arabassein, which means 'to dance'. But others say it means 'slanderer'").

Interpretation The etymology of ἀρράβαξ and ἀρραβάσσω (neither attested outside of lexicographic sources) is unknown, although they might be related to ῥαβάττω (Hsch. ρ 3 ῥαβάττειν· ἄνω καὶ κάτω βαδίζειν. τινὲς δὲ τύπτειν, καὶ ψόφον ποιεῖν καὶ ἀράσσειν τοῖς ποσί, καὶ ῥάσσειν, "rabattein: to walk upwards and downwards; but some authorities say (it means) to beat, and to make noise and pound with the feet, and to beat the ground"; = adesp. com. fr. dub. 535). Words in -αξ are often disparaging or dismissive in tone; cf. βάβαξ, "chatterer" (Archil. fr. 297); θαλάμαξ, "lower-bench rower" (Ar. Ra. 1074); μώμαξ, "fault-finder" (adesp. com. fr. 82); νέαξ, "youngster" (Nicopho fr. 18); πλούταξ (Eup. fr. 172.9; Men. fr. 351.10); στόμφαξ, "bombastic ranter" (Ar. Nu. 1367); φάσαξ, "denouncer, sycophant" (adesp. com. fr. 436); φέναξ, "cheat" (Ar. Ach. 89; Ra. 909); φόρταξ, "baggage bearer" (adesp. com. fr. 803); χάσκαξ, "pathic" (adesp. com. fr. *928); χλεύαξ, "jester" (adesp. com. fr. 812); ψίλαξ, "bald guy" (Ar. fr. 922), and from lexicographers and other late sources e. g. τρὺφαξ, "debauchee"; φλύαξ, "jester"; χαύναξ, "braggart, impostor"; ψόφαξ, "noisy guy". See in general van Leeuwen 1900 on Ar. Eq. 361; Chantraine 1933. 380–2.

Entertainment by ὀρχηστρίδες ("dancing girls") and the like was common at symposia (e. g. Crates Com. fr. 34; Metag. fr. 4; Ar. Ach. 1093; Pl. Prt. 347d; X. Smp. 2.1; see in general Olson–Sens 1999 on Matro frr. 1.121; 6.2). How ἀρράβαξ also came to mean "slanderous", i. e. "a slanderer", is unclear, but this is presumably an extended metaphorical sense of the word (e. g. someone who "tramples" another).

fr. 417 K.–A. (389 K.)

Phot. α 2881 = Synag. B α 2148
ἀρρενωποὺς καὶ ἀρρενωπάδας τοὺς γυννίδας (sic Cohn : τὰς γυναῖκας Phot. Synag. B) καλοῦσιν. Κρατῖνος (sic Phot.[mg] : Κρατῖνος om. Synag. B)

They call sissies (thus Cohn : "women" Phot. and Synag. B) arrenôpoi and arrenôpades. Cratinus (thus Phot. in margin : "Cratinus" omitted by Synag. B)

Eust. p. 1571.46 = i.264.45–6
ὁ παρὰ τῷ Κρατίνῳ ἀ ρ ρ ε ν ώ π α ς, τὰ μὲν ἄλλα γύννις ὤν, ἔχων δέ τι ἀνδρόμορφον. οἱ δὲ τοιοῦτοι καὶ ἀνδρόγυνοι λέγονται

Cratinus' a r r e n ô p a s, who (masc.) is a sissy in other respects, but has a somewhat masculine shape. Men of this type are also called "androgynous"

Citation context The note in Phot. = Synag. B is drawn from the common source conventionally referred to as Σ‴, which goes back to a lexicographer also used by Eustathius in a comment on the word μῆλοψ[171] ("apple-colored", i. e. "golden") at Od. 7.104 αἱ μὲν ἀλετρεύουσι μύλῃς ἔπι μήλοπα καρπόν ("some of whom (fem.) grind mêlops grain on millstones"). Note also Hsch. α 7429 ἀρρενωπάδες· ἀνδρόγυνοι ("arrenôpades: androgynous"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus). As Erbse saw, all this material probably goes back to the Attic lexicographer Pausanias (α 157*). Suda α 3822 is considerably more expansive: ἀρρενωπός, ὁ ἀνδρόγυνος, καὶ ὁ ἀνδρεῖος, ὁ στερρός. λέγουσι δ' οὕτω τὰ μὲν ἄλλα γύνιδας, ἔχοντας δέ τι ἀνδρόμορφον. Ἱππώναξ (fr. 161) δὲ ἡμίανδρον, τὸν οἷον ἡμιγύναικα. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἀπόκοπος, καὶ βάκηλος, καὶ ἀνδρόγυνος, καὶ γάλλος, καὶ γύννις, καὶ Ἄττις, καὶ εὐνουχώδης ("arrenôpos: an androgynous man, also a courageous man, a hard man. And they refer thus to those who are effeminates in other respects, but who have (masc.) a somewhat masculine shape. But Hipponax (fr. 161) says 'half-man', someone who is as it were a 'half-woman'. The terms 'castrated', 'pansy', 'androgynous', 'priest of Cybele', 'sissy', 'Attis' and 'eunuch-like' are also used").

[171] Misaccented in Montanari s. v. (μήλοψ), which follows LSJ but ignores the correction in the Supplement.

The material in the various lexicographers is sufficient to confirm that τὰς γυναῖκας in Phot. = Synag. B is wrong and that Cohn's τοὺς γυννίδας ought to be read, a common word having driven out a much rarer one.

Interpretation ἀρρενώπας ("a masculine-looking creature"[172] vel sim.) is < ἄρρην ("male") + ὤψ ("face") + -αδ-, a suffix already attested in Homer and used especially in technical and poetic language inter alia to form pejorative terms for women (e. g. κασαλβάς, "prostitute"; Ar. Ec. 1106) and terms for female religious devotees and goddesses (e. g. μαινάς, "maenad"), but cf. κελαινώπας θυμός, "black-faced spirit" (S. Ai. 955 (lyric)); μιγάς βαρβάρων στρατός, "a motley army of foreigners" (E. Ba. 1356); κηκὰς ἀλώπηξ, "mischievous fox" (Nic. Al. 185); λογάς, "hand-picked soldier". See in general Chantraine 1933. 349–64. At least as far as the lexicographers could tell (see also the material collected under Citation context), an ἀρρενώπας was not a "woman of masculine appearance" (thus Montanari s. v., citing this fragment and the entry in Hesychius, but neglecting the other evidence) but a particular type of effeminate man, one who presented physically as unambiguously male even if his behavior suggested otherwise.

fr. 418 K.–A. (389[b] K.)

Theodos. Περὶ κλίσεως τῶν εἰς ων βαρυτόνων (ed. Hilgard) p. 21.29
τὰ μετοχικὰ ὀνόματα τὴν τῶν μετοχῶν φυλάττει κλίσιν, εἰ μὴ καταλήξεως τοιαύτης τύχοι, ἥτις ἐν ὀνόματι ἄλλην ἠγάπησε κλίσιν. ἔστωσαν δὲ παραδείγματα τοῦ κανόνος ταῦτα· Φαέθων Φαέθοντος, Πυριφλεγέθων Πυριφλεγέθοντος. τὸ μέντοι Φέρων Φέρωνος κλιθέν, ὡς παρὰ Μυρτίλῳ (fr. 4)· ——. ἠκολούθησε δὲ τοῖς τοιούτοις κυρίοις, φημὶ δὴ τῷ Πέρων Πέρωνος· καὶ Ἀ ρ τ ύ ω ν Ἀρτύωνος κέκλιται παρὰ Κρατίνῳ, ἐπειδὴ τὰ εἰς ων ὑπὲρ δύο συλλαβὰς βαρύτονα τῷ υ παραληγόμενα οὐ κλίνονται διὰ τοῦ ντ, οἷον Ἠλεκτρύων Ἠλεκτρύωνος, Ἀμφιτρύων Ἀμφιτρύωνος

Names formed from participles preserve the declension of the participles, unless they belong to a class of word that prefers a different declension in a name. Let the following be examples of the norm: Phaethôn Phaethontos, Pyriphlegethôn Pyriphlegethontos. The declension Pherôn Pherônos, however, as in Myrtilus (fr. 4): ——; it followed proper names of this sort; I mean in fact Perôn Perônos. And the declension A r t y ô n Artyônos (is found) in Cratinus, since nouns with more than two syllables and a recessive accent that end in -ôn and are accented on the upsilon are not declined in -nt-, e. g. Êlektrôn Êlektryônos; Amphitryôn Amphitryônos

---

[172] But scarcely "manly" (Storey 2011. 432).

Citation context A discussion of the declension of participles used as proper names amid a larger discussion of the declension of words ending in -ων not accented on the final syllable.

Interpretation Ἀρτύων (probably < ἀρτύω, "prepare; season food"; e. g. fr. 336 γλαῦκον οὐ πρὸς παντὸς ⟨ἀνδρός⟩ ἐστιν ἀρτῦσαι καλῶς, "Not everyone can season a glaukos well"; S. fr. 1122 ἐγὼ μάγειρος ἀρτύσω σοφῶς, "I as cook will spice it wisely") is otherwise unattested and is likely a speaking name coined by Cratinus. If so, it is difficult to believe that it belonged to anyone other than a cook. Cf. on the one hand Πλαθάνη (literally "Bread-Pan"; the name of a slave-woman working in an inn at Ar. Ra. 549), and on the other hand the common slave-name Παρμένων (literally "who remains beside"; e. g. Ar. Ec. 868; Philem. fr. 45.1; Men. Sam. 302). For comic cooks, see fr. 341 nn.

Proper names of men in -ων are typically paroxytone (also e. g. Ἀγαμέμνων); cf. Chandler 1881. 173. Those with -ων- throughout have probably generalized the omega of the nominative singular (e. g. Ἀπόλλων, Ἀπόλλωνος); cf. Sihler 1995. 294. Occasionally there is variation between forms in -ονος and in -ωνος: e. g. Ἠλεκτρύωνος (e. g. E. Alc. 839; A.R. 1.748) versus Ἠλεκτρύονος (e. g. [Apollod.] Bib. 2.54).

fr. 419 K.–A. (15 Dem.)

Phot. α 3237
αὐτομάτως· Δημοσθένης, α ὐ τ ό ν ο μ ο ι· Κρατῖνος. καὶ Ξενοφῶν Λακώνων πολιτείᾳ (3.1)· αὐτονόμους ἀφιᾶσιν automatôs ("independently"): Demosthenes, a u t o n o m o i ("independent"): Cratinus. Also Xenophon in the Constitution of the Spartans (3.1): they let them govern themselves

Discussion Luppe 1967. 404–5

Text Demosthenes uses the adjective αὐτόνομος repeatedly (e. g. 1.23; 7.30), but αὐτομάτως appears nowhere in the speeches and fragments preserved for us. Luppe accordingly suggested that the note in Photius is in error and that what should be read is αὐτομάτως· Κρατῖνος, αὐτόνομοι· Δημοσθένης.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation αὐτόνομος (literally "under one's own laws"; late 5th-century vocabulary) is rare in poetry (elsewhere in the classical period only at S. Ant. 821) but very common in prose (e. g. Hdt. 1.96.1; Th. 1.113.4; X. HG 3.1.20; Isoc. 8.58; D. 1.23), often in a pregnant sense with ἀφίημι (e. g. Th. 1.139.1, 3; Isoc. 4.176; X. HG 3.2.12). The point of the citation is thus presumably not that Cratinus used the adjective in an exceptional way, but that the presence of it in his poetry, as well as in Xenophon, showed that it was legitimate Attic usage.

fr. 420 K.–A. (390 K.)

Hsch. α 8981
ἅ ψ ω· προσεγγίσω (Musurus : προσαγγιστω cod.). δήσω. Κρατῖνος

h a p s ô ("I will fasten"): I will bring near (Musurus : † prosaggistô † cod.). I will bind. Cratinus

Text *προσαγγίζω is not attested elsewhere (although the simplex ἀγγίζω does exist as a late variant of ἐγγίζω). Musurus in the editio princeps of Hesychius accordingly corrected the first gloss to προσεγγίσω, which is confirmed by the parallel material in the Et.Gud. and the EM; see Triantafyllidis s. v. ἐγγίζω.

Citation context Traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Additional reminiscences of the same original note can perhaps be detected at

- Et.Gud. α 181 ἅπτω· τὸ προσεγγίζω· οὗ ὁ μέλλων ἅψω ("haptô: prosengizô; the future of which is hapsô")
- EM p. 157.37–43 ἆσσον· τὸ ἐγγὺς καὶ πλησίον … παρὰ τὸ ἅπτω καὶ προσεγγίζω ("âsson ('nearer'): engys ('near') and plêsion ('nearby') … from haptô ('I fasten') and prosengizô ('I bring near')").

Interpretation ἅπτω ("fasten; touch"; cf. Latin aptus, "apt, fitted") is widely attested in poetry and prose, most often in the middle in the sense "lay hold of" (LSJ s. v. A.II), but occasionally in the active meaning "fasten (one thing to another), bind (together)" (LSJ s. v. A.I), which seems to have been how Cratinus used it. Elsewhere in 5th-century comedy, active forms of the verb are attested only in the sense "light, kindle" (LSJ s. v. B: e. g. Ar. Ach. 984; Nu. 18, 768).

fr. 421 K.–A. (391 K.)

Phot. β 16 ~ Suda β 18
β α δ ί ζ ο υ· ἀντὶ τοῦ βάδιζε. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

b a d i z o u ("keep walking!" (mid.)): instead of badize ("keep walking!" (act.)). Thus Cratinus Discussion Kock 1880 I.120; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context A lexicographic note from the common source of Photius and the Suda generally referred to as Σ′′.

Interpretation βαδίζω ("walk; go")[173] is common in comedy (in the imperative at e. g. fr. 45; Crates Com. fr. 16.9; Eup. fr. 299.2 with Olson 2016 ad loc.; Ar. Ach. 1086; Eq. 724; Nu. 860; V. 180; Lys. 243; Dionys. Com. fr. 3.20; Men. Dysc. 596; Epitr. 376; Peric. 982) and related genres (Euclides iamb. fr. 1.1; Hermipp. iamb. fr. 4.1), as well as in Attic prose (e. g. Lys. 1.16; Antipho 5.24; X. Mem. 2.1.11; Pl. Phdr. 227d). The verb is rare in elevated poetry (hHerm. 210, 310; S. OC 589; E. Ph. 544; Chaerem. TrGF 71 F 20; adesp. tr. fr. 177.1), however, and is absent from both Thucydides and Herodotus, marking it as colloquial Attic. Cf. fr. 422 with n. Middle present forms of βαδίζω are not otherwise attested, and Kock and Kaibel (comparing Ar. Pax 291, where Datis supposedly says χαίρομαι for the proper χαίρω) took this to be a solecism.

fr. 422 K.–A. (392 K.)

Poll. 3.92
βαδιστικὸς παρ' Ἀριστοφάνει (Ra. 128), παρὰ δὲ Κρατίνῳ βαδισματίας (sic C : βαδίσματι FS : βάδισμα A) badistikos ("suitable for walking", i. e. "good at walking") in Aristophanes (Ra. 128), and in Cratinus b a d i s m a t i a s

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.210

Text The common exemplar of the various manuscripts of Pollux must have offered the abbreviated reading βαδισμα$^{\text{τι()}}$ vel sim. This was then variously expanded by scribes, the C-scribe alone producing βαδισματίας, which appears to be the correct reading.

Citation context From a small section of words cognate with βαδίζω within a larger collection of words related to travel and motion.

Interpretation βαδισματίας ("who walks habitually" vel sim.; a hapax) is a nominalized adjective < βάδισμα ("gait"; e. g. X. Ap. 27; D. 37.55; picked up by Lucian as an Atticism at Herm. 18; Tim. 54) < βαδίζω ("go, walk"; e. g. fr. 421 with n.; Ar. Ach. 394 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; Ra. 23). For the colloquial suffix -ίας used to form words of this sort designating a person by a characteristic trait, often pejoratively, see fr. 496 n. For the formation specifically from a -μα noun, cf. ληματίας (Ar. Ra. 494) and φρονηματίας (e. g. X. Ages. 1.24), both cited by Kassel–Austin, and elsewhere in comedy πραγματίας ("tiresome"; adesp. com. fr. *642), σπερματίας ("full of seeds"; fr. 147.2), στιγματίας ("tattooed"; fr. 81; Ar. Lys. 331; Eup. frr. 172.14; 298.2; Cic. Off. 2.25; the title of a play by Naevius), τραυματίας ("wounded person"; the title of plays by Alexis and Antiphanes), φιλοπραγματίας (fr. 382) and ψευδοστιγματίας ("falsely tattooed"; the title of a play by Nicostr. Com.). Other such words from the classical period are mostly technical in nature, e. g. κυματίας ("wavy", i. e. "stormy, turbulent"; Hdt. 8.118.2); λευκοφλεγματίας ("with a leucophlematic temperament"; Hp. Epid. III 14 = 3.96.5 Littré), παλματίας ("accompanied by violent shocks"; Arist. Mu. 396ᵃ10), πλασματίας ("fabricated"; Arist. GA 734ᵃ33), φλεγματίας ("phlemy"; e. g. Hp. Aer. 24 = 2.88.3 Littré), φυματίας ("afflicted with tumors"; Hp. Art. 41 = 4.180.3 Littré), χασματίας ("which produces fissures"; Arist. Mu. 396ᵃ4).

---

[173] Wrongly described in Montanari s. v. as "very rare in poetry" (better "in elevated poetry").

fr. 423 K.–A. (393 K.)

$\Sigma^{RVE\Gamma}$ Ar. Av. 1536
Εὐφρόνιος (fr. 27 Strecker)· ὅτι Διὸς θυγάτηρ ἡ Βασίλεια (sic Σ^{R} : -εία $\Sigma^{VE\Gamma}$) καὶ δοκεῖ τὸ κατὰ τὴν ἀθανασίαν αὕτη οἰκονομεῖν. ἣν εὔχεται (Holwerda : ἔχει codd.) καὶ παρὰ Βακχυλίδῃ (fr. 41) ἡ Ἀθηνᾶ τῷ Τυδεῖ δώσουσα τὴν ἀθανασίαν. ἔστι δὲ καὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ ἡ Β α σ ί λ ε ι α (-εία codd.). ἔνιοι δὲ αὐτὴν Ἀθανασίαν καλοῦσι

Euphronius (fr. 27 Strecker): Basíleia ("Princess"; thus Σ^{R} : Basileía, "Sovereignty" $\Sigma^{VE\Gamma}$) is a daughter of Zeus, and she apparently manages whatever has to do with immortality. In Bacchylides as well (fr. 41) Athena prays for (thus Holwerda : "has" codd.) her when she intends to bestow immortality on Tydeus. And B a s í l e i a ("Princess" : Basileía, "Sovereignty" codd.) is also in Cratinus.[174] But some authorities call her Athanasia ("Immortality")

Text The final alpha is long in βασιλεία ("sovereignty"), but short in βασίλεια ("princess"). The latter is confirmed by the meter at Ar. Av. 1537 as the identity of the girl Peisetairos demands from Zeus and weds at the end of the play, which is also clearly how Euphronius understood the text, despite the manuscripts of Aristophanes, which have Βασιλεία at all but one point in this note.

[174] Storey 2011. 432 does not print the Greek but seemingly gets matters backward, giving Cratinus a word meaning "Royal Power".

Citation context A scholion on Ar. Av. 1536ff. The Alexandrian grammarian and poet Euphronius (3rd c. BCE; Aristophanes of Byzantium was his student) produced commentaries on Athenian comedy that were eventually absorbed into the work of Didymus, to whom—perhaps through Didymus' successor Symmachus—this note is presumably to be traced.

Interpretation βασίλεια ("queen, princess") is used as a generic honorific of goddesses (e. g. of the Graces at Pi. O. 14.3; of Artemis at Hdt. 4.33.5; of Peace at Ar. Pax 974; of Demeter at Ar. Ra. 383; of the Phrygian Great Mother at Men. Theophor. fr. dub. 6, 10 Sandbach = CGFPR 145.6, 10; cf. παμβασίλειαι, "entirely regal ones", of the Clouds at Ar. Nu. 357). Commentators ancient and modern have often assumed that the βασίλεια referred to in Birds must be either Athena or Hera, i. e. that Peisetairos demands either Zeus' wife or his virgin daughter (also the guardian goddess of the city of Athens). But this seems hybristic even for an Aristophanic hero, and the fact that Prometheus must explain who Basileia is suggests that she is a slightly less significant figure than this. See Dunbar 1995 on Av. 1531–6 and 1537. Euphronius, at any rate, appears to believe that what Peisetairos got from Zeus was actually the gift of immortal life in the guise of a woman, much as Heracles at the end of his labors was allowed to marry Zeus' daughter Hêbê ("[Eternal] Youth").

Tydeus, a hero from the generation before the Trojan War and the father of Diomedes, was one of the Seven against Thebes. According to Pherecyd. FGrH 3 F 97, Tydeus was wounded by his Theban adversary Melanippus, but was saved by Amphiaraos. After Amphiaraos (who hated Tydeus for making him part of the expedition) killed Melanippus, he threw his head to Tydeus, who in his anger broke the skull open and began to consume Melanippus' brains. At this moment Athena—Tydeus' consistent champion in his adventures up to this point—arrived, intending to make her favorite immortal (cf. Bacch. fr. 41). At the sight of Tydeus' ugly behavior, however, she changed her mind, and Tydeus responded by begging her to transfer her gift to his son Diomedes. See also [Apollod.] Bib. 3.76; Stat. Theb. 8.717–66; Beazley 1947; Gantz 1993. 510–18, esp. 518. Bernabé takes the incident to be drawn from the Thebais (fr. 9, p. 27 Bernabé).

fr. 424 K.–A. = Crates Com. fr. 71 Bonanno

Et.Gen. AB β 85 = EM p. 194.23
β έ θ ρ ο ν· βέρεθρον, καὶ κατὰ συγκοπὴν βέθρον. Κρατῖνος καὶ Εὐφορίων (fr. 148, p. 55 Powell). οὕτως Ἡρωδιανὸς περὶ Παθῶν

b e t h r o n: berethron ("pit"), and via syncopation bethron. Cratinus and Euphorion (fr. 148, p. 55 Powell). Thus Herodian On Modifications of Forms

Discussion Bonanno 1972. 172

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note traced back to Herodian's On Modifications of Forms; the fragment was not known to Lenz and is therefore not included in Grammatici Graeci. The Et.Gen. has Κρατῖνος, but EM^{DM} have the abbreviated κρα$^{\tau}$, which was expanded in printed editions of the text into Κράτης; see Alpers 1970. 145. Which interpretation of the evidence is correct is impossible to say, and this ought probably to have been treated as a dubious fragment of both Cratinus and Crates.

Interpretation βέθρον (a hapax) is identified by Herodian as a syncopated form of βέρεθρον, "pit" (e. g. Il. 8.14; Od. 12.94; [Archil.] fr. 328.13; first in prose in Theophrastus, and picked up as an epic rarity at Lyc. 1280; A.R. 2.642; 4.1698), a poetic variant of βάραθρον. In Athens, the βάραθρον was a ravine or pit into which individuals judged enemies of the people were sometimes thrown (Hdt. 7.133.1; X. HG 1.7.20; Pl. Grg. 516d), whether alive or dead is unclear; cf. Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 159.1 (quoted below); Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 172.16. In comedy, the word generally appears in exaggerated, stereotyped threats of violence and the like (e. g. Ar. Eq. 1362 ἄρας μετέωρον εἰς τὸ βάραθρον ἐμβαλῶ, "I'll lift him into the air and throw him in the Pit"; Nu. 1448–9 σεαυτὸν ἐμβαλεῖν εἰς τὸ βάραθρον, "Cast yourself into the Pit!"; Ra. 574 εἰς τὸ βάραθρον ἐμβάλοιμί σε, "I'd like to cast you into the Pit"; Alex. fr. 159.1 τοὺς ἁλιέας εἰς τὸ βάραθρον ἐμβαλῶ, "I'll throw the fishermen into the pit"; Men. Dysc. 394, 575 ἄπαγ' εἰς τὸ βάραθρον, "Go off to the pit!"). Such expressions are often phonetically reduced in colloquial speech (e. g. Engl. [God] blind me > blimey), and βέθρον perhaps results from this phenomenon, making this a rare trace of the Greek actually spoken by at least some Athenian subpopulations; cf. Amphis fr. 30.12–13, where rough local fish-vendors are presented as clipping their words.

fr. 425 K.–A. (394 K.)

Ath. 1.22c
ὀρχησταὶ δὲ ἔνδοξοι B o λ β ὸ ς μὲν παρὰ Κρατίνῳ καὶ Καλλίᾳ (fr. 30)

Famous dancers include B o l b o s, mentioned by Cratinus and Callias (fr. 30)

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.742; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context From a brief catalogue of well-known dancers offered in the course of a lengthy discussion of choral dance (from the portion of the Deipnosophists preserved only in the Epitome).

Interpretation The dancer Bolbos is Stephanis #531; that Callias also referred to him suggests that he belongs to the 440s BCE or so. Βολβός is not attested elsewhere as a personal name, and this is instead most likely a nickname ("nomen ioculare" Kaibel) that mockingly recalls either the favorite food of the individual in question (for the βολβός, "purse-tassel hyacinth bulb", e. g. Ar. Nu. 188; fr. 128.1; Alex. fr. 167.13 with Arnott 1996 ad loc.; Archestr. fr. 9.1 with Olson–Sens 2000 ad loc.; Casoria–Menale–Muoio–Botanico 1999) or some prominent feature of his anatomy (e. g. a large round nose or a massive lump on his forehead; cf. Lat. Cicero). For nicknames generally, cf. Anaxandr. fr. 35 with Millis 2015 ad loc. For individuals called after items of food, cf. Alex. frr. 102.2–4; 173; Aristopho fr. 5.2–3.

fr. 426 K.–A. (395 K.)

Hsch. β 1084
B ρ έ α· Κρατῖνος μέμνηται τῆς εἰς Βρέαν ἀποικίας. ἔστιν δὲ πόλις Θρᾳκίας, εἰς ἣν Ἀθηναῖοι ἀποικίαν ἐξέπεμπον

B r e a: Cratinus mentions the colony sent to Brea. This is a Thracian city, to which the Athenians sent a colony

Discussion Busolt 1897. 417 n. 1; Gomme 1945. 32 n. 1, 373–4; Jacoby 1952. 67 n. 52; Woodhead 1952. 60

Assignment to known plays Assigned to Thraittai by Busolt.

Citation context Traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Much of the note in Hesychius (but without the reference to Cratinus) is also preserved at St.Byz. β 166 Βρέα, πόλις ⟨Θρᾴκης⟩, εἰς ἣν ἀποικίαν ἐστείλαντο Ἀθηναῖοι. τὸ ἐθνικὸν ἔδει Βρεάτης. ἔστι δὲ Βρεαῖος παρὰ Θεοπόμπῳ εἰκοστῷ τρίτῳ (FGrH 115 F 145) ("Brea, a ⟨Thracian⟩ city, to which the Athenians sent a colony. Its ethnic should be Breatês, but is Breaios in Theopompus in Book 23 (FGrH 115 F 145)") and at Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 283.28 Βρέα πόλις Θρᾴκης, εἰς ἣν ἀποικίαν ἐστείλαντο Ἀθηναῖοι ("Brea, a Thracian city, to which the Athenians sent a colony").

Jacoby argued that the reference in Hesychius might actually be to the collection of Athenian decrees by the historian Craterus, an abbreviated Κρα$^{\tau}$ or the like having been mis-expanded by a scribe. The same might be true of fr. 429.

Interpretation For Brea, an Athenian colony whose foundation is conventionally placed ca. 446 BCE on the basis of letter-forms in the relevant inscriptions, see IG I^{3} 46 (= Meiggs–Lewis 49; a decree providing for the colony). Little is known about the Brea colony, including its precise location, although it has been associated with the settlers dispatched by Pericles to Thrace to settle Bisaltia (Plu. Per. 2.5), which lay west of the River Strymon (Hdt. 7.115.1). Brea has also been situated in the Chalcidice, between Therme and Strepsa, based on Bergk's emendation of the paradosis Βέροιαν at Th. 1.61.4 to Βρέαν. See in general Woodhead 1952 (arguing in favor of Bergk's emendation of Thucydides); Mattingly 1966 (redating the Brea decree to 426/5 BCE); Asheri 1969 (concentrating on the reference in Theopompus, and suggesting that it supports placing Brea in Chalcidice); Isaac 1986. 51–2; Hansen 1999 (arguing that Brea is actually identical with the better-known colony at Amphipolis). The name itself may be Thracian; cf. Mesembria. For Athenian colonies in Cratinus' time, see fr. 429 n.

fr. 427 K.–A. (396 K.)

Phot. β 334 = Suda β 502
β ῶ σ ο ν· βόησον (Kuster : βοήθησον codd.). Κρατῖνος

b ô s o n: shout! (boêson) (Kuster : "lend aid!" codd.). Cratinus

Text The paradosis gloss βοήθησον is the aorist imperative of βοηθέω rather than of βοάω, and Kuster's correction is drawn from a closely related entry in Hesychius (for which, see Citation context).

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Theodoridis to the common source of Photius and the Suda generally referred to as Σ′′. Parallel material, although without the reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Hsch. β 1399 βῶσον· κάλεσον, βόησον ("bôson: call!, shout (boêson)!").

Interpretation ο + ᾱ/η generally remains uncontracted in Attic (in the verb in question here at e. g. Ar. Nu. 220 ἀναβόησον; Ec. 403 ἀναβοήσας; Epicr. fr. 10.30 ἐβόησαν; X. HG 4.2.22 ἀναβοῆσαι), but contracts to ω in Ionic (e. g. Il. 12.337 βώσαντι; Hippon. fr. 1 ἔβωσε; Hdt. 1.146.3 βῶσαι; 5.1.2 ἐπιβώσωνται), hence presumably the interest felt by the original author of this note in Cratinus' use of contracted βῶσον rather than uncontracted βοῆσον. A similar form appears at Ar. Pax 1155 βωσάτω, which lacks any other obvious stylistic coloring and where the poet's motivation may simply be the fact that the uncontracted form cannot be made to fit into the line. Cratinus' resort to the Ionic form is probably best explained as similarly a matter of metrical necessity; but this might instead be evidence for a dialect-speaker.

fr. 428 K.–A. (397 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 59.13–14
γ α σ τ ρ ο χ ά ρ υ β δ ι ς· ἐπὶ τῶν ⟨πάντα⟩ κατεσθιόντων (sic Borries : ⟨πάντ'⟩ ἐσθιόντων Bekker) Κρατῖνος εἶπεν

g a s t r o c h a r y b d i s: Cratinus used this in reference to those who devour ⟨everything⟩ ("everything" added by de Borries : "of those who eat ⟨everything⟩" Bekker)

Meter The word as transmitted scans —⏑⏑—⏑ and is compatible with iambic trimeter as well as e. g. dactylic hexameter.

Citation context An isolated entry in a 2nd-century CE guide to speaking "correct"—i. e. colloquial late 5th- and 4th-century Athenian—Greek.

Interpretation A hapax coinage recalling ποντοχάρυβδις ("sea-Charybdis"), an epithet of a glutton at Hippon. fr. 126.1 (mock-Homeric dactylic hexameter). Charybdis is properly an enormous whirlpool encountered by Odysseus near the end of his wanderings (Od. 12.104–7, 235–43, 430–8). For the figurative use of the word, cf. Pherecr. fr. 101 ἐκκαρυβδίσαι (~ "to drain dry", although the text is insecure); Ar. Eq. 248 Χάρυβδις ἁρπαγῆς ("a Charybdis of extortion"); adesp. com. fr. 629 μεθυσοχάρυβδις ("drunken-Charybdis", a word for a woman who drinks too much; also from Phrynichus); Anaxil. fr. 22.18–19 (a point of comparison for a greedy courtesan who swallows down sea-merchants, ships and all); Simon. PMG 522.1 (everything seemingly important "reaches a single, horrid Charbydis", i. e. is ultimately swallowed up by oblivion); Blümner 1891.

122–3; Taillardat 1965 § 724. No other γαστρο-compounds are attested in comedy, but cf. the similarly unflattering γάστρις ("glutton"; Ar. Av. 1604; Th. 816; Pl. Com. fr. 219), γάστρων ("pot-belly"; Ar. Ra. 200) and γαστρώδης ("pot-bellied"; Ar. Pl. 560). For another attack on a glutton (or alleged glutton), see fr. 62 (Lampon), and cf. frr. 349; 358; 499.

fr. 429 K.–A.

Phot. γ 99
γ ε ω ν ό μ α ς· τοὺς διανέμοντας τὴν γῆν ἐν ταῖς ἀποικίαις. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

g e ô n o m a i (acc.): the men who divide up the land in the colonies. Thus Cratinus

Citation context A lexicographic note tentatively traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus. Closely related material, but without the reference to Cratinus, is preserved at

- Phryn. PS p. 57.15–17 γεωνόμης καὶ γεωμέτρης· διαφέρει, ὅτι γεωνόμης μὲν ὁ διανέμων ἐν ταῖς ἀποικίαις ἑκάστῳ τὸν κλῆρον, γεωμέτρης δὲ ὁ μετρῶν τοὺς κλήρους ("geônomês and geômetrês: there is a difference, in that a geônomês is the man who distributes his parcel of land to each individual in the colonies, whereas a geômetrês is the man who measures out the parcels of land"; presumably the ultimate source of the notes in Photius and Hesychius)
- Hsch. γ 478 γεωνόμαι· οἱ ἐν ταῖς ἀποικίαις διαιτώμενοι κληροῦχοι καὶ νέμοντες τὴν γῆν ("geônomai: the cleruchs who govern in the colonies and distribute the land"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).

Interpretation See fr. 436 Citation context. γεωνόμης is not attested outside of the lexicographic notes quoted above, but would appear to be equivalent in sense to γεωνόμος at IG I³ 46.10–12 γεονόμος δὲ *h*ελέσθ[αι δέκα] | [ἄνδρας], ἕνα ἐχ φυλῆς· *h*οῦτοι δὲ νεμάντ[ον τὲν] | [γῆν] ("and let the geônomos choose ten men, one per tribe; and let these men distribute the land"; a decree from ca. 446 BCE establishing a colony at Brea in Thrace (for which, see fr. 426 n.)). Precisely as Phrynichus says, therefore, this is the magistrate given general supervisory authority over the land in a colony,[175] just as an ἀγορανόμος is charged with supervising a city's marketplace (e. g. Ar. Ach. 723 with Olson

[175] Montanari s. v., despite citing Phrynichus, thus gets the meaning of the word wrong (glossed "settler").

2002 ad loc.; V. 1407; X. Smp. 2.20), an ἀγρονόμος is charged with supervising its country districts (e. g. Pl. Lg. 760b; Arist. Pol. 1321^{b}23–30), an ἀστυνόμος is charged with supervising its streets and public buildings (e. g. Pl. Lg. 763c–d; [Arist.] Ath. 50.2 with Rhodes 1981 ad loc.), a γυναικονόμος is charged with supervising its women (e. g. Philoch. FGrH 328 F 65; Timocl. fr. 34.1–5), and a παιδονόμος is charged with supervising its boys, i. e. in Sparta its system of public education (X. Lac. 2.2).[176]

Greek colonization began in the 9th century BCE (two early Euboean colonies, at Al Mina in Syria and Pithekoussai in Italy, were settled by ca. 800 BCE), and by the 6th century colonies (ἀποικίαι) were scattered across much of the northern and western Mediterranean, as well as along the shores of the Black Sea. Colonies were politically independent of their mother-city, but retained special ties to it; often the constitution of the metropolis was adopted for the new state and the sacred hearth in the prytaneum was kindled with fire brought from there. See in general Graham 1964; Dougherty 1993; Boardman 1999; Wilson 2006. Athenian colonization, by contrast, began only in the late 6th century, and the settlements the city sent out were often properly cleruchies (κληρουχίαι, literally "portion-holdings", referring to the portion, κλῆρος, of land each settler was awarded; see in general Salomon 1997), whose inhabitants remained Athenian citizens and were thus still liable for military service and subject to certain taxes.[177] Athenian colonies/cleruchies in Cratinus' time included not only Brea but also e. g. Naxos, Andros and the Chersonese, all founded ca. 450 (Plu. Per. 11); Thurii, founded in 446/5 (D.S. 12.9–11; Plu. Per. 11.5); Aegina, founded in 431 (Th. 2.27.1; D.S. 12.44.1; Plu. Per. 34.2–3); Potidea, founded in 430/29 (Th. 2.70.4; D.S. 12.46.6–7); and Lesbos, founded in 427 (Th. 3.50.2). See in general Figuera 2008, esp. 435–62.

For the allotment of land in cleruchies, see Ar. Nu. 203, where Strepsiades assumes that scientific instruments for measuring land must naturally be connected with dividing up cleruchies; Av. 992–1020, where the famous geometer (literally "land-measurer") Meton (PA 10093; PAA 647810) appears with plans to lay out the new city of Cloudcuckooland; and cf. Eup. fr. 223.2 "Slip off to some colony!" with Olson 2016 ad loc.

---

[176] Fraenkel 1910 II.148 n. suggests that the form may have arisen by analogy with γεωμέτρης.

[177] Evidence of a clear distinction between apoikia and cleruchia is certain for the 4th century, but less so for the 5th; see Graham 1964. 167–89.

fr. 430 K.–A.

Phot. γ 150
γ λ υ κ ω ν ο χ ό ρ δ ο υ ς · τοὺς ἡδύνειν πειρωμένους ταῖς μελοποιίαις. οὕτω Κρατῖνος (supra lin.)

g l y k ô n o c h o r d o i (acc.): men who attempt to give pleasure with their music-making. Thus Cratinus ("Thus Cratinus" written above the line)

Meter The word as transmitted scans ⏑–⏑–– and is compatible with iambic trimeter.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation The second element of γλυκωνόχορδος (a hapax and doubtless a nonce-word) is < χορδή ("intestine", and thus "string" for a bow or musical instrument; e. g. Pherecr. fr. 155.16, 25). For -χορδος as the second constituent of compounds that typically denote an instrument by its number of strings, e. g. δίχορδος ("two-stringed"; Sopat. fr. 12.2), ἑπτάχορδος ("seven-stringed"; Ar. fr. 467), τρίχορδος ("three-stringed"; Anaxil. fr. 15.1). Photius appears to take the first element in the word from Cratinus to be γλυκύς and thus interprets the compound as meaning "who have pleasant strings" vel sim., i. e. "who produce pleasant music"; cf. Chionid. fr. 4.2 ταῦτ' οὐ μὰ Δία Γνήσιππος οὐδ' ὁ Κλεομένης / ἐν ἐννέ' ἂν χορδαῖς κατεγλυκάνατο ("not even Gnesippus, by Zeus, or even Cleomenes would have produced such sweetness with nine strings"). In fact, the first element is < γλύκων (literally "sweetie"; attested in the classical period at Ar. Ec. 985 and glossed ὁ εὐήθης. μωρός, ἔκλυτος, "someone simple, foolish, weak", at Phot. γ 151), seemingly making this a left-oriented endocentric compound with a substantival head. The only productive categories of left-oriented compounds in ancient Greek are (1) preposition-first compounds (e. g. ἔνδημος, "in-dwelling, resident") and (2) verb-first compounds (e. g. φερέοικος, "house-bearing"). There are also a few anomalous categories: (3) so-called "reverse bahuvrihis" such as θυμολέων ("lion-heart") and ὀνομάκλυτος ("having a famous name"), although these compounds are often equally explicable as right-oriented (e. g. θυμολέων, "a lion (in respect to) the heart") or as univerbations of phrases (e. g. ὀνομάκλυτος < ὄνομα κλυτός, "famous in respect to his name"; cf. δουρικλυτός, "famed for his spear", where the first constituent is clearly an old dative of δόρυ, "spear"); (4) compounds like those in ἀξιο- and ἰσο-, whose first constituent is an adjective that requires a complement to be semantically complete and is therefore akin to a preposition; (5) plant and animal names attested primarily in scientific texts (e. g. σύαγρος, "wild boar"; καρποβάλσαμον, "fruit of the balsam tree"). See in general Tribulato 2015. 103–22. γλυκωνόχορδος patently does not belong to types (1), (2), (4), or (5). If it belongs to type (3), the meaning ought—despite Photius—to be something like "sounding like a simpleton".

fr. 431 K-A. (398 K.)

Poll. 7.179
δακτυλιογλύφος· δακτυλιουργὸν αὐτὸν εἴρηκα Φερεκράτης (fr. 234), τὸ δὲ γ λ ύ φ ε ι ν Κρατῖνος, καῖ τὸ γλύμμα Εὔπολις (fr. 441)

daktylioglyphos ("gem-engraver"): Pherecrates (fr. 234) refers to him as a daktyliourgos ("ring-worker"), and Cratinus uses g l y p h e i n ("e n g r a v e"), while Eupolis uses glymma ("engraving") (fr. 441)

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.213

Citation context From a brief collection of words having to do with jewelry and jewelry-making. Poll. 7.108 contains similar material as part of a large collection of terms pertaining to metal and metallurgy, including a reference to Philyll. fr. 14 for the word δακτυλιουργός (cited at Poll. 7.179 as from Pherecrates).

Interpretation γλύφω ("engrave"; related to Lat. glūbere "peel" and Engl. cleave) is first attested in Herodotus,[178] where it is the activity of statue-makers (ἀγαλματοποιοί) as opposed to ζωγράφοι (painters), of whom γράφουσι is used (2.46.2), and is also applied to engraving seal-stones (7.69.1 τὰς σφρηγῖδας γλύφουσι); cf. Crates Com. fr. 8 καρδοπογλύφος ("carving kneading-troughs") with Bonanno 1972. 69–71 and Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 21; Ar. Nu. 879 ναῦς τ' ἔγλυφεν ("and he used to carve ships", sc. out of wood; offered as evidence of Pheidippides' supposed brilliance as a child); Pl. Hipp.Mi. 368c δακτυλίους γλύφειν ("to engrave rings"); Thphr. HP 5.3.7 ἀγάλματα γλύφουσιν ("they carve statues"). Pollux's implication would seem to be that Cratinus used the verb in reference to the cutting of gemstones, for which see Blümner 1884. 280–301; Boardman 2001. 379–82; Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 441.

[178] But note γλυφίς ("arrow-notch") already in Homer (Il. 4.122; Od. 21.419).

fr. 432 K.–A. (399 K.)

Poll. 2.188
γόνυ δὲ ἡ μετὰ τοὺς μηροὺς συγκαμπή, ἀφ᾽ οὗ καὶ τὸ γ ο ν α τ ί ζ ε ι ν παρὰ Κρατίνῳ τῷ κωμῳδοποιῷ

And the joint that comes after the thighs[179] is a gony ("knee"), whence also g o n a t i - z e i n in the comic poet Cratinus

Citation context From an extended collection of anatomical terms. Phryn. PS p. 56.5 γονατίζειν· τῷ γόνατι πλήττειν ("gonatizein: to strike with the knee") is likely drawn from the same source, which Hsch. μ 1109 μετοκλάζει· γονατίζει ("kneels: gonatizei") and Phot. π 431 = Suda π 688 παροκλάζων· γονατίζων ("kneeling: gonatizôn"; ~ Hsch. π 979) can be taken to suggest was part of an Atticist debate about whether the verb could be used thus or was properly restricted to the sense "go to one's knees, kneel".

Interpretation For γονατίζω in the sense "strike with the knee" (attested nowhere else except in the lexicographic glosses cited below), cf. ἀκρίζω ("go on tip-toe"; E. fr. 570); ἐξαγκωνίζω ("thrust one's elbows out"; Ar. Ec. 259); καταγλωττίζω ("French kiss"; e. g. Ar. Ach. 380); κονδυλίζω ("strike with the elbow"; Hyp. fr. 98); λακτίζω, "strike with the foot/heel" (e. g. Ar. Nu. 136); νωτίζω ("turn one's back"; E. Andr. 1141); ποδίζω (referring to a dance-step of some sort; fr. 234); πτερυγίζω ("flap one's wings"; Ar. Av. 795, 1466); ὀλεκρανίζω, "strike with the elbow" (adesp. com. fr. 763 with Phryn. PS p. 97.6–7). Contrast similar verbs in which the body-part is not moved but is instead the target of an assault, e. g. γαστρίζω ("strike in the stomach"; Ar. Eq. 273); ὀρχιπεδίζω ("seize by the testicles"; Ar. Av. 142); πυγίζω ("have anal sex with"; e. g. Ar. Th. 1120, 1123); ῥαχίζω ("cut the spine"; A. Pers. 426); and cf. English "knee" in the archaic sense "kneel" at e. g. Shakespeare, King Lear II.ii "I could as well be brought / To knee his throne and, squire-like, pension beg", and "head" in the sense "remove someone's head" at e. g. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure II.i.228 "If you head and hang all that offend that way".

γόνυ is < ǵenu*, "knee", whence also Lat. genu and Engl. knee. The ubiquitous secondary suffix -ιζω serves to create denominal verbs (i. e. those formed typically from nominal or adjectival stems) already in Homer (e. g. στεναχίζω, "groan"; πολεμίζω, "wage war"). See in general Casevitz 1991; Greppin 1997.

---

[179] Sc. as one moves down the leg from the hips.

fr. 433 K.–A. (CGFPR 237)

POxy. 2738 col. ii
πυρριχίζων, ἐν δὲ Αἰξὶν Εὐ-πόλ[ιδος] (fr. 18) τὸ μαλακὴν κε-λ]εύ[ειν] τὴν Ἀθηνᾶν ποεῖν. σκληρ]ῷς ποιοῦντο[ς] τοῦ ἀγροίκου τὸ σχῆμα τῆς Ἀθηνᾶς ὁ διδ[ά]σκαλος ἐκέλευσεν μαλακῶς αὐτὸ ποιεῖν. ὡς οὖν ὁ Ἀρ[ισ]τ[ο]φ[ά]νη[ς] τῶι Τριτογένεια μ̣ό̣ν̣ωι ἐπιθέτωι ἠρκέσθη καὶ ὁ Κρατ[ῖ]νος τῶι Γ ο ρ γ ο -
. ρ̣ α̣ κ ο ν . ο δ ο κ α . [ ] ἠρκέσθη τ[ὸ] αὐτὸ δηλοῦντ̣ι̣ πρᾶγμα ὅτι ἀποκλινω̣[..]ηι κεφαλῆ[ι τ̣ὸ̣ τ̣[ῆς] θε[ο]ῦ σχῆμα πο.[]..
λ̣ε̣φ̣ι̣[].[].ται: .μοι[ μ̣υ̣ν̣ο̣ν̣[
].εν[
].[

doing the pyrrhichê, and in Eupolis' Aiges (fr. 18) the command to make the Athena languid. When the rustic did the Athena-step awkwardly, his teacher ordered him to do it languidly. Just as, then, Aristophanes (Nu. 989) was satisfied with Tritogeneia on its own as an epithet, and Cratinus was satisfied with G o r g o [ ] r a k o n [ ] o d o k a [ ], which makes clear the same thing, namely that turning away . . . with the head the goddess' step

Discussion Lobel 1968 (editio princeps)

Citation context A fragment of a 2nd-century CE commentary on an unidentified comedy (thus Lobel). The reference to Eup. fr. 18 is apparently offered in support of a point—now lost—which the commentator has made involving a male figure doing a pyrrhic dance. What follows is intended to explain the use of "the Athena" to mean "the Athena-step": Aristophanes did the same with Tritogeneia (another epithet of the goddess) at Nu. 989, as did Cratinus with Gorgo[ ]rakon[ ]odoka[ ].

Interpretation Whether Eupolis' "Athena", Aristophanes' "Tritogeneia" and Cratinus' "Gorgo[d]rakon[t]odoka" (thus ed. pr.) are all the same dance is unclear. If so, they are presumably to be identified with the pyrrhic dance, which Athena was said to have executed after defeating the Giants (D.H. 7.72.7) and which was performed in Athens by choruses of armed men, beardless youths (ageneioi) and boys, leaping and waving shields about, in competitions at the Panathenaic festival (Lys. 21.1, 4; cf. Ar. Ra. 153; X. An. 6.1.12; Is. 5.36). For the pyrrhic dance, see also Ar. Av. 1169 πυρρίχην βλέπων ("looking a pyrrhic dance", i. e. "looking daggers"); E. Andr. 1135–41; Pl. Lg. 796b, 815a (claiming that the movements imitated the way missiles and blows from weapons were avoided); Ath. 14.630d, 631b–c, citing Aristox. fr. 108 Wehrli; Luc. D.Deor. 8; Downes 1904; Latte 1913. 32–40, 56–63; Poursat 1968. 566–83; Borthwick 1967; Borthwick 1969; Borthwick 1970. 318–30.

Cratinus' word—probably a coinage, given its extravagance—refers to the gorgon device Athena wore on her breastplate or shield (E. Ion 209–11; [E.] Rh. 306 with Liapis 2012 ad loc.; [Apollod.] Bib. 2.46), and is associated by the commentator with a part of the pyrrhichê in which the dancer turned his head aside, suggesting a reference to the idea that anyone approaching the monster had to look away to avoid being turned into stone by the sight of it. Cf. Antiph. fr. 164.1–4; Borthwick 1970.

Gorgodrakontadoka is < Γοργώ ("Gorgon")[180] + δράκων ("serpent") + δέχ-ομαι ("hold, receive, await") and thus means "Gorgon-serpent-accepting" vel sim.; cf. ἰοδόκος ("arrow-holding (quiver)"; e. g. Il. 15.444). For similar epithets of Athena also ending in Doric -α, cf. Γοργοφόνα, "Gorgon-slaying" (E. Ion 1478 (lyr.)); γοργολόφα, "Gorgon-crested" (Ar. Eq. 1181).

fr. 434 K.–A. (400 K.)

Poll. 5.68
δασὺς τὴν τρίχωσιν, καὶ τὰ ὕπτια τῶν ποδῶν ἀλλ' οὐ μόνα τὰ πρανῆ δασυνόμενος, ὅπερ οὔ φησιν Ἀριστοτέλης (HA 519ᵃ22) ἑτέρῳ ζῴῳ προσεῖναι. διὰ τοῦτο γάρ μοι δοκεῖ δ α σ ύ π ο δ α τὸν λαγὼν ἄλλοι τε καὶ Κρατῖνος καλεῖν, ὄνομα ποιούμενος τῷ ζῴῳ τὴν φύσιν shaggy-haired, and thickly covered with hair not only on the tops of its feet but also on their undersides, something Aristotle (HA 519ᵃ22) says applies to no other animal. For on this account, it seems to me, the hare is called a ' s h a g g y - f o o t' by various authorities, including Cratinus, who turns the nature of the animal into its name

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.211

Citation context From an extended discussion of hares. Cf. Phot. δ 66 δασύποδα· τὸν λαγὼν καὶ (καὶ del. Theodoridis) Ἀττικοί ("dasypous: Attic-

[180] Ed. pr., by contrast, takes the first element to be γοργός ("grim") speakers also ("also" del. Theodoridis) (use this term for) a hare"), which may be another reminiscence of Pollux' source. Note also

- Ar. Byz. fr. 188 ⟨ὁ⟩ λαγὼς λέγεται καὶ πτὼξ καὶ δασύπους καὶ ταχείνας ("the hare is referred to as a ptôx ('cowering animal'), dasypous and tacheinas")
- Hsch. δ 307 = Phot. δ 64 = Suda δ 86 δασύπους· λαγώς ("dasypous: hare"; from the common source of Photius and the Suda conventionally referred to as Σ′′).

Interpretation δασύπους (literally "shaggy-footed, hairy-footed"; first here) is attested elsewhere in the classical period only in comedy (e. g. Alc. Com. fr. 17.1; Antiph. fr. 131.6; Ephipp. fr. 15.9; Nausicr. fr. 2.3; Nicostr. Com. fr. 4.2; Diph. fr. 1.2), in Aristotle (e. g. HA 488^{b}15; GA 774^{b}3), and at Antisth. fr. 100.7 Caizzi, and appears to come from a homely, colloquial, riddling register. For hares, which were hunted for both food and sport (e. g. Od. 17.294–5; X. Cyn. 6.4) and are often included in banquet catalogues and the like (e. g. Epich. fr. 53.2; Eup. fr. 174.2; Ar. Ach. 878; Eub. fr. 63.6; Archestr. fr. 57 with Olson–Sens 2000 ad loc.), see Keller 1909–1913 I.210–17; Kitchell 2014. 82–5, and cf. fr. 466 n. (on the more conventional term λαγώς/λαγός). Compounds in δασυ- are generally applied to animals and the like, e. g. δασύμαλλος ("thick-fleeced", of sheep; Od. 9.425), δασύστερνος ("shaggy-breasted", of wild animals; Hes. Op. 514): δασύκερκος ("bushy-tailed", of a fox; Theoc. 5.112); δασυχαίτης ("shaggy-haired", of a goat; AP 6.32.1).

fr. 435 K.–A. (401 K.)

Hsch. δ 644
Δ ε ξ ώ· ὁ Κρατῖνος ὠνοματοποίησεν ἀπὸ τοῦ δέχεσθαι δῶρα

D e x ô: Cratinus coined the name from dechesthai dôra ("to receive gifts")

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Hsch. ε 2300 Ἐμβλώ· πέπλασται παρὰ τὸ ἐμβλέπειν· ὡς ἡ Δωρὼ καὶ Δεξώ ("Emblô: formed from emblepein ('look at'); like Dôrô and Dexô") presumably refers to the Cratinus fragment as well, in which case it must ultimately go back to the same source.

Interpretation Δεξώ ("she who receives (bribes?)"), also attested at App. Anth. 2173b, would seem to be the counterpart of Δωρώ, a fictitious goddess of bribe-giving mentioned by Cratinus in Eumenides (fr. 70.1 ap. Ar. Eq. 529; cf. Kanavou 2011. 65). The name is < δέχομαι "receive" and -ώ, a suffix used inter alia to form the names of personified concepts, notably some of the Muses (Ἐρατώ, Κλειώ; cf. Hes. Th. 75–9), Seasons and Graces (Αὐξώ, Θαλλώ, Καρπώ, Πειθώ; cf. Paus. 9.35.1–7), and elsewhere in comedy Ἐμβλώ (fr. dub. 510 with n.), Ἰασώ the goddess of healing (cf. ἰάομαι, "cure") (Ar. Pl. 701) and Κερδώ "the wily one" (Ar. Eq. 1068; cf. κερδαλέος, "crafty"). Names of divinities are sometimes formed this way, notably a number of the Nereids (e. g. Δηρώ, Δωτώ, Καλυψώ, Κητώ, Νησώ, Πλωτώ, Πρωθώ, Σαώ, Σπειώ; cf. Hes. Th. 240–62; [Apollod.] Bib. 1.12), the Graiai (Ἐνυώ, Πεφρηδώ, Δεινώ; cf. Hes. Th. 273; [Apollod.] Bib. 2.37), and one of the Gorgons (Σθεννώ; Hes. Th. 276), as are divine epithets and nicknames (e. g. Πεδιώ, an epithet of Hera (cf. πεδίον, "plain") at IG 14.595–6 (Sicily); Θαρσώ, an epithet of Athena (cf. θαρσός, "bold") at Σ^{AbT} Il. 5.2; Σιτώ, an epithet of Demeter (cf. σίτος, "grain") at Polemon fr. 39; Ἀφρώ = Ἀφροδίτη at Nic. Al. 406; Τριτώ = Τριτογένεια (Athena) at AP 6.194; Μνημώ = Μνημοσύνη at Orph. fr. 180 Bernabé; cf. the nominally Thracian deity Κοτυτώ at Eup. fr. 93 and Ὑψώ = Hypsipyle at A. fr. 247). The suffix was also used to form the names of various bugbears deployed to frighten children, e. g. Ἀλφιτώ and Ἀκκώ (Chrysipp. Stoic. fr. 313); Γελλώ (Sapph. fr. 168A); Γοργώ (e. g. Il. 11.36); Μορμώ (Ar. Ach. 582 with Olson 2002 ad loc.).[181] Its original purpose appears to have been to form feminine abstracts, which could in turn easily be personified: e. g. πευθώ, "tidings" (A. Th. 370); μελλώ, "delay" (A. Ag. 1356). For personifications as deities, see in general Stafford 2000, and the essays collected in Stafford–Herrin 2005. Nothing else is known of Emblô, who is granted a lemma in neither LSJ nor Montanari.

fr. 436 K.–A. = Crates Com. fr. 54

Phot. δ 287 = Suda δ 500
δ ι α β ά λ λ ε ι ν· τὸ ἐξαπατᾶν καὶ παραλογίζεσθαι. Θουκυδίδης α΄ καὶ Κρατῖνος (καὶ Κρατῖνος in marg. Phot.^{z} : καὶ Κράτης Suda)

d i a b a l l e i n: to deceive and mislead. Thucydides in Book 1[182] and Cratinus ("and Cratinus" Phot.^{z} in margin : "and Crates" Suda)

---

[181] For personal names of human beings in -ώ, e. g. Μελανθώ (Od. 18.321; 19.65); Κλησίππω (IG IV 729 col. ii.13); Σαπφώ.

[182] Untrue of the text of Thucydides as it has come down to us, although Kassel–Austin compare 1.133 ὡς οὐδὲν πώποτε αὐτὸν ἐν ταῖς πρὸς βασιλέα διακονίαις παραβάλοιτο ("that he had never deceived him in his errands to the King"). Note also 5.16 ἀπιστότερος διαβάλλων ("less believable when he tried to deceive them"; of Cleon).

Discussion Bonanno 1972. 161

Citation context A fragment of an Atticist discussion of the use of the verb διαβάλλω in an extended sense drawn from the common source of Photius and the Suda conventionally referred to as Σ′′. Related material is preserved at – Hsch. δ 942 διαβάλλει· καταγινώσκει. ὑβρίζει. παραπατᾷ. παραλογίζεται ("diaballei: he/she/it condemns; outrages; leads astray; misleads")

– Phot. δ 291 διαβάλλεις· παραλογίζῃ, εἰς ἀπέχθειαν ἄγεις. τάττουσι δὲ τὴν λέξιν καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐναντίου, οἷον "τῇ θυγατρὶ τῇ ἐμῇ διαβεβλημένος" (Hdt. 1.118.2), καθὸ καὶ Πλάτων ἐν Πολιτείᾳ (6.498c) "μὴ διάβαλε ἐμὲ καὶ Θρασύμαχον" ("diaballeis: you mislead, you lead into enmity. But they also use the word in reference to variance, for example 'having been set at variance with my daughter' (Hdt. 1.118.2), as Plato as well (does) in the Republic (498c) 'Don't set me and Thrasymachus at variance!'")
– Suda δ 499 διαβάλλεται· χρῶνται ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐξαπατᾶν. Ἄρχιππος (fr. 38.2)· τὸν γὰρ γέροντα διαβαλοῦμαι τήμερον. καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης (Av. 1648)· διαβάλλεταί σ' ὁ θεῖος, ὦ πόνηρε σύ ("diaballetai: they use (the word) in place of exapatan ('to deceive'). Archippus (fr. 38.2): for I'll deceive the old man today. And Aristophanes (Av. 1648): Your uncle is deceiving you, you miserable creature")
– Suda δ 892 διέβαλεν· ἐξηπάτησε. καὶ Θουκυδίδης οὕτως κέχρηται καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης ἐν Θεσμοφοριαζούσαις (1214)· διέβαλέ μ' ἡ γραῦς. ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐξηπάτησε ("diebalen: he/she/it deceived. And Thucydides uses it this way, as also does Aristophanes in Thesmophoriazusae (1214): The old woman diebale me, in place of 'deceived'")
– $\Sigma^{RVE\Gamma}$ Ar. Av. 1648 διαβάλλεταί σ' ὁ θεῖος· ὅτι τῷ διαβάλλεται χρῶνται ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐξαπατᾶν, ὡς καὶ Ἄρχιππος ἐν Πλούτῳ (fr. 38)· ἔστιν δέ μοι καλῶς πρόφασις εὑρημένη· / τὸν γὰρ γέροντα διαβαλοῦμαι τήμερον. παρόμοιον δὲ καὶ τὸ Ὁμηρικὸν (Il. 4.6)· παραβλήδην ἀγορεύων. καὶ παρ' Ἀλκαίῳ (fr. 445 = Alc. Com. fr. dub. 34)· παραβάλλεταί σε ("Your uncle is deceiving you: They use diaballetai in reference to deception, as does also Archippus in Ploutos (fr. 38): I've invented a fine excuse; for I'll deceive the old man today. The passage from Homer (Il. 4.6) is similar: speaking deceitfully. Also in Alcaeus (fr. 445 = Alc. Com. fr. dub. 34): he/she/it is deceiving you").

Interpretation Whether the author in question is Crates or Cratinus—Kassel–Austin hedge their bets by assigning the word to both poets—is unclear, and this fragment (like fr. 439) might better have been placed among the dubia.

The root meaning of διαβάλλω—systematically discussed by Chadwick 1996. 87–94—is "throw across" (LSJ s. v. I). But the verb is far more often used to mean "put on opposite sides, set at variance" and thus "slander"[183] (LSJ s. v. V; e. g. Ar. Ach. 502; Eq. 262), with the latter sense occasionally extended to "mislead" (LSJ s. v. VI; in addition to the passages cited by the lexicographers listed in Citation context, cf. Men. Dysc. 462 with Sandbach 1973 ad loc.; Dunbar 1996 on Ar. Av. 1648, comparing Hdt. 9.116.1–2), as allegedly by Cratinus (or Crates). See also fr. 437 n. (on διάβολος).

fr. 437 K.–A.

Phot. δ 306
† δ ι α δ ο κ ί ς †· διάβολος. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

† d i a d o k i s †: slanderer/deceiver. Thus Cratinus

Text According to the lexicographers, a διαδοκίς (not attested outside of the lexicographers) is a beam that is set perpendicular to the other roof-beams of a building and supports them:[184]

- Phot. δ 307 διαδοκίς· ἡ δεχομένη τὰς ἄλλας καὶ βαστάζουσα, ὑποτιθεμένη δὲ πλαγία ("diadokis: the (beam) that receives the other (beams) and supports them, being set sideways beneath them"; the gloss after the one in question here; traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus)
- Hsch. δ 995 διαδοκίς· οἱ μὲν [ὑπόθεμα τῶν δοκῶν, πλάγιον ὑπόθεμα,] ἡ τὰς ἄλλας δοκοὺς ἀναδεχομένη· οἱ δὲ δοκῶν πλάγιον ὑπόθεμα (diadokis: some authorities (say that this is) [a base of the beams, a support set sideways], the (beam) that receives the other beams. Others say that it is the sideways support of the beams"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).

This makes no sense given the gloss, and most likely a scribe has accidentally replaced the proper lemma with the one that follows it in Phot. δ 307. Hsch. δ 994 offers διάδικος·[185] τὸ εἰς δίκην καλεῖν. Ἀττικοί ("diadikos: to summon to trial; Attic-speakers"), while Suda δ 540 has διαδικασάμενος· ὀνειδίσας, διελέγξας ("diadikasmenos: reproaching, finding fault with"), and διάδικος is so close to διαδοκίς that it is probably the word from Cratinus missing from Photius.

---

[183] Hence "accuse falsely" at Storey 2011. 432, which ignores the gloss offered in the citation context.

[184] Hence "crossbeam" at Storey 2011. 432, which ignores the gloss offered in the citation context.

[185] Emended to διὰ δίκης by Latte and taken by him to be a reference to S. Ant. 742.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation See Text. For Photius' gloss διάβολος (attested in comedy only at Ar. Eq. 44–5 ἐπρίατο δοῦλον, βυρσοδέψην Παφλαγόνα, / πανουργότατον καὶ διαβολώτατόν τινα, "he bought a slave, a Paphlagonian tanner, an utterly villainous and slanderous/deceptive character"; Men. fr. 887 οὐκ ἔστιν οὔτε διάβολος / γραῦς ἔνδον, "there's neither a slanderous/deceptive old woman inside"), cf. fr. 436 n. (on the cognate verb διαβάλλω).

fr. 438 K.–A. (402 K.)

Hsch. δ 1143
δ ι ά λ ο γ ο ς (sic Theodoridis ex Phot. δ 375 : διαλαος Hsch.)· οἱ μὲν ἐπιμυλίδιον δαίμονα· ἄλλοι δὲ παιδιᾶς εἶδος, ἐν ᾗ διαλέγουσι τὰς ψήφους. βούλεται δὲ λέγειν ὁ Κρατῖνος τὸν ἔσχατον τῶν π ό ρ ν ω ν

d i a l o g o s (thus Theodoridis from Phot. δ 375 : διαλαος Hsch.). Some authorities (say that this is) a deity associated with a mill, others (that it is) a type of game in which they select (dialegousi) their pebbles. But Cratinus wants it to mean "the most whorish (masc.) o f the w h o r e s "

Discussion Bergk 1838. 260; Meineke 1839 II.196–7; Kock 1880 I.122; Theodoridis 1978. 32

Text Hesychius has † διαλαος †, which is not a Greek word, and Phot. δ 375 (quoted in Citation context) suggests that the correct reading is διάλογος and that what Cratinus wrote may have been διάλογος πορνῶν (thus Theodoridis).

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Phot. δ 375 διάλογος πορνῶν· τὸ ἔσχατον καὶ λείψανον· διάλογος γὰρ παιδιᾶς μέρος, ὅταν ἐπὶ τέλει διαλέγωσι τὰς ψήφους ("dialogos pornôn ('selection of whores'): what is last and a remnant. For a dialogos is part of a game, when they select (dialegôsi) their pebbles at the end"; traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus) clearly goes back to the same source.

Interpretation More likely an insult describing someone polemically accused of selling his body (~ "the most degraded of male prostitutes") than praise of an individual actually involved in the business (~ "the finest of male prostitutes").

διάλογος in the sense "dialogue, conversation" (4th-century prosaic vocabulary: e. g. Isoc. 12.26; Pl. Sph. 263e; Prt. 338a) is < middle διαλέγομαι (LSJ s.v. διαλέγω B), whereas Cratinus' sense "selection", i. e. "the choicest example" (otherwise unattested) is < active διαλέγω ("pick out, separate"; LSJ s. v. A).[186] πόρνων For abusive references to public figures as prostitutes, see Olson 2017 on Eup. fr. 99.26–7. For male brothel prostitutes generally, see Eup. fr. 247.3; Aeschin. 1.74, 120; Din. 1.13.

fr. 439 K.–A. ~ Crates Com. fr. dub. 57

Phot. δ 505 = Suda δ 845
δ ι α ψ α λ ά τ τ ε σ θ α ι· τὸ διαστέλλεσθαι εἰς ἔρευναν, τὸ γὰρ ἀψάλακτον ἄθικτον. οὕτως Κρατῖνος (sic Phot. : Κράτης Suda)

d i a p s a l a t t e s t h a i: to be exposed to investigation, because what is apsalaktos is untouched (athiktos). Thus Cratinus (thus Phot. : "Crates" Suda)

Discussion Bonanno 1972. 160

Citation context Drawn from the common source of Photius and the Suda conventionally referred to as Σ′′. A condensed version of the same note (with the reference to Cratinus/Crates removed) is preserved at Hsch. δ 1472 διαψαλάττεσθαι· τὸ εἰς ἔρευναν διαστέλλεσθαι ("diapsalattesthai: to be exposed to investigation"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).[187] The second half of Suda α 4723 ἀψάλακτος· ἀπαθής, ἀτιμώρητος. ἀψάλακτον γὰρ τὸ ἄθικτον. οὕτως Κράτης (fr. dub. 57) ("apsalaktos: without injury, without penalty; for what is untouched is apsalakton. Thus Crates (fr. dub. 57)") is taken by Adler to be drawn from Suda δ 845 and thus to be of no independent value as a witness; the first half is in origin a gloss (= Σ^{R}) on Ar. Lys. 275 ἀπῆλθεν ἀψάλακτος (not even the Spartan king Cleomenes, when he occupied the Acropolis, "went away unscathed").[188]

---

[186] For ἔσχατος in this sense in Hesychius' gloss, see LSJ s. v. I.2. Photius seems to use the word to mean instead "last", hence the additional gloss καὶ λείψανον, as if the reference were to the pebble no one wanted and that was accordingly left behind when all the players had drawn.

[187] LSJ s. v. refers the reader to s. v. διαψαθάλλω (attested only at Hsch. δ 1469, which Latte brackets as a variant version of δ 1472) and glosses "feel with the fingers, scratch"; cf. Hermipp. fr. 70). But the entries in Phot. = Suda leave little doubt that the word Cratinus/Crates used was from a different root. Montanari incautiously follows LSJ and omits the lemma διαψαλάττομαι altogether.

[188] For ἀψάλακτος, see also S. fr. 550 ap. Hsch. α 8940, where the word is glossed ἀκίνητος. ἀψηλάφητος. ἀκρότητος ("unmoved, untested, not beaten down" [thus Naber for the paradosis ἀκράτητος, "unsubdued"]).

Interpretation Whether the author in question is Crates or Cratinus is unclear—Kassel–Austin offer no reason for assigning διαψαλάττεσθαι unambiguously to Cratinus or for offering only ἀψάλακτος as Crates Com. fr. dub. 57—and this fragment (like fr. 436) might better have been placed among the dubia.

διαψαλάττομαι (not attested outside of lexicographic sources) is < ψαλάσσω, "touch, stroke"[189] (e. g. S. fr. 100a; Ion TrGF 19 F 13a; Lyc. 139), an enlargement of ψάλλω ("pluck"), which is often used in reference to playing stringed instruments (e. g. Ar. Eq. 522; Av. 218 ἀντιψάλλων; Anacr. PMG 373.3; 374.1; Hdt. 1.155.4; Pl. Lys. 209b; Men. Epitr. 260; Macho 107 ψαλλόμενος, "being played to on a string instrument"[190]); cf. Eup. fr. 88.2 διαψάλλεις τριγώνοις, where the prefix ("carefully" vel sim.) seems to do much the same duty as the adverb in the preceding line (καλῶς … τυμπανίζεις, "you play the drum well"). The gloss offered by Phot. = Suda suggests that what Cratinus/Crates meant was "to be handled thoroughly" and thus "closely examined".[191] For the formation of ψαλάσσω < ψάλλω, cf. ἀφάσσω, "feel" (e. g. A.R. 2.710) alongside ἀφάω, "touch" (e. g. Il. 6.322; Th. 1.91.3; Pl. Sph. 267a; Men. Asp. 271). Other compounds of ψαλάσσω (all exceedingly rare and attested only with -σσ- rather than Attic -ττ-) are ἀναψαλάσσω, "tear open" (Lyc. 343); μεταψαλάσσω (glossed μετατιθέναι, "remove", at Hsch. μ 1049); προψαλάσσω, ("assail"?; conjectural at S. fr. 314.247); ὑποψαλάσσω (Ar. Lys. 84, of groping a woman "like a sacrificial victim"; a Spartan is speaking).

fr. 440 K.–A. (403 K.)

Poll. 3.75

δουλοπρεπὲς (Ap. 30) δὲ καὶ δουλοπρεπέστερον (Mem. 2.8.4) Ξενοφῶν, καὶ δουλοπρεπέστατα Κρατῖνος καὶ δουλοπρέπεια Θεόπομπος ὁ κωμικός (fr. 91)

And Xenophon (uses) "servile" (Ap. 30) and "most servile" (Mem. 2.8.4), and Cratinus (uses) "most servile"[192] (neut. pl.) and the comic poet Theopompos (fr. 91) (uses) "slavish disposition"

---

189 Hence presumably the odd "to feel out" at Storey 2011. 432.

190 Thus rightly LSJ s. v. II.3 (and cf. Gow 1965, with parallels); scarcely "to be celebrated with the sound of the lyre" (Montanari s. v.).

191 Beekes s. v. ψάλλω renders the gloss "to be instructed to do research", which is a possible rendering of the Greek but makes no sense in context.

192 Perhaps adverbial, "in an extremely servile fashion".

Citation context From a small collection of words derived from δοῦλος within a larger collection of words having to do with slaves, whence also fr. 86; Pherecr. fr. 244; Eup. frr. 426; 467.

Interpretation The conversation at X. Mem. 2.8.4 is about working for another man, which the ruined but proud Eutherus refuses to do, while X. Ap. 30 is Apollodorus' sneering reference to the fact that the son of Socrates' accuser Anytus managed the family's leather tannery. Likewise at Hdt. 1.126.5 δουλοπρεπής is used to describe hard physical labor, and at Pl. Grg. 518a the contrast is between occupations and activities appropriate for free persons and banausic, i. e. "slavish" ones; cf. Pl. Grg. 485b (playing around or speaking like a child, despite actually being an adult, is "slavish"). δουλοπρεπής and its cognates thus appear to have a more abstract sense than the more pedestrian δουλικός (for which, cf. Phryn. Com. fr. 39.1 δουλικῶς; Ar. Ra. 743; Arar. fr. 18 ἔργον δὲ δουλικόν (from this same section of Pollux)). Other compound adjectives in -πρεπής, all similarly "grand" in one way or another, include ἱεροπρεπής (Men. Dysc. 646; a self-promoting cook describes his own art); κομψοπρεπής, "ingenious-seeming" (Ar. Nu. 1030/1; lyric, describing the "music", i. e. verbal and argumentative style of Wrong); μεγαλοπρεπής ("impressive"; Ar. V. 1186, the sort of stories Bdelycleon wants his father to tell in sophisticated company); γενναιοπρεπής ("befitting someone noble"; Ar. Pax 988, from a sacrificial prayer to Peace herself)).

fr. 441 K.–A. (350 K.)

Phot. σ 462
σπιθαμή· τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου δακτύλου ἐπὶ τὸν μικρόν· τὸ δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ λιχανοῦ λιχάς· τὴν δὲ σπιθαμὴν τινὲς καὶ δ ό χ μ η ν καλοῦσιν· οὕτως Κρατῖνος spithamê: the distance from the thumb to the little finger; whereas a lichas is the distance from the forefinger (lichanos) (sc. to the little finger)[193]. But some authorities also use the term d o c h m ê for a spithamê; thus Cratinus

Discussion Bergk 1838. 264; Kock 1880 I.114

---

[193] Thus Photius; what was intended—or at least what should have been written—was τὸ δ' ἐπὶ τὸν λιχανὸν λιχάς ("a lichas is the distance (sc. from the thumb) to the index finger", i. e. when they are separated as far as possible from one another).

Citation context Moer. δ 41 δόχμη Ἀττικοί· σπιθαμή Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (use) dochmê; Greeks generally (use) spithamê") and Phot. δ 736 = Suda δ 1434 = Synag. δ 357 δοχμή· σπιθαμή ("dochmê: spithamê"; from the common source generally referred to as Σ′) leave little doubt that the note is drawn from a collection of Attic vocabulary. Hsch. σ 1508 σπιθαμή· τὸ μέτρον, τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου δακτύλου ἐπὶ τὸν μικρὸν διάστημα ἐκταθέν ("spithamê: a unit of measure, the distance from the thumb to the little finger when extended") may come from the same source.

Interpretation A δοχμή (< δέχομαι) is normally defined as a unit of measure equal to four "fingers", i. e. a τετραδάκτυλον[194] or παλαστή/παλαιστή ("palm"):

- Paus.Gr. δ 26 δόχμη· τὸ τετραδάκτυλον. Κύπριοι δὲ τὴν παλαιστήν. ἴσως διὰ τὸ πλαγιάζειν τῇ χειρὶ ἐν τῷ μετρεῖν. δόχμιον γὰρ τὸ πλάγιον ("dochmê: a tetradaktylon; but the Cypriotes call it a palaistê ('palm'). Perhaps (it is called a dochmê) since one turns (plagiazein) one's hand sideways to measure; because what is plagios ('sideways') is dochmios ('aslant')")
- Ael. Dion. δ 30 (ap. Eust. p. 1291.44–6 = IV.696.12–16) δόχμη· τὸ τετραδάκτυλον. Ἀρίσταρχος δὲ ὀξύνει, ὡς καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. dub. 959) ἐν τῷ· "οὗτοι δ' ἀφεστήκασι πλεῖν ἢ δύο δοχμά." ἐν μέντοι τοῖς ἀκριβεστέροις ἀντιγράφοις ὀξεῖα ἐπίκειται τῇ πρώτῃ συλλαβῇ κατὰ τὸ λόχμη, λόγχη, ὄχνη, ὄγχνη ("dochmê: a tetradaktylon. Aristarchus gives it an acute accent on the final syllable, as does Aristophanes (fr. dub. 959) in his 'But these men/things are more than a pair of dochmai away'. In the more accurate copies, however, it has an acute accent on the first syllable, like lóchmê, lónchê, óchnê, ónchnê")
- Poll. 2.157 δοχμὴ δὲ συγκλεισθέντες οἱ τέτταρες δάκτυλοι ("four daktyloi combined are a dochmê")
- Σ^{VEΓΘM} Ar. Eq. 318 δυοῖν δοχμαῖν· παίζων καὶ αὐτὸς παλαιστὰς ἐξετείνετο· δοχμὴ γὰρ ἡ παλαιστή ("a pair of dochmai: He himself was stretching out his palms as a joke; since a dochmê is a palaistê").

A σπιθαμή (no etymology), by contrast, is a "span", i. e. the distance from the tip of the thumb to the tip of the little finger when the hand is fully extended[195] = 12 daktyloi. It is tempting to think that Cratinus' use of δοχμή = σπιθαμή was merely a hapax mistake generalized and converted into doctrine by Atticist

---

[194] Not recognized as a technical term by LSJ or Montanari, but clearly treated as such by the lexicographers.

[195] Presumably the sense intended by Beekes 2010 s. v. "the range between the stretched thumbs and the little finger".

lexicographers. Other units in the system include the κόνδυλος ("knuckle"; the reference is actually to the middle joint of the finger) = 2 daktyloi; διχάς ("half") or ἡμιπόδιον ("half foot") = 8 daktyloi; λιχάς ("index span", i. e. "lesser span") = 10 daktyloi; ποῦς ("foot") = 16 daktyloi; πυγμή ("fist", i. e. the distance from the elbow to the end of the fingers when a fist is formed) = 18 daktyloi; and πῆχυς ("cubit", i. e. the distance from the elbow to the end of the extended fingers) = 24 daktyloi.

fr. 442 K.–A. (404 K.)

Hsch. δ 2539
δ υ σ β ρ ά κ α ν ο ν (δυσκάρβανον Bergk)· δυσχερές. βράκανα γὰρ τὰ ἄγρια λάχανα· ἔστι δὲ δύσπλυτα (sic Phot. = Et.Gen. = Suda : δυσπληταα Hsch.). λέγει οὖν ὁ Κρατῖνος δυσκατανόητον οἱονεὶ † δυσνόητον

d y s b r a k a n o n (dyskarbanon Bergk): difficult; for brakana are wild potherbs, and they are difficult to wash (thus Phot. = Et.Gen. = Suda : † dysplêta † Hsch.). Cratinus accordingly uses (it to mean) dyskatanoêton ("difficult to understand"), as if it were † dysnoêton ("difficult to understand")

Discussion Bergk 1838. 259–60; Meineke 1839 II.197; Lobeck 1846. 48–9; Kock 1880 I.122

Citation Context Traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Closely related material, but without reference to Cratinus, is preserved at

- Hsch. β 1041 βράκανα· τὰ ἄγρια λάχανα ("brakana: wild potherbs")
- Phot. δ 799 = Et.Gen. AB = Suda δ 1602 δυσβράκανος (Suda : δυσβάρκανος Phot. Et.Gen.)· δυσκατανόητος· βράκανα γὰρ ἄγρια λάχανα δύσπλυτα ("dysbrakanos (thus the Suda : dysbarkanos Phot. Et.Gen.): difficult to understand; for brakana are wild potherbs that are difficult to wash"; from the common source of Photius, the Et.Gen. and the Suda generally referred to as Σ′′)
- Phot. β 260 βράκανα· λάχανα δύσπλυτα καὶ ἄγρια ("brakana: potherbs that are difficult to wash and wild") ~ Suda β 517 βράκανα· ἄγρια καὶ δύσπλυτα λάχανα ("brakana: wild and difficult-to-wash potherbs") (also from Σ′′).

Text κάρβανος (etymology obscure) means "barbarian" at A. Supp. 118, 129, 914; Ag. 1061, and Bergk—recognizing that Hesychius' etymology seems fanciful—accordingly suggested that Cratinus wrote δυσκάρβανον. If δυσβράκανος is in fact from βρακεῖν (see Interpretation), there is no reason to emend. A more substantial problem is that the end of the entry in Hesychius appears to be corrupt and/or lacunose and does not actually state that Cratinus used δυσβράκανον, instead crediting him with δυσκατανόητον, although it is difficult to see the point of citing Cratinus, if he did not use the problematic word under discussion, and one would expect δυσκατανόητον to be instead a gloss (thus "Cratinus used it in the sense 'difficult to understand'").

Interpretation The consumption of βράκανα is a mark of an impoverished, subsistence-level existence (cf. Pherecr. fr. 14.1–2 ἐνθρύσκοισι καὶ βρακάνοις / καὶ στραβήλοις ζῆν, "to live on chervil, brakana and snails"; Luc. Lex. 2 τῶν σκανδίκων καὶ βρακάνων λαχανευσάμενος, "after green-gathering some wild chervil and brakana"; Isager–Skydsgaard 1995. 43). Despite the opening portion of Hesychius' treatment of δυσβράκανος, however, the word is—as Kock saw—more likely < βρακεῖν ("understand"; Hsch. β 1042 βρακεῖν· συνιέναι, 1046 βρακ⟨ε⟩ίς· συνείς (both cited by Kassel–Austin)), hence δυσκατανόητον οἱονεὶ † δυσνόητον at the end of the note (and cf. Phot. δ 799 = Et.Gen. AB = Suda δ 1602, where δυσβράκανος and δυσκατανόητος are simply equated). For δυσχερής (Hesychius' initial gloss of δυσβράκανος) used to describe difficult arguments or discussions, e. g. Isoc. 15.281; Pl. Prt. 333d; D. 20.113; Arist. EN 1145^{b}6.

Neither δυσκατανόητος nor δυσνόητος (the other two words that Hesychius might conceivably be taken to be assigning to Cratinus) is firmly attested before the Roman period.

fr. 443 K.–A. (405 K.)

Hsch. δ 2578
δυσθαλής· δυσαυξής. Κρατῖνος dysthalês: slow-growing. Cratinus

Discussion Casaubon 1620. 424; Meineke 1839 II.197; Bothe 1855. 62; Kock 1880 I.122

Assignment to known plays Casaubon, comparing Alex. Mynd. fr. I.16 Wellmann ap. Ath. 9.393a, attributed the fragment to Cheirônes.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation The note in Hesychius is most likely severely epitomized, and this may therefore be in origin another reference to fr. 264 Ἰθακησία ὀρτυγομήτρα ("an Ithacan corncrake"; ap. Ath. 9.392f), referring to a bird

Alexander of Myndus (fr. I.16 Wellmann, ap. Ath. 9.392f–3a) described as τὸ μέγεθος ἡλίκη τρυγών, σκέλη δὲ μακρά, δυσθαλὴς καὶ δειλή ("the size of a turtledove, long-legged, slow-growing and wary").

δυσθαλής (< δυσ-, "badly" + θάλλω, "grow, flourish") is attested only here and in the fragment of Alexander of Myndus cited above. δυσαυξής (Hesychius' gloss on the word) typically describes slow-growing plants (e. g. Thphr. CP 1.8.4; 4.12.10; HP 3.6.1);[196] cognate vocabulary is attested elsewhere in comedy at e.g Ar. Av. 1062 εὐθαλεῖς (lyric), 1737 ἀμφιθαλής (lyric).

fr. 444 K.–A. (406 K.)

Σ^{T} Il. 16.428
ἀγκυλοχεῖλαι· παρασύνθετον (Bekker : παρὰ σύνθεσιν cod.) ἐκ τοῦ ἀγκυλόχειλος. ἢ ὡς τὸ δ ω δ ε κ έ τ α ι (Lobeck : † δεδόκεται † cod.) παρὰ Κρατίνῳ ankylocheilai: a secondary compound (Bekker : "to a compound" cod.) from ankylocheilos ("with a hooked beak"). Or like d ô d e k e t a i ("t w e l v e - y e a r - o l d s"; Bekker : † dedoketai † cod.) in Cratinus

Discussion Kock 1880 I.122–3; Marzullo 1959. 153

Citation context A gloss on the unexpected form ἀγκυλοχεῖλαι at Il. 16.428 (ἀγκυλοχείλεις being expected), seemingly drawing on Choerob. Grammatici Graeci IV.1 pp. 166.34–167.1 ἀπὸ τοῦ χεῖλος ἀγκυλόχειλος συνθέτου γίνεται παρασύνθετον ἀγκυλοχείλης ἀγκυλοχείλου ("ankylocheilos is a compound of cheilos, a secondary compound (is) ankylocheilês, ankylocheilou"), 167.37–168.3 οἱ Ἀττικοὶ … οἱ δωδεκαέται … λέγουσι τὴν εὐθεῖαν τῶν πληθυντικῶν … ὀφείλοντες εἰπεῖν οἱ δωδεκαέτεις ("Attic authors use hoi dôdekaetai ('the twelve-year-olds') for the nominative plural, whereas they ought to use hoi dôdekaeteis").

Interpretation For similarly contracted forms in comedy, cf. δεκέτης ("lasting ten years"; Ar. Ach. 191); δεκέτις ("five years old (fem.)"; Ar. Lys. 643); ἑξέτης ("six years old"; Ar. Nu. 862); ἑπτέτης ("seven years old"; Chionid. fr. 3, cited by the Antiatticist precisely for the absence of the alpha; Ar. Ra. 418); ἑπτέτις ("seven years old (fem.)"; Ar. Th. 480); πεντέτης ("lasting five years"; Ar. Ach. 188); ὑπερεξηκοντέτης ("over sixty years old"; Ar. Ec. 982).

---

[196] "Hard to grow" (Storey 2011. 432) is thus unlikely to be right.

fr. 445 K.–A. (407 K.)

Poll. 3.64
ἐ θ é λ ε χ θ ρ ο ν δὲ Κρατῖνος λέγει

And Cratinus says e t h e l e c h t h r o n ("bearing a grudge")

Citation context From a collection of words meaning "misanthropic" vel sim. Cf. Moer. ε 43 ἐθελέχθρων· Ξενοφῶν Ἀπομνημονεύμασιν. παρ' ἄλλῳ δὲ οὐχ εὗρον ("ethelechthrôn (gen. pl.): Xenophon in the Memorabilia. But I found it in no other author"). Moeris appears to be in error—ἐθέλεχθρος is not found in Xenophon, at least not in the form in which the text has come down to us—but his note does serve to make clear that the good Attic credentials of ἐθέλεχθρος were a matter of scholarly discussion. Note also Poll. 5.115 ἐθελέχθρως (at the end of a list of words meaning to feel ill will toward someone; presumably drawn from D. 39.36).

Interpretation ἐθέλεχθρος (first attested here; cf. the cognate adv. at D. 39.36) is < ἐθέλω ("be willing") + ἐχθρός ("hostile"); the point of the word is apparently that a reasonable person might give up his hostility toward another at some point, but that the ἐθέλεχθρος opts to maintain it. The only other comic compounds in ἐθελο- is fr. 446 ἐθελόσυχνος (n.), but cf. the similarly abusive ἐθελόπορνος ("voluntary prostitute"; Anacr. PMG 388.5), ἐθελοκακέω ("be willingly bad/cowardly"; e. g. Hdt. 5.78) and ἐθελόδουλος ("willingly servile"; Pl. R. 562d). For other compounds in ἐθελο-, see Tribulato 2015. 379–80.

fr. 446 K.–A. = Crates Com. 48 K.

Et.Gen. AB (~ EM p. 299.30–2)
εἰλίπους παρὰ τὸ εἰλίσσω· τὰ γὰρ εἰς ω λήγοντα τρισύλλαβα βαρύτονα μίαν συλλαβὴν συγκόπτουσιν ἐν τῇ συνθέσει, οἷον μιαίνω μιαιφόνος, τανύω τανύπεπλος, εἰλίσσω εἰλίπους· σημειούμεθα παρὰ Κρατίνῳ (Et.Gen. : κρατῶ EM^{M} : κρα^{τ} EM^{D} : Κράτητι vulg.) τὸ ἐ θ ε λ ό σ υ χ ν ο ς. σημαίνει δὲ τὸν θέλοντα συχνάζειν. τοῦτο δὲ ἐσημειωσάμεθα ὅτι ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐθέλω τὰς γ΄ συλλαβὰς ἐφύλαξεν eilipous ("having a rolling gait") is from eilissô ("roll"); for trisyllabic words ending in ômega with an acute on the final syllable lose one syllable in a compound, e. g. miainô ("stain"), miaiphonos ("defiled by murder"); tanyô ("stretch"), tanypeplos ("with a long robe"); eilissô ("roll"), eilipous ("having a rolling gait"). We take special note of e t h e l o s y c h n o s in Cratinus (thus the Et.Gen. : kratô EM^{M} : kra^{t} EM^{D} : "Crates" vulgate), which means someone who willingly frequents (a place). We made special note of this (word) because it preserved the three syllables of ethelô ("be willing")

Discussion Kock 1880 I.143; Bonanno 1972. 168–9

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by the source to Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 260.22–7). Although the theory of word-formation espoused here is confused, Herodian is attempting to explain the formation of a number of unusual compounds that have—or that he believes have—verbal first constituents. Herodian seems to suggest that such compounds are formed directly from finite verbs with the subsequent loss of the personal ending -ô, which is not actually the case; tanypeplos, for example, is not a syncopated tanyo-peplos* formed directly from tanyô and peplos ("robe"), for both tany-peplos and tanyô are instead formed from a stem tany- by compounding and derivation, respectively.[197] The fact that ἐθέλω and the combining form ἐθελο- both have three syllables—Herodian's reason for calling attention to Cratinus' ἐθελόσυχνος—is also mere coincidence: -ω (the ending of the first-person singular present active indicative) and -ο- (the semantically empty linking vowel typical of Greek compounds) have nothing to do with one another. But ethelosychnos and other compounds in ethelo- are superficially unusual, in that relatively few verb-initial compounds make use of the linking vowel -ο- (cf. βουλόμαχος, "desiring strife" (Ar. Pax 1293); μελλοδειπνικός, "(song sung while) waiting for dinner" (Ar. Ec. 1153)); instead, most verb-initial compounds have stems in -σι- (e. g. ἀείρω, "raise" and ἀειρσίπους, "raising the feet" (e. g. Il. 3.327); χρέμπτομαι, "clear one's throat" and χρεμψιθέατρος, "spitting in the theater" (adesp. com. fr. 1100)).

The manuscripts of the EM offer ambiguous abbreviations of the name of the author responsible for ἐθελόσυχνος, and these were interpreted in the printed versions of the lexicon as references to Crates, to whom the fragment is accordingly assigned by Meineke and Kock. The Et.Gen., on the other hand, gives the word unambiguously to Cratinus. An abbreviated Κρα$^{\tau}$ vel sim. is likely in the background, and the fragment might better have been treated as a dubium of both poets.

Interpretation ἐθελόσυχνος (a hapax) is < ἐθέλω ("be willing") + συχνός ("numerous, many, much, wide, long"); cf. σύχνασμα ("something done often"; Poll. 6.183) and συχνάκις ("very often"; Luc. Scyth. 2). Herodian takes the word [197] In addition, tanypeplos—unlike ethelosychnos—is not in fact a verb-initial compound, although the loss of a primary adjective *τανύς in Greek obscures this fact somewhat. The exact meaning of εἰλίπους is uncertain, and the etymology proposed by Herodian is accordingly uncertain, as are modern etymologies; cf. Beekes 2010 s. vv. εἰλίπους, ἕλιξ; Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 174.3. The same is true for the relationship between μιαίνω and μιαίφονος; cf. Beekes 2010 s. v.

---

to refer to a person who voluntarily passes time (somewhere or with someone, dubious company presumably being the point in either case), whereas LSJ s. v. suggests "fond of repetition, a bore", like the men satirized at Thphr. Char. 7 and Hor. Serm. 1.9. On compounds in ἐθελο- generally, see fr. 445 n. On verb-initial compounds generally, see Tribulato 2015.

fr. 447 K-A. (25 Dem.)

Phot. α 1663
ἀνασκυζᾶν (adesp. com. fr. *485)· ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐξοιστρεῖν καὶ ἀκολασταίνειν. καὶ ἐ κ σ κ υ - ζ ᾶ ν Κρατῖνος, Φρύνιχος (fr. 86) δὲ σκυζᾶν ἔφη anaskyzân (adesp. com. fr. *485): in reference to going mad and behaving licentiously. And Cratinus (said) e k s k y z â n, while Phrynichus (fr. 86) said skyzân

Citation context Seemingly drawn from a more complete version of Phryn. PS p. 18.13–18 (preserved only in epitomized form) ἀνασκυζᾶν (adesp. com. fr. *485) καὶ σκυζᾶν (Phryn. Com. fr. 86)· σκυζᾶν μέν ἐστιν τὸ πρὸς τὸ πάσχειν ὀργᾶν καὶ τίθεται ἐπὶ τῶν νεωτέρων ἢ παίδων ἢ γυναικῶν. τὸ δὲ ἀνασκυζᾶν σημαίνει μὲν <τὸ> αὐτό, τίθεται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. πρόσκειται δὲ τὸ ἀνὰ σημαῖνον τὴν ἐξ ὑπαρχῆς ἐν γήρᾳ πρὸς τὸ πάσχειν ὀργήν ("anaskyzân (adesp. com. fr. *485) and skyzân (Phryn. Com. fr. 86): skyzân is to be filled with desire for passive sex, and the term is used in reference to youths, boys or women. Whereas anaskyzân has the same sense, but is used in reference to the elderly. ana is prefixed signifying the desire that occurs anew in old age for passive sex").

Interpretation σκυζάω (etymology uncertain) is used in the sense "be in heat" of dogs (Arist. HA 572^{b}26, 574^{a}30), horses (Arist. HA 572^{a}29–30) and camels (Suda σ 700 σκυζᾶν· ἐπὶ συνουσίαν ὁρμᾶν. ἡ κάμηλος κύει μῆνας ι΄, τῷ δὲ ια΄ τίκτει, καὶ πάλιν διαλιποῦσα ἐνιαυτὸν σκυζᾷ, "skyzân: to feel an urgent desire for intercourse. The female camel is pregnant for ten months, gives birth in the eleventh, and again a year later skyzai"). σκύζα appears to be used as an abusive term for a woman in SEG IV 47, a Roman-era defixio from Messana, although the text there is uncertain; cf. Hsch. σ 1148 σκύζης· παρὰ Φιλήτᾳ (fr. 22 Dettori)· παύσω σε τῆς σκύζης. ἀντὶ τοῦ τῆς κάπρας[198]

[198] For καπράω and cognates used in reference to randy female sexual desire, cf. Pherecr. fr. 186; Hermipp. fr. 9; Ar. Pl. 1024; Phryn. Com. fr. 34 with Stama 2014 ad loc.; Men. fr. 434.

("skyzês: in Philetas (fr. 22 Dettori): I'll put a stop to your skyzê; in place of 'your licentiousness'"; perhaps a gloss on a lost comedy, and accordingly identified by Kock as adesp. fr. 740 (rejected by Kassel–Austin)). For the word and its cognates (probably well-known in all periods, even if ill-attested in our sources), see Dettori 2000. 155–8.

LSJ s. v. σκυζάω I cites the passage in Phrynichus,[199] but eliminates what the editors of the lexicon apparently took to be its offensive reference to pederasty, noting simply "used of women, Phryn. PS p. 18 B., cf. Phryn. Com. 6 D. [= fr. 86]"; how Phrynichus used the word is in fact unclear, and there is no reason why he might not simply have been referring to animals. Cratinus' ἐκσκυζᾶν is taken by LSJ s. v. to be equivalent in sense to σκυζᾶν, although one would expect the compound either to have an intensive sense ("be utterly in heat") or to mean "leave heat".[200] For the sense of the compound ἀνασκυζᾶν in adesp. com. fr. *485, cf. ἀναθυάω at Pherecr. fr. 185 πάλιν αὖθις ἀναθυῶσιν αἱ γεραίτεραι ("the older women come back into heat again").

fr. 448 K.–A. (408 K.)

Hsch. ε 2169
ἐ λ λ ό π ι δ α ς (Hsch. : ἐλλόποδες Phot. ε 652)· ἡ λέξις παρὰ Κρατίνῳ. γέγονε δὲ παρὰ τοὺς ἐλλούς, καὶ λέγει κοινῶς τοὺς νεβροὺς καὶ τοὺς στρουθούς· ἢ νεοττοὺς ὄφεως (Nic. Al. 490). ἀπὸ τοῦ ἅλλεσθαι

e l l o p i d e s (acc. pl.) (Hsch. : ellopodes (nom. pl.) Phot. ε 652): The word occurs in Cratinus. It exists alongside elloi, and it denotes indifferently fawns and sparrows;[201] or the young of a snake (Nic. Al. 490). From hallesthai ("to leap")

---

199 Omitted by Montanari s. v., who merely gives a reference to Aristotle. LSJ s. v. II "bark during sleep"—better "whine during sleep"—(Poll. 5.86; Lex. Vin. σ 14; ignored in Montanari s. v.) is taken by Beekes 2010 to be cognate instead with σκυδμαίνω, i. e. to be a different verb rather than a separate sense of this one.

200 That σφριγάω (normally "be well-fed, vigorous"; e. g. Ar. Nu. 799) means "be in heat" at adesp. com. fr. 178 ἤμην ποτ', ἤμην τῶν σφριγώντων ἐν λόγοις ("I was at that time, I was one of those who were overblown in arguments"), as LSJ s. v. 4 asserts (Montanari s. v. omits the definition), seems unlikely, given the parallel for the use of the word in reference to rhetoric at E. Supp. 478 σφριγῶντ' ἀμείψῃ μῦθον ("give an inflated response"). LSJ identifies Opp. C. 3.368 (discussion of the lust of the κάπρος-fish) as another use of the word in this sense. But there it describes a male (and accordingly cannot mean "be in heat"), and the sense seems to be simply "is full of energy".

201 Thus not "young birds" (Storey 2011. 432).

Discussion Bergk 1838. 256–7; Kock 1880 I.123; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text Either Hesychius' ἐλλόπιδας (< ἔλλοπις) or Photius' ἐλλόποδες (< ἐλλόπους) might be right; see Interpretation.

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Latte to Diogenianus. Parallel material drawn from the same source but without the reference to Cratinus is preserved at Phot. ε 652 ἐλλόποδες· ἑλλοὶ οἱ στρουθοὶ καὶ οἱ νεβροί· ἀπὸ τοῦ ἅλλεσθαι ("ellopodes: helloi (are) sparrows and fawns. From hallesthai"; = Et.Gen. AB s. v.).

Interpretation An ἐλλός (or ἑλλός) is a fawn in the description of Odysseus' brooch at Od. 19.228 (note νεβρός in the expanded description at Od. 19.230); the word appears to be cognate with ἔλαφος ("deer"; cf. LfgE s. v.) and the connection with ἅλλεσθαι is fanciful. More likely, ἔλλοπις (Hsch.) or ἐλλόπους (Phot.) is cognate with ἔλλοψ/ἔλλοπος, a mysterious epithet of fish attested at [Hes.] Sc. 212 ἔλλοπας ἰχθῦς; Titan. fr. 4.1, p. 12 Bernabé ἰχθύες ἐλλοί; Emped. 31 B 117.4 D.–K. ἔλλοπος ἰχθύς; S. Ai. 1297 ἐλλοῖς ἰχθύσιν with Finglass 2011 ad loc., and seemingly used as a synonym for "fish" at Emped. 31 B 5 D.–K. (cf. Lyc. 598, 796, 1375; Theoc. 1.42 ἐλλοπιεύειν, "to angle"). Ath. 7.308b–c offers two ancient etymologies for the word, that it meant (1) "lacking a voice" (< ἴλλεσθαι + ὄψ; cf. [Theoc.] Syr. 18) or (2) "having scales" (< ἐν + λέπιδες); cf. Hsch. ε 2168 ἔλλοπες· ἐλλείποντες τῆς ὀπός, τουτέστιν ἄφθογγοι, ἄφωνοι ⟨καὶ οἱ λεπιδωτοί.⟩ καὶ δασεῖς. καὶ τραχεῖς. καὶ ποικίλοι ("ellopes: lacking a voice, i. e. voiceless, mute; ⟨also scaled creatures.⟩ Also shaggy. Also rough. Also variegated"); Beekes 2010 s. v. ἔλλοψ, -οπος (who constructs an elaborate argument for taking this to be "a pre-Greek word for a great fish").

fr. 449 K.–A.

Phot. ε 744
ἐ μ π ε φ ο ρ β ⟨ ε ⟩ ι ω μ έ ν ο ν (Poll. 4.71 : ἐμπεφορβι- Phot.)· Κρατῖνος

f i t t e d w i t h a p i p e - s t r a p : Cratinus

Meter Compatible with iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑– ×⟩–⏑– ––⏑–

Text The verb is < φορβειά, and Pollux' ἐμπεφορβειωμένον (< ἐμφορβειόομαι) rather than Photius' ἐμπεφορβιωμένον (as if < ἐμφορβιόομαι; thus LSJ)[202] must accordingly be correct.

Citation context The fact that the epsilon is also missing from ἐμπεφορβειωμένον in the manuscripts at Ar. Av. 861 and the scholion there (which notes the problem),[203] as well as in the quotation of the verse at Suda φ 587, increases the likelihood that the radically abbreviated note in Photius that preserves this fragment originated as a gloss on Aristophanes. This in turn raises the possibility that ἐμπεφορβειωμένον is from Birds (the only other attestation of the verb) and that Cratinus was originally cited merely for having referred to a φορβειά or the like. Additional scholarly references to the word are preserved at

- Poll. 4.70 καὶ φορβειὰ δὲ προσήκει τοῖς αὐλοῦσι, καὶ τὸν τῇ φορβειᾷ κατειλημμένον ἔλεγον ἐμπεφορβειωμένον ("And a phorbeia ('pipe-strap') too is connected with the pipes, and they called a man wrapped in a pipe-strap empephorbeiômenon")
- Eust. p. 539.16–18 = II.57.5–9 ἡ φορβὴ … ἧς παράγωγον κατά τινας καὶ ἡ φορβειά, ἤγουν τὸ καὶ περιστόμιον καὶ στόμιον, Ῥωμαϊκῶς δὲ εἰπεῖν καπίστριον, ἵνα ᾖ, ὥσπερ ἀρή ἡ ἀπειλή καὶ ἐπενθέσει τῆς ⟨ει⟩ διφθόγγου ἀρειή, οὕτω καὶ φορβή φορβειά, ὅθεν καὶ ὁ παρὰ τῷ κωμικῷ ἐμπεφορβειωμένος ("phorbê ('food, fodder') … derived from which, according to some authorities, is also phorbeia, i. e. the mouth-band or mouth-piece, for which the Roman term is capistrion, in order that, just as an arê is a threat and via insertion of the diphthong ⟨ei⟩ (yields) areiê ('threats'), so too phorbê phorbeia, whence also the word empephorbeiômenos in the comic poet").

Interpretation A φορβειά (cognate with φέρβω, "feed") is properly a halter used to tether a horse or donkey at a manger (X. Eq. 5.1; [Luc.] Asin. 51; Str. 15.709; Hsch. φ 749). But the word is also used to refer to the straps wrapped around a piper's cheeks and tied behind his head that served to hold his instrument in place and thus lent his hands greater freedom of movement; cf. Ar. V. 581–2 with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.; S. fr. 768.2; Hsch. φ 750; Cuvigny 2008. 196–7; and for illustrations of such straps in theatrical scenes on vases, e. g.

---

202 Corrected in Montanari, which unfortunately also both misdefines the word and offers a bad reference ("to have a muzzle ARISTOPH. Av. 863").

203 Σ$^{\text{VEI}^2\text{M}}$ Av. 861 ἐμπεφορβιωμένον·^{E} φορβειά ἐστιν ὁ χαλινός.$^{\text{VEI}^2\text{M}}$ Ἡρωδιανὸς ἐν τῇ ⟨ … ⟩ βίβλῳ φησὶ τῆς Ὀδυσσειακῆς προσῳδίας (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 134.22–4) τὸ φορβειά διὰ τῆς ει διφθόγγου γράφεσθαι καὶ ὀξυτόνως$^{\text{VEI}^2}$ ("empephorbiômenon:^{E} a phorbeia is a bridle.$^{\text{VEI}^2\text{M}}$ Herodian says in Book ⟨ … ⟩ of Prosody of the Odyssey (Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 134.22–4) that phorbeia is written with the diphthong ei and an acute accent on the final syllable$^{\text{VEI}^2}$").

Beazley 1955 pll. 85–6; Agora P 30030 (illustrated at Rotroff–Oakley 1992 pl. 22.54), 32870 (illustrated at Camp 1999. 257 and Kárpáti 2012 (third plate)). For the theatrical piper, most likely but not necessarily the individual in question here, cf. fr. 308 with n., and see Taplin 1993. 70–8, 101–10 with pl. 24.28 (the Getty Birds); Wilson 2002.

fr. 450 K.–A. (409 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 21.1–2
αὔεσθαι πῦρ καὶ ἐναύεσθαι· Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 784) αὐόμενος, Κρατῖνος ἐ ν α ύ ε σ θ α ι auesthai pyr ("to kindle oneself a fire") and enauesthai ("to light oneself a fire"): Aristophanes (fr. 784) (said) "kindling oneself a fire", Cratinus "t o l i g h t o n e s e l f a f i r e"

Phot. α 3155
αὔεσθαι πῦρ καὶ ἐναύεσθαι· Ὅμηρος εἶπεν (Od. 5.490) καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 784) καὶ Κρατῖνος

auesthai pyr ("to kindle a fire") and enauesthai ("to light oneself a fire"): Homer used the word (Od. 5.490), as did Aristophanes (fr. 784) and Cratinus

Citation context The note in Photius is merely a slightly different version of the passage from Phrynichus (heavily epitomized in the form in which it has come down to us); for the reference to the Odyssey, see Interpretation.

Interpretation Od. 5.490 (referenced by Photius, in what is probably in origin an uncomprehending addition to the text of Phrynichus by a later scholar) has σπέρμα πυρὸς σῴζων, ἵνα μή ποθεν ἄλλοθεν αὔοι ("preserving a spark of fire, so that he does not need to get a light from somewhere else"). The point of the note, however, would seem to be that although αὔω (poetic) and the more common ἐναύω normally occur in the active in reference to furnishing fire to another person (Diph. fr. 62.3 πῦρ ἐναύσει(ε); Hdt. 7.231 πῦρ … ἔναυε; X. Mem. 2.2.12 πῦρ ἐναύῃ), colloquial Attic also used the middle to describe getting a light for oneself, hence the presence of this usage in Atticizing authors of the Roman period (e. g. Plu. Arist. 20.4; Ael. fr. 105; Luc. DMar. 2.2; Longin. 3.6.3; cf. Paus.Gr. π 44 πύραυνος· ὁ τὸ πῦρ ἐναυόμενος, "a pan of coals: someone who lights himself a fire").[204]

[204] LSJ s. v. (followed by Montanari s. v.) notes that Cratinus uses the middle of the verb, but misses the fragment of Aristophanes and fails to see the significance of the passages in the comic poets for the passages it cites from Lucian and Plutarch.

fr. 451 K.–A. (410 K.)

Σ^{REM} Ar. Nu. 790
ἐπιλησμότατον·[M] ἔδει εἰπεῖν ἐπιλησμονέστατον. Ἄλεξις (fr. 317) δὲ ἐπιλήσμη φησί, Κρατῖνος δὲ ἐ π ι λ ῆ σ μ ο ν (ἐπιλῆσμον Σ^{EM} : ἐπιλησμ Σ^{R} (ἐπιλησμοσυνη leg. Martin) : ἐπιλησμοσύνη Suda : ἐπιλησμονή Bergk)^{REM}

epilêsmotaton ("utterly forgetful"):[M] he should have said epilêsmonestaton. Alexis (fr. 317) says epilêsmê ("forgetful"), and Cratinus (says) e p i l ê s m o n (thus Σ^{EM} : epilêsm Σ^{R} (epilêsmosynê read by Martin) : epilêsmosynê Suda : epilêsmonê Bergk)^{REM}

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.223; Kock 1880 I.123

Text ἐπιλήσμων is not rare (see Interpretation), and what is expected in this note is not a simple form of the adjective (as in Σ^{EM}) but either a cognate noun parallel to Alexis' ἐπιλήσμη (as in the Suda and perhaps originally in Σ^{R}) or another unusual comparative or superlative form (like Aristophanes' ἐπιλησμότατον). ἐπιλῆσμον in Σ^{EM} might accordingly represent a simplest-possible-solution attempt to deal with a problematic exemplar, although in that case whether Cratinus wrote ἐπιλησμοσύνη (as in the Suda) or e. g. ἐπιλησμότερος for the expected ἐπιλησμονέστερος (X. Ap. 6) is impossible to say. Bergk's ἐπιλησμονή (accepted in LSJ) is an attempt to make sense of ἐπιλήσμονι, which was in his time taken to be the reading in the Suda.

Citation context A gloss on Socrates' denunciation of Strepsiades at Ar. Nu. 790 as an "utterly forgetful and thoroughly backwards little old man"; taken over from the scholia at Suda ε 2444 (from a damaged exemplar offering something ~ the text in R, which the scribe then supplemented to read ἐπιλησμοσύνη?). Note also Et.Gen. AB ἐπιλησμότατον· ὡς σωφρονέστατον ἐπιλησμονέστατον. ἐκ τοῦ λήθω ("epilêsmotaton: like sôphronestaton epilêsmonestaton. From lêthô ('forget')") (= Philox. fr. *341).

Interpretation ἐπιλήσμων ("forgetful") is apparently colloquial Attic (e. g. fr. 162; Metag. fr. 2.2; Ar. Nu. 485; Lys. 1288; Lys. 12.87; X. Mem. 4.8.8; Pl. Tht. 194e) and is used of persons, especially the elderly; ἀμνήμων is a more elevated synonym (e. g. A. Th. 606; S. fr. 920; E. HF 1397; Ph. 64). If Cratinus wrote ἐπιλῆσμον, therefore, this is likely either a vocative or originally modified e. g. γερόντιον (the word used at Ar. Nu. 790).[205] n-stem adjectives typically form comparatives and superlatives with the suffixes -εστερος and -εστατος after the model of s-stems like ἀληθής ("true"); thus e. g. εὐδαίμων ("happy") yields comparative εὐδαιμονέστερος and superlative εὐδαιμονέστατος; for the spread of -εστερος and -εστατος to other stems, see Wackernagel 1953 I.773–4 (with examples); Meissner 2006. 178–9. There are nonetheless occasional traces of an earlier state of affairs in which -τερος and -τατος were added directly to the stem: e. g. σώφρων ("prudent") yields comparative σωφράτερος (Hsch. σ 3105) alongside the more common σωφρονέστερος, while πίων ("rich") yields comparative πιότερος (hAp. 48) and superlative πιότατος (Il. 9.577). Aristophanes' ἐπιλησμότατον may thus be an archaism or may instead simply be formed metri causa on the model of older forms. See in general Schwyzer 1953 I.535; Rix 1976. 169–70.

[205] Montanari pointlessly invents an unlikely second-declension neuter noun ἐπιλῆσμον ("forgetfulness"), for which Cratinus is supposedly the only witness.

fr. 452 K.–A. (411 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 10.12–17
ἀρρωστία· σημαίνει μὲν πολλαχοῦ τὴν νόσον, ἀλλὰ καὶ διαφέρει, ὅτι ἡ μὲν νόσος ἐστὶ καὶ μακρὰ καὶ ὀλιγοχρόνιος, ἡ δὲ ἀρρωστία τὴν μακροχρόνιον δηλοῖ. οἱ μέντοι Ἀττικοὶ τὴν ἀρρωστίαν ἐπὶ τοῦ μὴ προθυμεῖσθαι μηδὲ ὁρμᾶν πρᾶξαι τιθέασι. τὸ γὰρ ἀντικείμενον τῇ τοιαύτῃ ἀρρωστίᾳ Κρατῖνος εἶπεν ἐ ρ ρ ῶ σ θ α ι, οἷον προθυμεῖσθαι arrôstia: This often signifies nosos ("illness"), but is also different, because nosos is both long-term and temporary, whereas arrôstia denotes a chronic illness. Attic-speakers, however, use arrôstia in place of mê prothymeisthai mêde horman praxai ("not to be eager or to rush to act"). For Cratinus used e r r ô s t h a i (properly "to be strong") as an antonym of arrôstia (properly "a lack of strength") of this sort, meaning as if it were prothymeisthai ("to be eager")

Citation context Identified by de Borries as in origin a gloss on Th. 3.15.2 ἀρρωστίᾳ τοῦ στρατεύειν ("a lack of eagerness for military action").

Interpretation ἐρρῶμαι (perf. mid.-pass. < ῥώννυμι, "strengthen", perhaps related to ῥώομαι, "move briskly, dance", and Hitt. šarḫiie/a-, "attack" vel sim.; cf. Kloekhorst 2008 s. v.; Beekes 2010 s. v.) is common in prose (e. g. Hdt. 9.70.1 (the participle used adjectivally); Lys. 24.7; Isoc. 15.115; X. HG 3.4.29; Pl. Smp. 210d) but rare in comedy (Ar. V. 1161; Men. Epitr. 899), where it often means "farewell" (e. g. Antiph. fr. 88.2; Men. Georg. 84) and in tragedy (only [A.] PV 65, 72; [E.] Rh. 668). For the sense "be eager", cf. (in addition to the passages cited at LSJ s. v. II.2 and Montanari s. v. 2) the adverb ἐρρωμένως ("vigorously, quickly" vel sim.) at Ar. V. 230, 1161; Aristopho fr. 13.5.

fr. 453 K.–A. (412 K.)

Phryn. Ecl. 114
ζωρότερον ὁ ποιητής (Il. 9.203), σὺ δὲ λέγε ε ὔ ζ ω ρ ο ν κέρασον καὶ εὐζωρότερον, ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης (Ec. 137, 227) καὶ Κρατῖνος καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 452)

The poet says zôroteron (Il. 9.203), but you should say "mix e u z ô r o n!" and "euzôroteron!", like Aristophanes (Ec. 137, 227) and Cratinus and Eupolis (fr. 452)

Meter The formatting in Kassel–Austin makes it clear that they take the word used by Cratinus and Eupolis to be εὔζωρον, presumably because that is what Aristophanes has at Ec. 137, 227. But rho makes position neither in κέρασον (⏑⏑⏑ at Ar. Pax 998; Ec. 1123; Antiph. fr. 137 κέρασον εὐζωρέστερον /; cf. κεράσῃ ⏑⏑– at Antiph. fr. 85.2) nor in comparative adjectives ending in -ότερος, and εὔζωρον κέρασον can thus be accommodated in iambic trimeter (e.g. ⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑⟩|– ––⏑⏑×), as can εὐζωρότερον.

Citation context 2nd-c. CE advice on how to speak or write "proper" (i.e. 5th-century BCE) Attic Greek, on the basis of good 5th-century exemplars and via contrast with what might otherwise be taken to be properly sophisticated vocabulary.

Interpretation ζωρός is a Homeric hapax at Il. 9.203 (Achilleus orders Patroclus to mix wine for Agamemnon's ambassadors; comparative). The etymology and thus the meaning of the adjective was—and remains—obscure (ancient discussion at e.g. [Arist.] Po. 1461a14–16; Thphr. fr. 574; Plu. Mor. 677c–8b; Ath. 10.423c–4a; note the learned allusions to the question at A.R. 1.477 and Asclep. AP 12.50.5 = ep. XVI.5 πίνωμεν Βάκχου ζωρὸν πόμα with Sens 2011 ad loc., and the "quotation" of Homer at Ephipp. fr. 10.2 κεράσας ζωρότερον Ὁμηρικῶς; for various modern opinions on the etymology, see Chantraine 1986 s. v.; Derksen 2008 s. v. *erъ II; Beekes 2010 s. v.). By the classical period, the word seems to have generally been taken to mean "unmixed, undiluted" (Hdt. 6.84.3; Thphr. Char. 4.6 with Diggle 2004 ad loc.; cf. in general Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 73–5). εὔζωρος, on the other hand, is an Atticism (E. Alc. 757 πίνει μελαίνης μητρὸς εὔζωρον μέθυ; Antiph. fr. 137 (quoted in Meter); Ephipp. fr. 3.11 = Eub. fr. dub. 148.8 πίνειν τε πολλὰς κύλικας εὐζωρεστέρας; Diph. fr. 57.2 (contrasted with ὑδαρές); and the eiresionê hymn quoted at Plu. Thes. 22.7 καὶ κύλικ' εὔζωρον, ὡς ἂν μεθύουσα καθεύδῃ; in prose at Hp. Morb. III 14 = 7.136.8 Littré οἶνον αὐτίτην πινέτω εὔζωρον), hence Phrynichus' advice to adopt it, as well as the use of it by the over-the-top Second Sophistic Atticist Eudemos at Luc. Lex. 14.

fr. 454 K.–A. (413 K.)

Poll. 3.106
ἐπιθανάτως ἔχειν (sic Poll. : εὐθανάτως ἔχειν Kock), καὶ ὡς Ἡρόδοτος (9.72.2) ἐδυσθανάτεε, οὗ τὸ ἐναντίον ε ὐ θ α ν ά τ ω ς Κρατῖνος λέγει

epithanatôs exein ("to be at death's door") (thus Poll. : "to be eager to die" Kock), and as Herodotus (9.72.2) (says) edysthanatee ("was loath to die"), the opposite of which, e u t h a n a t ô s ("w i t h a h a p p y d e a t h"), Cratinus uses

Discussion Kock 1880 I.124

Citation context From a long collection of words having to do with poor health and sickness.

Interpretation εὐθανάτως is attested elsewhere before the Hellenistic period only at Men. fr. 871.9 οὐκ εὐθανάτως ἀπῆλθεν ("he did not depart with a happy death"). For the adjective εὐθάνατος ("eager to die"), cf. Men. fr. 25.3–4 μόνος μοι θάνατος οὗτος φαίνεται / εὐθάνατος ("this death alone seems to me a pleasant one"; otherwise late and prosaic). For εὐθανασία ("a happy death"), cf. Posidipp. fr. 19.2.

fr. 455 K.–A. (414 K.)

Poll. 7.43
ἐνδὺς γὰρ καὶ εἱμένος καὶ ἐπιειμένος, οὐ κατὰ πεζὴν ἂν εἴη ταῦτα τὴν χρῆσιν. ἴσως δὲ καὶ εὐσταλής, καὶ ὁ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ ε ὐ π ι ν ὴ ς τούτοις ἂν ἐνάριθμον εἴη, καὶ τὸ εὐσταλῶς ἐπίρρημα

For endys ("getting dressed") and heimenos ("clothed") and epieimenos ("wearing an outer garment")—these would not be congruent with prosaic usage. And perhaps also eustalês ("well-dressed"), and e u p i n ê s in Cratinus might be counted among these (sc. distinctly poetic words), as well as the adverb eustalôs ("in a well-dressed fashion")

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.213

Citation context From a collection of words pertaining to clothes. εὐπινής appears again in Pollux at 9.162 εὐπινές, in a list of words in εὐ- that also includes εὐσταλές (cf. εὐσταλῶς here).

Interpretation εὐπινής is < πίνος ("dirt") and—despite Hsch. ε 7075 εὐπινῆ· πεπινωμένον ("eupinê: dirtied"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus)—means "well as regards dirt", i. e. "tidy", in the only other attestation of the word before the Roman period (E. fr. 494 οὐδ' ἐρημίᾳ γυναικὸς οἶκος εὐπινὴς οὐδ' ὄλβιος, "a house lacking a woman is not tidy or prosperous"), as presumably in Cratinus.[206] Contrast δυσπινής ("ill as regards dirt", i. e. "squalid"; Ar. Ach. 426 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; S. OC 1597) and κακοπινής ("bad as regards dirt", i. e. "filthy"; S. Ai. 381). Cf. Phot. ε 2287 εὐπινές· τὸ ἀφελὲς καὶ μὴ λίαν τετημελημένον, ἀλλὰ μέτριον πίνον ἔχον ("eupines: something simple and not excessively artificial, but having a modest pinos"); Et.Gen. AB εὐπινής· εὐειδής· πίνος γὰρ τὸ εἶδος ("eupinês: with an attractive appearance, for pinos means 'form'").

fr. 456 K.–A. (415 K.)

Et.Gen. AB (EM p. 402.39–45)
ἐ φ ε τ ί ν δ α· ὄνομα παιδιᾶς (φενακικῶς add. EM). ὡς γὰρ Ἀριστοφάνης τὸ ὀστρακίνδα παρὰ τὸ ὄστρακον ἀνέπλασεν αἰνιττόμενος τὸν ἐξοστρακισμζόν (Eq. 855), οὕτω Κρατῖνος (Κράτης Et.Sym.[V] ap. Gaisford) ἀνέπλασε τὸ ἐφετίνδα παρὰ τὰς ἐν τοῖς δικαστηρίοις γενομένας ἐφέσεις. παρὰ οὖν τὴν ἔφεσιν ἐφετίνδα παιδιὰν κατὰ τροπὴν τοῦ σ εἰς τ, καὶ γὰρ ἐφέτης λέγεται ὁ πέμπων τὴν ἔφεσιν

e p h e t i n d a: a name of a game ("with a pun" added by EM). For just as Aristophanes coined ostrakinda from ostrakon, punning on exostrakismos ("ostracism") (Eq. 855), so Cratinus ("Crates" Et.Sym.[V] in Gaisford) coined ephetinda from the epheseis ("appeals") made in the courts. Therefore (he coined) a game of ephetinda by reference to an ephesis ("appeal") via a substitution of sigma for tau; for the one who sends an appeal is in fact called an ephetês

Discussion Meineke 1839 I.65; Kock 1880 I.124; Kaibel ap. K.–A.; Bonanno 1972. 161–2

Citation context An isolated lexicographic entry.

Interpretation The Et.Gen. does not attempt to define ἐφετίνδα, but merely notes that Cratinus mentioned the game, following the observation up with an unlikely etymology that nonetheless recognizes that the word must be cognate with ἐφίημι ("send to, send against" vel sim.). ephetinda is described as a game in which one tried to fool the person to whom a ball was thrown by pretending to throw it to someone else at Hsch. ε 7420 ἐφετίνδα· εἶδος παιδιᾶς, ὅταν σφαῖραν ἄλλῃ προτείναντες ἀλλαχῇ βάλλωσι ("ephetinda: a kind of game, when they extend a ball in one direction but then throw it elsewhere"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus); Phot. ε 2419 ἐφετίνδα· παιδιά τις, ὅταν ἄλλῳ προδείξαντες τὴν σφαῖραν ἄλλῳ ἐφῶσιν ("ephetinda: a game, when they show a ball to one person but then release it to another"), both of which clearly go back to a single source that Erbse took to be the Atticist lexicographer Pausanias (ε 86). But this sounds very much like φαινίνδα ("show-game") as described at Antiph. fr. 231 ap. Ath. 1.14f–15b; Poll. 9.103, 105), and Poll. 9.117 describes ephetinda in a different way (ἡ δὲ ἐφεντίνδα, ὡς ἔστιν εἰκάζειν, ὄστρακον ἐφέντα ἐς κύκλον ἐχρῆν συμμετρήσασθαι, ὡς ἐντὸς τοῦ κύκλου στῇ ("ephetinda, apparently, required releasing a pot-shard into a circle and calculating how it would stay inside the circle", i. e. precisely how much force was necessary to get it into the circle but no further), suggesting that one source or the other is confused.

---

[206] Picked up as a rhetorical term ("elegant") at Longin. 30.1; Cic. Att. 12.6a.2 Caesar autem mihi irridere visus est 'quaeso' illud tuum, quod erat et εὐπινὲς et urbanum ("I thought Caesar was making fun of your 'I pray', which was eupines and in good taste"); 15.17.2.

The suffix -ινδα was used in Attic to form "adverbs of game", e. g. ἀκινητίνδα ("unmoving-game", a contest to see who could stay still the longest, presumably despite provocation; Poll. 9.115); ἀποδιδρασκίνδα ("run-away-game",[207] in which one boy covered his eyes while the others ran away, and as he searched for them, they tried to claim the place where he sat at the beginning, ~ Kick-the-Can; Poll. 9.117); βασιλίνδα ("king-game",[208] in which one boy was king, and the other or others had to obey his orders; Poll. 9.110; Hsch. β 284 = Ael. Dion. β 10); διελκυστίνδα ("drag-through-game", a tug-of-war-style struggle between two teams each trying to take physical control of the other; Poll. 9.112; Hsch. δ 1580); κυβησίνδα (~ piggy-back-rides, but with the "piggy's" eyes covered;[209] Poll. 9.122; Hsch. κ 4385; Phot. κ 1152; referred to as ἐγκοτύλη or ἐν κοτύλῃ at Ath. 11.479a); κυνητίνδα ("kiss-game"; Poll. 9.114, citing Crates Com. fr. 27); ληκίνδα ("time-clapping-game" < ληκέω, "clap time" (cf. Ath. 1.15d; Luc. Lex. 8 (an ostentatious Atticism));[210] μυΐνδα[211]

---

[207] Garbled in Montanari s. v., "at running away, all but one" (sic).

[208] Garbled at Montanari s. v. "a king's game". This is the game played by the still-unrecognized Cyrus and the other Persian boys at Hdt. 1.114.1–3 (thus Suda κ 2777).

[209] Garbled at Montanari s. v. "by carrying on the shoulders"; Pollux says specifically that the boy being ridden put his hands behind his back and joined them, producing a shelf on which the rider rested his knees.

[210] Cf. Hsch. λ 847 ληκεῖν· ⟨ … ⟩ τὸ πρὸς ᾠδὴν ὀρχεῖσθαι ("lêkein: ⟨ … ⟩ to dance to a song"), 849 ληκεῖ· ψοφεῖ. βοᾷ. κροτεῖ ("lêkei: he makes a noise, shouts, claps"). Montanari's "drum one's fingers" finds no support in the ancient sources.

[211] Omitted from Montanari.

("closed-eyes-game", ~ Blind-man's Bluff and apparently very similar to δραπετίνδα, "runaway-game"; Poll. 9.113; Hsch. μ 1815 ~ Phot. μ 580 = Paus. Gr. μ 24); ὀστρακίνδα ("pot-shard-game", in which one team chased the other, depending on which side of the shard came up when it was dropped; Ar. Eq. 855; Poll. 9.111–12; Hsch. ο 1459 ~ Phot. ο 570); πλειστοβολίνδα ("largest-throw-game", a dice or knuckle-bone game in which the aim was to get the highest total score; Poll. 7.206; 9.95–6 (citing Amips. fr. 19), 117; Hsch. π 2517); ποσίνδα ("how-many-game", in which two or more players held out fingers and simultaneously tried to guess the total number of fingers that would be shown; X. Eq.Mag. 5.10); στρεπτίνδα ("turn-game", striking one coin or pot-shard with another in an attempt to make the target flip over; Poll. 9.117); σχοινοφιλίνδα ("rope-like-game", in which a group of boys sat in a circle, one of them concealing a rope, and either the boy holding the rope or the one sitting next to him was chased around the circle and beaten, depending on whether the rope-holder's identity was guessed, ~ a more violent "Duck, Duck, Goose";[212] Poll. 9.115); χαλκίνδα ("bronze-coin-game", spinning a coin and then attempting to stop it, still standing upright, with a finger; Herod. 3.6 with Headlam 1922 ad loc.; Hsch. χ 91); χυτρίνδα ("cookpot-game", in which one boy sat in the middle and the others ran around and teased or struck him until he caught one of them, who then in turn became the "cookpot";[213] Poll. 9.113; Hsch. χ 850; Suda χ 619); φρυγίνδα ("roasting-game", holding thin potsherds or crustacean shells between the fingers of the left hand and striking them rhythmically with the right hand (sc. to produce an interesting noise?), according to Poll. 9.114; played with beans, according to Hsch. φ 928);[214] ψηλαφίνδα[215] ("grope-game", in which one boy wore a blindfold and tried to identify the others by touch; Phryn. PS p. 128.3–5). Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 495.20–1 adds ἐπαιτίνδα ("beggar-game" < ἐπαιτέω), ξιφίνδα ("sword-game" < ξίφος), δαληκίνδα[216] ("firebrand-game" < δαλός, "fire-brand, burning piece of wood"[217]), but offers no explanation of what these games involved.[218]

---

[212] Known as "Duck, Duck, Gray Duck" in Minnesota.
[213] Garbled at Montanari s. v. "in a pot".
[214] LSJ s. v. offers "φρυγίνδα παίζειν, play with roasted beans" (followed by Montanari, who mysteriously cites Pollux for the definition), which attempts to explain the word by means of its etymology without really making sense of it.
[215] Omitted from LSJ and Montanari.
[216] Omitted from LSJ and Montanari.
[217] Misdefined as "ember" in Montanari s. v.
[218] Neither of the last two sounds like much fun.

fr. 457 K.–A. (416 K.)

Poll. 6.161
ἡμίλουτοι δὲ Κρατῖνος εἴρηκε

And Cratinus says hêmiloutoi ("half-washed")

Citation context From a long catalogue of words beginning with ἡμι-.

Interpretation A hapax legomenon; cf. Lat. semilautus ("half-washed"), used at Catul. 54.2 of crura ("legs") and signaling an unattractive rustic squalor. For the compound in ἡμι-, cf. from comedy (mostly drawn from the same section of Pollux) ἡμίβρωτος ("half-eaten"; Antiph. fr. 89.2), ἡμίγραφος ("half-written"; Men. fr. 626), ἡμιμάσητος ("half-chewed"; Crates Com. fr. 55), ἡμίπλεκτος ("half-plaited"; Philyll. fr. 31). The only other compounds in -λουτος are ἄλουτος ("unwashed"; Ar. Av. 1554; E. El. 1107) and νεόλουτος ("freshly washed"; hHerm. 241). That the average person bathed on a regular basis is taken for granted in Aristophanes at least (see Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 17); for bathhouses, e. g. [X.] Ath. 2.10 (numerous public bathing facilities as characteristic of late 5th-century democratic Athens); Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 490.

fr. 458 K.–A. (417 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 74.7–8
θ ε ό θ υ τ α· ἃ οἱ πολλοὶ ἱερόθυτα καλοῦσι. Κρατῖνος. τὰ τοῖς θεοῖς θυόμενα ἱερεῖα t h e o t h y t a: what most people call hierothyta ("sacrifices"). Cratinus. Victims sacrificed to the gods Meter The upsilon is short.

Citation context Phryn. Ecl. 130 ἱερόθυτον οὐκ ἐρεῖς, ἀλλ' ἀρχαίως θεόθυτον ("you shall not say hierothyton, but in accord with older models theothyton") is another remnant of the same original passage of Phrynichus. Note also

- Poll. 1.29 ἰστέον δ' ὅτι τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἱερείων κρέα θεόθυτα καλεῖται ("it should be known that the meat from sacrificial victims is called theothyta"; from a large collection of terms for offerings to the gods)
- Hsch. θ 266 = Phot. θ 87 θεόθυτα· ἱερόθυτα ("theothyta: hierothyta ('sacrifices')"; traced to Diogenianus by Latte).

Interpretation θεόθυτον is attested nowhere outside of the passages cited above, and Phrynichus' ἀρχαίως may mean nothing more than that the word was found once in an early Attic author, i. e. Cratinus. In most such compounds, θεο- has either a possessive or an instrumental sense, but cf. the dative sense in θεοφιλής (e. g. of a festival at Ar. Ra. 443/4)[219] and in θεοδαίσια (the Cretan name for the Dionysia) and θεοξενία. Compounds in -θυτος are relatively rare and are mostly confined to elevated contexts, esp. choral lyric: e. g. βούθυτος ("pertaining to sacrifices of oxen"; A. Supp. 706; S. OC 1495; E. Hel. 1474; etc.); ἱερόθυτος ("offered to a god"; e. g. Pi. fr. 78.3; Ar. Av. 1266 with Dunbar 1996 ad loc.). For sacrifice in general, see Naiden 2013 (with extensive bibliography).

fr. 459 K.–A. (418 K.)

Phot. θ 157
θ η λ ά σ τ ρ ι α ν· ἣν θηλάσεταί τις ἰδίως. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

t h ê l a s t r i a (acc.): idiosyncratically, a female child someone will suckle.[220] Thus Cratinus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.200

Citation context A lexicographic note. Related material, perhaps all going back to the same source, is preserved at

- Moer. θ 21 θηλάστριαν· τῶν παίδων τὴν τροφὸν διὰ τὴν θηλήν ("thêlastria (acc.): the woman who nurses children, from thêlê ('teat')")
- Poll. 3.50 τὴν δὲ θηλάζουσαν Εὔπολις (fr. 455) τιτθὴν θηλάστριαν ὠνόμασεν ("Eupolis (fr. 455) called the wet-nurse who suckles a child a thêlastria")
- Hsch. θ 484 θηλάστρια· τροφός. ἔστι δὲ Ἰακόν. Σοφοκλῆς Ἀλεξάνδρῳ (fr. 98) ("thêlastria: a nurse. This is Ionian vocabulary. Sophocles in Alexandros (fr. 98)"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).

Interpretation θηλάστρια is < θηλάζω ("suckle") + -τρια, a feminine suffix corresponding to masculine -της and common in words for occupations and the like: e. g. ἀνδρεράστρια ("lover of men"; Ar. Th. 392), βάπτρια ("dyer-woman"; Eup. fr. 434), ἰάτρια ("female doctor"; Alex. fr. 319), κιθαρίστρια [219] Most other -φίλης compounds have the sense "fond of X".

---

[220] Not "wet nurse" (Storey 2011. 433), which ignores the gloss in the citation context.

("female lyre-player"; e. g. Theophil. fr. 12.5), κλέπτρια ("female thief"; Sotad. Com. fr. 2), κομμώτρια (a slave who tends her mistress' appearance; Ar. Ec. 737), λαικάστρια ("cocksucker"; e. g. Pherecr. fr. 159.2), λαχανοπωλήτρια ("female vegetable-vendor"; Ar. Th. 387), μεθύστρια ("female drunk"; Theopomp. Com. fr. 94), μισθώτρια ("female tenant"?; Phryn. Com. fr. 84), πανδοκεύτρια ("inn-keeper-woman"; e. g. Eup. fr. 9), παρατίλτρια (a slave who plucks hairs from her mistress' body; fr. 276.3), ποάστρια ("weeder-woman" vel sim.; e. g. Archipp. fr. 46.2), συβώτρια ("female swineherd"; Pl. Com. fr. 209.1), τρυγήτρια ("female harvest-worker"; D. 57.45), and see Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 434 for numerous other examples. Such forms are mostly Attic (although note ἀκέστριαι, "seamstresses", as the title of a mime by Sophron) and clearly colloquial, and some of those in comedy seem to be facetious nonce-formations (Peppler 1918. 178–80). Cf. fr. 475 n., and see in general Chantraine 1933. 106–7; Schwyzer 1953 I.475; Silk 1985. 240–4. As Photius' "idiosyncratically" makes clear, the expected meaning of θηλάστρια is thus "suckler", i. e. "wetnurse" (see Ar. Th. 608–9 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 455; S. fr. 98 (see Citation context)) rather than "suckling". But θηλάζω, from which θηλάστρια derives, can mean both "suckle" (LSJ s. v. I) and "suck" (LSJ s. v. II), hence presumably Cratinus' innovation.[221]

fr. 460 K.–A. (419 K.)

Phot. ι 293
Ἰ ω ν ό κ υ σ ο ς· κατεαγώς· οὕτως Κρατῖνος

I ô n o k y s o s: effeminate; thus Cratinus

Meter The upsilon is long, and the word is easily accommodated in iambic trimeter.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.200; Kock 1880 I.124

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation Ἰωνόκυσος is < Ἴων ("Ionian") + κυσός[222], "ass" and by extension "asshole" when anal sex with a male is in question (adesp. com. fr. 169

[221] This meaning of the word is ignored in LSJ (which nonetheless cites fr. 459) and Montanari s. v.

[222] Whether κύσθος (Eup. fr. 247.4 with Olson 2016 ad loc.) is actually the same word is unclear..

ap. Et.Gen. A^{II}B ἐγχυσίχωλος; Hsch. κ 4738 κυσός· πυγή· ἢ γυναικεῖον αἰδοῖον, "kysos: butt, or female genitals"); cf. κυσιάω ("to be sexually passive";[223] adesp. com. fr. 378); κυσοβάκκαρις[224] ("one who perfumes his asshole"; adesp. com. fr. 378); κυσολάκων ("asshole-Laconian", i. e. "pederast";[225] adesp. com. fr. 511); κυσολέσχης (~ "obscene talker"; adesp. com. fr. 186); κυσοχήνη ("anus-gaping" vel sim.; Hippon. fr. 83.2 (conjectural)). Ἰωνόκυσος has recourse to the stereotype of Ionians as cowardly and effeminate (Ar. Ach. 104 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; Pax 932–3; Th. 160–3 with Austin–Olson 2004 ad loc.; Ec. 920; Pl. R. 398e; Plaut. St. 769; Hsch. ι 1200 Ἰωνικόν· τρυφερόν· ἢ ἐπὶ τοῦ κατεαγότος καὶ θηλυκοῦ. ἐπὶ τούτῳ γὰρ ἐκωμῳδοῦντο οἱ Ἴωνες, "Ionic: delicate; or in reference to a man who is effeminate and womanly. For the Ionians were mocked for this in comedy"); Goebel 1915. 105–7. Whether Ἰωνοκάμπτης ("Ionian song-bender") at Timoth. PMG 802.3 (a testimonium rather than a fragment) is intended to be insulting is unclear, but the word is reserved for the end of the line, suggesting that it might be.

fr. 461 K.–A. (420 K.)

Poll. 7.142
κ α λ α μ ώ μ ε ν ο ν δὲ Κρατῖνος εἴρηκεν

But Cratinus says g l e a n i n g (masc. acc. sing. or neut. nom/.acc. sing.)

Citation context From a large collection of words pertaining to botany and horticulture. Cf. Phot. κ 107 = Suda κ 198 = Synag. κ 47 καλαμώμενος· σταχυολογῶν ("kalamômenos: gleaning grain"; from the common source generally referred to as Σ′), which Erbse traced to Ael. Dion. κ *5 and which shows that the verb was of interest to Atticist lexicographers.

Interpretation A καλάμη is a "stalk" and thus collectively "stubble" (Hsch. κ 398), and καλαμάομαι is "glean", i. e. "follow the harvesters and gather what they have dropped or missed". Cf. in addition to the material cited above

– Ecclesiastes 30:25 LXX ὡς καλαμώμενος ὀπίσω τρυγητῶν ("like a gleaner behind the harvesters")

---

223 Misdefined as "to feel lust" at Montanari s. v.
224 Omitted from Montanari.
225 Misdefined as "homosexual" at Montanari s. v.

– Hsch. ε 5136 ἐπιρρωγολογοῦσι· καλαμωμένοις ἀμπελῶνα ("second-pass grape-collectors: those who glean a vineyard")
– Hsch. κ 407 καλαμώμενον· καλαμᾶσθαι λέγουσιν, ὅταν ἐκ τῶν τετρυγημένων ἀπολείμματά τινα συνάγωσιν ἢ στάχυας ("gleaning: they use the term kalamasthai whenever they collect remnants of harvested crops or reaped grain").

For gleaning (a survival strategy practiced by the poor), cf. Theoc. 3.32 (although Gow 1952 ad loc. rejects this interpretation of the text); Scheidel 1996. 2. A woman who gleaned was a καλαμητρίς (Hsch. κ 399).

fr. 462 K.–A. (334 K.)

Σ^{RV} Ar. V. 151
ὅστις πατρὸς νῦν Καπνίου κεκλήσομαι· τὸν ὑπεκλυόμενον οἶνόν φασί τινες κ α π ν ί α ν λέγεσθαι· ἐν δὲ τοῖς περὶ Κρατίνου (test. 41) διώρισται ὅτι τὸν ἀπόθετον ἢ καὶ παλαιόν· διὸ καὶ Ἐκφαντίδην Καπνίαν καλοῦσιν

I who will now be called the son of Smokey: some authorities assert that diluted wine is called k a p n i a s ("smokey"). But in the commentaries on Cratinus (test. 41) it is defined as wine that is reserved for special occasions[226] or is quite old; for which reason they also refer to Ecphantides as Kapnias

Discussion Naekius 1817. 53; Meineke 1839 I.36; Kock 1880 I.111

Citation context A vague if seemingly well-informed note (from Didymus?; thus Schneider 1838. 15) on Ar. V. 151 (a mock lament by Bdelycleon, who has just caught his father coming out of the smoke-hole in their roof). Another version of the same material, but without mention of Cratinus, is preserved at Hsch. κ 716 Καπνίας· Ἐκφαντίδης ὁ τῆς κωμῳδίας ποιητὴς (test. 5) Καπνίας ἐπεκαλεῖτο διὰ τὸ μηδὲν λαμπρὸν γράφειν. καὶ οἶνος δὲ καπνίας λέγεται ὁ κεκαπνισμένος. καὶ κάπνιος ἄμπελος ἡ μέλαινα ("Kapnias: The comic poet Ecphantides (test. 5) was nicknamed Kapnias ('Smokey') because he wrote nothing brilliant. Wine that has been treated with smoke is also called kapnias. And kapnios is a dark-colored grape vine"; traced by Latte to Diogenianus).[227]

---

[226] Storey 2011. 431 translates "discarded", a sense for which LSJ s. v. provides no parallels.
[227] A condensed version of the initial portion of the note is also preserved at Phot. κ 168.

Interpretation Kassel–Austin's use of expanded spacing makes it clear that they regard the reference to the comic poet Ecphantides (PA 4654; PAA 384735), first victorious at the City Dionysia in the early 450s BCE (IG II^2 2325C.13) and thus Cratinus' rough contemporary (cf. mentions of him at frr. 361.1 with n.; 502 with n.), as Kapnias to be drawn from one of Cratinus' own plays. What the scholion to Wasps reports, however, is merely that Cratinus used the word in a way that allowed it to be understood as referring in the first instance to wine, and the reference to Ecphantides might better have been treated as an adespoton fragment.

καπνίας wine is also mentioned at Pherecr. fr. 137.6; Pl. Com. fr. 274; Anaxandr. fr. 42.71 with Millis 2015 ad loc. The scholion clearly has no idea what this is, although the obvious possibilities would seem to be that the adjective was used of wine that came from a variety of grapevine called κάπνειος (Thphr. HP 2.3.2; thus LSJ s. v. II.1 as an alternative explanation to the one offered by the lexicographers) or that had been exposed to smoke (thus Hsch. κ 716 = Phot. κ 167) either to alter its taste or color or to hasten its aging (cf. Colum. 1.6.20 apothecae recte superponentur his locis, unde plerumque fumus exoritur, quoniam vina celerius vetustescunt, quae fumo quodam genere praecoquem maturitatem trahunt, "storerooms are placed directly above (baths), whence smoke frequently rises, inasmuch as wines age more rapidly which attain an early maturity by a particular type of smoke"; Hor. C. 3.8.11 amphorae fumum bibere institutae, "a wine-jar taught to drink smoke", with Nisbet–Rudd 2004 ad loc.).

For nouns in -ίας, see fr. 496 n.

fr. 463 K.–A. (338 K.)

Hsch. κ 3661
κ ό ρ σ α κ ι ς· τράγος παρὰ Κρατίνῳ. Δίδυμος ἤκουεν ἀπὸ τῆς κόρσης· ... (lac. agn. Meineke) Κόρσαι γὰρ τῆς Κιλικίας k o r s a k i s: a goat in Cratinus. Didymus understood the word to be derived from korsê ("head; hair") ... (lacuna noted by Meineke) Because Korsai of Cilicia

Discussion Lobeck 1843. 314

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note, drawn at least in part from the 1st-century BCE commentator Didymus (cf. Schmidt 1854. 307–8, without reference to this fragment), but epitomized to the point of incomprehensibility.

Interpretation If κόρσακις (attested nowhere else) is indeed < κόρση, as Didymus maintained, the meaning "goat" might have developed from "hairy, shaggy (animal)". Cf. ἀρνακίς ("sheepskin"; Ar. Nu. 730; Pl. Smp. 220b) < *ἄρναξ < ἀρνός ("lamb").[228] κόρση ("temples; hair at the temples") is < *(s)ker- ("cut"; cf. κείρω, "cut"; Lat. carrere, "to card wool"; Engl. shear; Germ. Schere); a primarily poetic word (e. g. Il. 4.502; A. Ch. 282) with an Attic variant κόρρη (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 165.1; Pl. Grg. 486c). What the Κόρσαι τῆς Κιλικίας were—the Cilician Gates, a pass through the Taurus Mountains between the plains of Cilicia and Anatolia (e. g. X. An. 1.4.4 πύλας τῆς Κιλικίας with Anthon 1847 ad loc.)?—is unclear, as is the connection with an obscure comic word for "goat". But cf. Diogenian. 5.54 Κιλίκιοι τράγοι· οἱ δασεῖς· τοιοῦτοι γὰρ οἱ ἐν Κιλικίᾳ γίνονται τράγοι· ὅθεν καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν τριχῶν συντιθέμενα παρ' ἡμῖν ⟨Κιλίκια⟩ λέγονται ("Cilician goats: shaggy ones. For the goats in Cilicia are of this type. Hence we refer to items woven from their hair as ⟨'Cilician'⟩").

fr. 464 K.–A. (421 K.)

Ath. 10.424b
μνημονεύει τοῦ κ υ ά θ ο υ ... καὶ Κρατῖνος

Cratinus too ... mentions the k y a t h o s

Citation context One in a series of quotations containing the word κύαθος within a larger omnibus discussion of vocabulary having to do with wine and drinking.

Interpretation A κύαθος (substrate vocabulary) is a ladle for dipping wine (e. g. Crates Com. fr. 16.7; Pl. Com. fr. 192; Antiph. fr. 81.3; Epigen. fr. 5.3; Alex. fr. 21.2; Anacr. PMG 356(a).5; X. Cyr. 1.3.9), typically made of bronze; see Sparkes 1975. 135 and pl. XVIIf. For a luxury example made of silver with the word itself inscribed, see Crosby 1943. For the use of a cooled ladle to reduce the pain of a black eye, cf. Ar. Pax 541–2; Lys. 443–4; Apolloph. fr. 3; E. fr. 374; Pl. Ti. 79e; [Arist.] Pr. 890[a]23–[b]37; Bliquez–Rodgers 1998.

---

[228] κόρσακις is perhaps < *κόρσαξ < κόρση (cf. δελφακίς, "piglet" < δέλφαξ, "pig"; ἀλωπεκίς, "mongrel" < ἀλώπηξ, "fox"). The suffix -ιδ- was used inter alia to form the names of animals (e. g. βασσαρίς, "fox"; cf. Chantraine 1933. 335–48; Buck–Petersen 1945. 416–17), as was the suffix -ακ- (e. g. κόραξ, "crow"; cf. Chantraine 1933. 80–1, 376–9; Buck–Petersen 1945. 614–15).

fr. 465 K.–A. (462 K.)

Phot. κ 1249
κ υ ρ η β ά σ α σ θ α ι (sic Phot.$^{z^{ac}}$: κυρειβ- Phot.$^{gz^{ac}}$)· διαμαχέσασθαι. οὕτως Κρατῖνος k y r ê b a s a s t h a i (thus Phot.$^{z^{ac}}$: kyreib- Phot.$^{gz^{ac}}$): to contend. Thus Cratinus

Discussion Kock 1880 I.130

Text Theodoridis' apparatus (whence the readings reported above are drawn) is defective, z^{ac} being offered twice in the reported readings and z^{pc} being absent. κυρηβ- is in any case the correct form, as the material cited in Citation context makes clear.

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus; Phot. κ 1238 is the same note but with the reference to Cratinus stripped out. Related material, at least some of it probably originating as notes on Ar. Eq. 272 πρὸς σκέλος κυρηβάσει ("he'll butt against a leg" vel sim.; the chorus describe how they will block or battle the Paphlagonian when he attempts to escape or evade them), the only other attestation of the verb outside of the lexicographers,[229] is preserved at

- Hsch. κ 4674 κυρηβάζεσθαι· λοιδορεῖσθαι. διαμάχεσθαι ("kyrêbazesthai: to slander, to contend")
- Hsch. κ 4675 κυρηβάσασθαι· διαμαχέσασθαι. ἀπὸ τῶν κριῶν καὶ τῶν τράγων. ἔνθεν καὶ τὸ κυρίσσειν ("kyrêbasasthai: to contend. From rams and goats. Whence also kyrissein")
- Phot. κ 1239 κυρηβάζεσθαι· λοιδορεῖσθαι ("kyrêbazesthai: to slander")
- Phot. κ 1259 κυρριβάζεσθαι· λοιδορεῖσθαι, διασύρεσθαι ("kyrribazesthai: to slander, to ridicule")
- Et.Gen. AB κυρηβάσει· μαχήσεται. τίκτεται μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν κριῶν· ἔλεγον δὲ τὸ τοιοῦτον καὶ κορύττειν, οἷον κερίττειν· καὶ κυρηβάσει ("kyrêbasei: he/she/it will fight. The source of the word is krioi ('rams'); and they expressed something similar with koryttein, like kerittein; also kyrêbasei"; traced by the Et.Gen. to Orion, and identified by Theodoridis as Philox.Gramm. fr. 670)
- $\Sigma^{\text{VEΓΘM}}$ Ar. Eq. 272 κυρηβάσει· κυρηβασία λέγεται ἡ διὰ τῶν κεράτων μάχη, ἥπερ ἐν τοῖς ἀλόγοις ζῴοις γίνεται … κυρηβάσεις … λέγονται αἱ πλήξεις τῶν τράγων ("kyrêbasei: the battling by means of horns that goes on among irrational animals is called kyrêbasia … The blows inflicted by rams are kyrêbaseis").

[229] Kock in fact took the passage in Photius to be a mistaken reference to Ar. Eq. 272, and accordingly included this fragment among his dubia.

Interpretation Beekes 2010 s. v. κυρίττω ("butt with the horns") takes κυρηβάζομαι to be somehow derived from that verb but unconnected with κέρας ("horn"). For the image, cf. Taillardat 1965 § 613.

fr. 466 K.–A. (16 Dem.)

[Hdn.] Philet. 89
λαγὼς διὰ τοῦ ω μεγάλου ὁ χερσαῖος παρὰ τοῖς Ἀττικοῖς· λαγὸς δὲ ὁ θαλάσσιος (Cohn ex Hsch. λ 69 : ἀστικός codd.). φασὶ δὲ τοῦτον καὶ ἰὸν ἔχειν, ὅθεν (Studemund : καὶ τὸν ἐχινόθεν codd.) καὶ τοὺς πονηροὺς ὁ Κρατῖνος λ α γ ο ὺ ς καλεῖ lagôs ("hare") with omega is the terrestrial creature among Attic-speakers, whereas lagos is the creature found in the sea (Cohn from Hsch. λ 69 : "in the city" codd.). And they say that it also has poison, for which reason (Studemund : "and the one from a storage-jar" codd.) Cratinus calls wicked men l a g o u s

Discussion Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context [Hdn.] Philet. is generally taken to be drawn from Herennius Philo, but this note is in any case a fragment of what appears to have been a vigorous scholarly discussion of the acceptability of λαγός in Attic; see Interpretation.

Interpretation The author of this note uses (1) the distinction also drawn by Phrynichus (Ecl. 156) and Tryphon (fr. 19 Velsen ap. Ath. 9.400a) between what is said to be the normal Attic term for a hare, λαγώς (acc. pl. λαγώς; e. g. Pherecr. fr. 189; Eup. fr. 153; Ar. Ach. 878; X. Mem. 3.11.7), and the Ionian form of the word found in Herodotus (e. g. 4.134.1; 7.57.1), λαγός (acc. pl. λαγούς),[230] combined with (2) the fact that λαγός could be used of the poisonous sea-slug (likely a reference to Amips. fr. 17 λαγὸν ταράξας πῖθι τὸν θαλάσσιον, "Stir up the sea-hare and drink it!"; cited at Ath. 9.400c, not necessarily still from Tryphon), to argue that because Cratinus described certain discreditable individuals as λαγούς rather than λαγώς, he must have meant that they were "sea-slugs" (for which, see also Epich. fr. 53.2; Thompson 1947. 142), i. e. poisonous. But this is only one side of the argument about the word, and the fact that λαγός is also attested in Attic authors at S. fr. 111 (cited at [230] For the variation in the form, see Schwyzer 1953 I.557–8.

Ath. 9.400c as an exception to the supposed rule); Alex. fr. 128.2; Philem. fr. 93.5, in each case almost certainly meaning "hare", combined with the fact that Amipsias felt the need to write λαγὸν … τὸν θαλάσσιον, suggesting that λαγόν alone would have been ambiguous, makes it is easier to believe that λαγός was also an acceptable form of the word for Attic-speakers even if a less common one, and that what Cratinus meant was that the individuals he attacked were cowards.[231] For the hare (also called δασύπους) as notoriously fearful, cf. Philem. fr. 93.5 δειλοὶ πάλιν ἑξῆς πάντες εἰσὶν οἱ λαγοί ("absolutely all rabbits, on the other hand, are cowards"); Arist. HA 488^{b}15; Phgn. 805^{b}26; Ael. NA 7.19; Str. 1.36; Luc. Pisc. 34; Hsch. λ 71. On the animal in general, see fr. 434 n.

fr. 467 K.-A. (422 K.)

Phot. λ 120
λ α υ ρ ο σ τ ά τ α ι· μέσοι τοῦ χοροῦ· οἱονεὶ γὰρ ἐν στενωπῶι εἰσί· φαυλότεροι δὲ οὗτοι· οὕτω Κρατῖνος

l a u r o s t a t a i: men in the middle of the chorus, since they are in a tight spot, as it were; and these men are rather worthless. Thus Cratinus

Citation context Traced to Diogenianus by Theodoridis. A fuller version of the same material, but without reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Hsch. λ 425 λαυροστάται· οἱ ἐν τοῖς μέσοις ζυγοὶ ὄντες ἔν τισι στενωποῖς μὴ θεωρούμενοι. οἱ δὲ χείρους μέσοι ἵστανται. οἱ δὲ ἐπιτεταγμένοι πρῶτοι καὶ ἔσχατοι ("laurostatai: the ranks in the middle, which are in confined lanes in order that they not be seen. The worse men are placed in the middle, and the others are lined up first and last").

Interpretation λαυροστάται (otherwise unattested, and perhaps a nonce-word) is < λαύρα ("narrow passage, alleyway"; see Olson 1998 on Ar. Pax 99) and στῆναι < ἵστημι ("stand"). According to Poll. 4.108–9, tragic choruses entered the Theater arranged in three στοῖχοι ("lines") and five ζυγοί ("ranks"), i. e. in three parallel lines of five men each, or alternatively in five parallel lines of three men each; Phot. τ 476 (cf. $\Sigma^{ABDOxon.}$ Aristid. III p. 535.18–24; Σ^{BD} Aristid. III p. 536.5–7) adds that the ἀριστερός ("left-hand") stoichos was the one closest to the audience, while the δεξιός ("right-hand") stoichos was the one closest to the stage. According to Phot. α 2810 = Synag. B α 2119, the man in the most visible and thus most important position, in the third zygos of the "left-hand" stoichos, was called the μέσος ἀριστεροῦ (literally "middle man of the left-hand (stoichos)"), although Phot. τ 476 implies that he was called instead the τρίτος ἀριστεροῦ ("third man of the left-hand (stoichos)"). Comedy had twenty-four dancers in place of tragedy's fifteen, and according to Poll. 4.108–9 they entered in four στοῖχοι ("lines") and six ζυγοί ("ranks"). There thus could not have been a single, central dancer in either a comic stoichos or a comic zygos, although Phot. α 2810 = Synag. B α 2119 reports that comedy's equivalent of tragedy's μέσος ἀριστεροῦ was the ἀριστεροστάτης (literally "left-hand-stander"), which Hsch. α 7241 glosses ὁ πρωτοστάτης τοῦ χοροῦ ("the first-stander of the chorus").[232] On analogy with the staging arrangements for tragedy, one would expect this to refer to the third or fourth zygos of the "left-hand" stoichos, i. e. to the man who occupied the left-center or right-center position in the line of dancers closest to the audience. See Pickard-Cambridge 1968. 239–42, with full citation of the ancient evidence and discussion.

[231] The alternative is to emend the passages in question, on the assumption that a non-Attic form drove out the rarer Attic one from copies of some texts, and that these errors were mistaken by later scholars for occasional legitimate exceptions to normal Attic usage. This fails to account, however, for Amipsias' λαγὸν … τὸν θαλάσσιον.

Assuming that this lexicographic information is both correct and properly integrated, the central stoichos (in the case of tragedy) or the two central stoichoi (in the case of comedy) might have been a reasonable place for a choreographer to try to hide his least proficient dancers.[233] Despite Hsch. λ 425, however, the third zygos (in the case of tragedy) and the third and fourth zygoi (in the case of comedy) were not obscure positions at all, but were where the best dancers were placed (sc. in the center of the "left-hand", audience-facing stoichos). At the very least, therefore, some of the information in Hesychius has been garbled in transmission. Efforts may have been made to conceal the

---

[232] Poll. 2.161 (cf. 4.106) also preserves the term δεξιοστάτης, although he claims that it means "the choreut on the right" (τῇ δεξιᾷ), as opposed to "the choreut on the left" (τῇ ἀριστερᾷ). Pickard-Cambridge 1968. 241 associates the laurostatai with the deuterostatai mentioned at Poll. 4.106 (with no explanation; omitted from both LSJ and Montanari s. v.) and Themist. p. 175^{b}4 Harduin, and glosses "the middle rank … (composed) of the least efficient". But Themistius makes it clear that this was a leading position, so presumably these men stood to either side of the aristerostatai, with the tritostatai (Arist. Metaph. 1018^{b}27–8; Poll. 4.106 (again with no explanation)) coming after them.

[233] Cf. Men. fr. 130.1–4, which speaks of members of a chorus who do not sing (sc. because they lack the talent to do so) but merely stand next to men who do, although the reference there might be to dithyramb rather than to drama.

worst dancers in a chorus from the audience's view, and Cratinus may have referred to certain choreuts as laurostatai because other dancers were packed close around them, like buildings around an alleyway. But either the reference to the ζυγοί is mistaken or the problem goes deeper and involves Photius as well: laurostatai were not bad dancers who needed to be concealed (even if there were such dancers), but were the ἀριστεροστάται, who stood in the center of the group in the middle zygoi.[234]

fr. 468 K.–A. (423 K.)

Phot. λ 193
λ ε π α σ τ α ί· κύλικες τινὲς οὕτως ἐκαλοῦντο· Κρατῖνος

l e p a s t a i: certain cups were referred to thus; Cratinus

Discussion Kock 1880 I.125

Citation context A fragment of what appears to have been a vigorous scholarly debate regarding precisely what a λεπαστή was. Cf.

- Ar. Byz. fr. 411 ap. Ath. 11.485d Ἀμερίας δέ φησι τὴν οἰνοχόην λεπαστήν καλεῖσθαι· Ἀριστοφάνης δὲ καὶ Ἀπολλόδωρος (FGrH 244 F 258) γένος εἶναι κύλικος ("But Amerias says that lepastê is a term for an oinochoê, whereas Aristophanes and Apollodorus (FGrH 244 F 258) say that it is a variety of kylix")
- Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 345.2–3 τὸ μέντοι ἑορτή ὀξύνεται καὶ τὸ παλαιστή καὶ λεπαστή ἡ κύλιξ ("heortê gets an acute accent on the final syllable, however, as do palaistê and lepastê (the kylix)"
- Hsch. λ 663 λεπαστή· κύλιξ ("lepastê: a kylix")
- Σ^{RVT} Ar. Pax 916 λεπαστήν· εἶδος ποτηρίου μεῖζον ἢ κύλιξ. οὕτως ὁ Σύμμαχος. ὁ δὲ Παλαμήδης τὸ πιθάριον ἐκδέχεται ("lepastê: a type of drinking vessel larger than a kylix. Thus Symmachus. But Palamedes takes it to be a small jug").

Interpretation λεπαστή is attested only in comic authors (e. g. Telecl. fr. 27.2; Pherecr. fr. 101; Hermipp. fr. 45.1; Ar. Pax 916 with Olson 1998 ad loc.; fr. 174.2; Apolloph. fr. 7; Philyll. fr. 5.5; Theopomp. Com. fr. 42.1; Anaxandr. fr. 42.26 with Millis 2015 ad loc.; Antiph. fr. 47.3) and appears everywhere to be a drinking vessel rather than a pitcher (as Amerias believed) or a jug (as Palamedes—author inter alia of a Κωμικὴ λέξις, "Comic vocabulary", and supposedly one of the guests at the dinner party whose proceedings make up the content of Athenaeus' Deipnosophists—argued). The name is in any event cognate with λέπω ("peel"; see in general Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 275.2) and must thus refer to a broad, shallow vessel reminiscent of a λοπίς ("[fish-]scale"), λοπάς ("stewing pan") or λεπάς ("limpet" and thus "limpet-shell").

[234] Contrast the use of ψιλεύς (< ψιλός, "bare, defenseless") for the men at the end (sc. of the stoichos) (Hsch. ψ 197; Suda ψ 101).

fr. 469 K.–A. (424 K.)

Phot. μ 123
μ ά σ μ α· μάστευμα. ζήτημα. οὕτω Κρατῖνος

m a s m a: investigation, inquiry. Thus Cratinus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.202

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation μάσμα (< μαίομαι, "touch, investigate, seek to attain"; etymology uncertain) is attested elsewhere only at Pl. Cra. 421a, where it is part of a fantastic etymology of ὄνομα (allegedly < ὀνομαστόν, "named", ~ ὃν οὗ μάσμα ἐστίν, "being what the search is for"). The verb is attested in comedy only at Ar. V. 1234, in a quotation of Alcaeus (fr. 141), and is otherwise restricted to elevated poetry (e. g. Il. 9.394; Hes. Op. 532; A. Ch. 787; Pi. N. 3.5). Nouns in -μα—for which, see in general Peppler 1916; Mawet 1983. 186–91; Willi 2003. 136–9—are far less common in Cratinus than in Aristophanes and Eupolis, and this is his only genuine rarity (contrast ἄθυρμα, "plaything" (fr. 152); πρᾶγμα, "affair" (fr. 184); ψήφισμα, "decree" (fr. 285)).

fr. 470 K.–A. (430 K.)

Poll. 2.49
καὶ σύνοφρυς ἀνὴρ καὶ γυνή· τὸν δὲ τοιοῦτον μ ε ί ξ ο φ ρ υ ν (Nauck : μίξοφρυν Poll. et Phot. μ 465) Κρατῖνος καλεῖ and synophrys ("unibrow") applied to both men and women. But Cratinus calls such a person m e i x o p h r y s ("with a mingled brow") (Nauck : mixophrys Poll. and Phot. μ 465)

Discussion Nauck 1894. 66–7

Text Inscriptional evidence suggests that μείξ- rather than the metrically indifferent paradosis μίξ- was the normal form in the classical period of words formed from the aorist root of μείγνυμι (thus Nauck; see evidence collected in Threatte 1996. 623–4).

Citation context From a collection of words derived from ὀφρύς within a larger discussion of words pertaining to the face and its constituent parts. Phot. μ 465 μίξοφρυν· σύνοφρυν likely goes back to the same source.

Interpretation μείξοφρυς is the only μειξ- compound attested in comedy; cf. elsewhere μειξοβόας (A. fr. 355.1) and μειξόθροος (A. Th. 331), and—with the first element meaning ~ "half" rather than "mingled, combined"—μειξοβάρβαρος (E. Ph. 138; Pl. Mx. 245d); μειξολυδιστί (Pl. R. 398e); μειξόμβροτον (A. Supp. 568); μειξοπάρθενος (E. Ph. 1023). At Pherecr. fr. 187.1 (the only other attestation of the word), μείξοφρυς is part of a physical description of a woman and apparently means "with a unibrow", as here, like σύνοφρυς at Arist. Phgn. 812^{b}25; Theoc. 8.72 (treated as attractive) with Gow 1952 ad loc. συνοφρυόομαι, by contrast, is generally "knit one's brow (in anger, disgust, or the like)" (S. Tr. 869; E. Alc. 777; Poll. 2.50 ἐπὶ τῶν λυπουμένων, "in reference to those feeling grief"; Hsch. σ 2687 συνοφρυμένος· λυπούμενος, "with a knit brow: vexed"; cf. Ar. Nu. 582–3 τὰς ὀφρῦς ξυνήγομεν / κἀποιοῦμεν δεινά, "we knit our brows and expressed great displeasure"; Pl. 756 ὀφρῦς συνῆγον ἐσκυθρώπαζόν θ' ἅμα, "they knit their brows and scowled simultaneously"; fr. 688; Antiph. frr. 217.2–3 συναγαγόντα τὰς ὀφρῦς / … σκυθρωπάζοντά θ', "knitting his brow and scowling"; 300 συνέλκειν τὰς ὀφρῦς, "to draw together one's brow"; Pearson 1917 on S. fr. 902).

fr. 471 K.–A. (425 K.)

Orus fr. B 98 ap. Phot. μ 223 μελάγχρως καὶ μ ε λ α γ χ ρ ή ς· ἀμφότερα Ἀττικά· μᾶλλον δὲ διὰ τοῦ η. Κρατῖνος melanchrôs and m e l a n c h r ê s: both are Attic, but the form with eta is preferable. Cratinus

Discussion Sofia 2016. 88–9

Citation context An Atticist note tentatively traced to Aelius Dionysius by Naber. Melanchrôs and melanchrês were clearly of interest to early lexicographers; cf.

- Moer. μ 18 μελάγχρως Ἀττικοί· μελαγχρὴς Ἕλληνες ("Attic-speakers (use) melanchrôs; Greeks generally (use) melanchrês")
- [Hdn.] Philet. 234 εὔχρως καὶ λευκόχρως· μελαγχρὴς διὰ τοῦ η ("euchrôs and leukochrôs; melanchrês with an êta")
- Σ^{LH} Od. 16.175 (μελαγχροιής) τοῦτο δὲ κατὰ συγκοπὴν Ἀττικοὶ μελαγχρης φασιν, ὡς Εὔπολις (fr. 468), καὶ τὸ οὐδέτερον Μένανδρος (fr. 667) εἰρηκε, μελαγχρὲς μειράκιον ("(melanchroiês) Attic-speakers say this in the syncopated form melanchrês, as Eupolis does (fr. 468). And Menander (fr. 667) uses the neuter, a melanchres young man").

Interpretation μελάγχρης (literally "black-skinned", but when applied to a person "with a heavy tan"; see in general Bruzzone 2009), formed by analogy with other compounds in -ης such as δυστυχής, the normal form being μελάγχροος, is also attested at Polioch. fr. 2.2; Antiph. fr. 133.3 (both of cakes). But similar compounds in comedy are formed with -χρως, as in tragedy (e. g. πολιόχρως, "gray-colored", at Ar. fr. 140, cf. E. Ba. 1365; λευκόχρως "white-colored", at Eub. fr. 34.2; Alex. fr. 103.18; Men. Sic. 258),[235] and they generally seem to represent elevated (or mock-elevated) style. On compounds in -χρως generally, see Sommer 1948. 21–9.

fr. 472 K.–A. (Crates Com. fr. 50 K.)

Σ^{h} Il. 23.361 ~ EM pp. 578.57–579.4
(μεμνέῳτο) προπαροξυτόνως καὶ μετὰ τοῦ ι. Ξενοφῶν (Cyr. 1.6.3) δὲ μεμνῷτο ἄνευ τοῦ ε. Κρατῖνος (sic Σ et EM^{M} : κρα$^{\tau}$ EM^{D} : Κράτης EM^{R}) δὲ μ έ μ ν ο ι τ ο (Σ = EM : μεμνῇτο Kock). τὸ δὲ ἀνάλογον μεμνῇτο διὰ τοῦ η, προσκειμένου τοῦ ι, Ἀριστοφάνης Πλούτῳ (991)· ἵνα † τοσοῦτον † ἱμάτιον φορῶν μεμνῇτό μου. Πίνδαρος δὲ Δωρικώτερον διὰ τῆς αι διφθόγγου ἐν Προσοδίοις (fr. 94)· μεμναίατ' ἀοιδᾶς (memnéôito, "he might remember"). Accented on the second syllable from the end and with an iota. But Xenophon (Cyr. 1.6.3) (says) memnôito without the epsilon. And Cratinus (thus Σ and EM^{M} : "Crates" EM^{R}) (says) m e m n o i t o (Σ = EM : memnêito Kock). The equivalent is memnêito with êta and an adscript iôta, Aristophanes in Ploutos (991): "in order that by wearing † such a large † robe he could remember (memnêito) me". And Pindar in a more Doric fashion with the diphthong ai in the Processional Odes (fr. 94): "might he/it remember (memnaiat') a song"

---

[235] Other examples collected at Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 468.

Discussion Kock 1880 I.143; Bonanno 1972. 169–70

Text Kock suggested emending the paradosis μέμνοιτο to μεμνῆτο, as at Ar. Pl. 991; X. Cyr. 1.6.3. If this is right, what is preserved in Σ = EM is not a grammatical rarity but the work of a scribe who assumed that an optative ought naturally to feature -οι- rather than the unexpected -ηι- he saw on the page before him. It is nonetheless worth noting that a handful of forms, most but not all of them attested only in late sources, appear to be built from a stem μεμν- rather than μεμνη-: μέμνοιντο (Σ^{b} Il. 2.774); μέμνεο (Hdt. 5.105.2; Herod. 4.89; AP 9.706.3); μέμνεαι (Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 298.18); μεμνομένω (Σ^{M} Od. 15.400).[236]

Citation context A grammatical note on an unusual form of the optative at Il. 23.361 (Achilleus distributes prizes in the funeral games for Patroclus). Very similar material, but without the reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 463.1–6 τὰ εἰς το τρίτα τῶν εὐκτικῶν ὁμοτονεῖ τοῖς οἰκείοις δευτέροις. νοοῖο νοοῖτο, τύπτοιο τύπτοιτο, μεμνῇο μεμνῇτο ὡς παρ' Ἀριστοφάνει ἐν Πλούτῳ δευτέρῳ (991) "ἵνα τοὐμὸν ἱμάτιον φορῶν μεμνῇτό μου", μεμνῷο μεμνῷτο παρὰ Ξενοφῶντι ἐν Κύρου παιδείας πρώτῳ (1.6.3) "ἀλλ' ὅτε τὰ ἄριστα πράττοι, τότε μάλιστα τὸν θεὸν μεμνῷτο", μεμνέῳο μεμνέῳτο "ὡς μεμνέῳτο δρόμου" (Il. 23.361) ("Third-person forms of the optative ending in -to have the same accent as the corresponding second-person forms: nooio nooito, typtoio typtoito, memnêio memnêito as in Aristophanes in Ploutos II (991) 'in order that by wearing my robe he could remember (memnêito) me', memnôio memnôito in Xenophon in Book 1 (1.6.3) of the Cyropaidia 'but when he was most successful, at that point in particular he would remember (memnôito) the god', memneôio memneôito 'so he could remember (memneôito) the race' (Il. 23.361)").

An ambiguous κρα$^{\tau}$ vel sim. apparently appeared in the common exemplar of the various manuscripts of the EM, and was expanded to Κράτης by EM^{R}, with that reading then taken over into the vulgate, hence the assignment of this fragment to Crates in Meineke and Kock. The scholia to Homer, however, have Κρατῖνος, which does not necessarily mean that this is right—the source of that reading as well might simply be an original κρα$^{\tau}$—but makes it on balance slightly easier to assign the fragment to Cratinus.

[236] A point of departure for the creation of *μέμνομαι might have been subjunctive forms such as μέμνηται (ambiguously indicative or subjunctive) and μεμνώμεθα (< *μεμνηόμεθα; cf. Hdt. 7.47.1; μεμνεώμεθα at Archil. fr. 106.4), in which the eta and omega respectively are easily misanalysed simply as the lengthened theme vowels typical of subjunctive forms of thematic verbs). Contributing to the misanalysis of the eta and omega as lengthened theme vowels, and thus to the creation of a present stem μεμν-, might also have been the fact that μέμνημαι, though perfect in form, has a present sense.

Interpretation The forms under discussion are all < μιμνήσκω and are supposed to be perfect middle optative. Homeric μεμνέῳτο (attested only once), presumably with quantitative metathesis from *μεμνήοιτο, is noteworthy because, while the perfect middle is athematic and should form the optative with -ῑ- —this is especially the case for verbs whose stems end in -η, -ᾱ, or -ω, cf. μεμνῇμην (Il. 24.745); μεμνῇτο (Ar. Pl. 991); κεκλῇτ(ο) (S. fr. 696)— -οῑ-, which is proper to thematic verbs (cf. Kühner–Blass 1892 II.190; Schwyzer 1953 I.795), is used instead. Xenophon's μεμνῷτο is likely the same form with contraction (μεμνέῳτο > μεμνῷτο); cf. Buttmann 1837 s. v. κτάομαι.

fr. 473 K.–A. (426 K.)

Antiatt. μ. 35
μ ε σ ό κ ο π ο ν· ἀρρενικῶς, τὸν (Bekker : τὸ cod.) ἐπὶ μέσου ἡλικίας. Κρατῖνος

m e s o k o p o s (acc.): used in the masculine, someone (thus Bekker : "something" cod.) middle-aged. Cratinus

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation μεσόκοπος (< μεσο– "mid" + and κόπτω "cut"), literally "cut from the middle, middle-slice", is attested also at Xenarch. fr. 4.9 νέᾳ, παλαιᾷ, μεσοκόπῳ, πεπαιτέρᾳ ("young, old, middle-aged, ancient"; describing the selection of prostitutes available in a brothel, and making it clear that the adjective was not used only in the masculine, as the text of the Antiatticist in its now radically condensed form appears to be asserting). The word was also used for a "mid-range" class of pipes (Poll. 4.77; Ath. 4.176f; Hsch. μ 919 ~ Phot. μ 300).[237] That the Antiatticist discusses it suggests that it was regarded by at least some authorities as specifically Attic vocabulary, at least to the extent that it served to designate age, a conclusion its two appearances in comedy and nowhere else in the classical period support.

Although the accent of compounds varies, in general those with a passive sense are proparoxytone (e. g. βούνομος, "grazed by oxen"), while those with an active sense are either paroxytone or oxytone (e. g. βουφάγος, "ox-eating"; βουφορβός, "ox-feeding"; cf. fr. 407 n.). Thus μεσόκοπος, "cut from the middle, middle-slice", like ἄκοπος ("unwearied"; Amips. fr. 28) and παράκοπος ("frenzied"; Ar. Th. 680–2), on the one hand, and e. g. μεσότομος (AP 6.63), on the other. Contrast active compounds in -κόπος, e. g. ἀργυροκόπος ("coiner"; Phryn. Com. fr. 5); βωλοκόπος ("clod-breaking"; fr. 5); ναστοκόπος ("cutting up cakes"; Pl. Com. fr. 277); ὀνοκόπος ("chipping millstones"; Alex. fr. 13.1); πορνοκόπος ("fornicator, one who 'pounds' pornai"; Men. fr. 585).

[237] Montanari s. v. glosses the word in this sense "half-size, short", although what the lexicographic sources say is instead that these were mid-sized (μέσοι) pipes.

For other comic compounds in μεσο-, cf. Theopomp. Com. fr. 4.1 μεσόμφαλος ("with a central boss"); adesp. com. fr. 775 μεσοπέρδην (obscure).

fr. 474 K.–A. (427 K.)

Phot. μ 345
μ ε τ ε κ β ο λ ή· μεταβολὴ καὶ ἐξάλλαξις. Κρατῖνος

m e t e k b o l ê: change and alteration. Cratinus

Meter Probably iambic trimeter; the word scans ⏑–⏑–.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note.

Interpretation μετεκβολή is a hapax, but cf. adesp. com. fr. 1109.3–4 μετεκβάλωσι τοῦ νυνὶ τρόπου ("they change from their current behavior";[238] the only attestation of the verb). The glosses offered by Photius are general words for "change": ἐξάλλαξις (confined to prose and primarily technical works) denotes inter alia a change of wording in rhetorical schemes (e. g. Alex. Rhetores Graeci III p. 11 Spengel; [Hdn.] Fig. 1 Hajdú), while μεταβολή (far commoner, and attested in both prose and poetry) is used of changes of place (e. g. Men. Sam. 96; fr. 835.9), character (e. g. [Men.] Sent. 395) and fortune (Men. Dysc. 279; Diph. fr. 104.2).

Compound prefixes serve to narrow down or strengthen the meaning of a singly-prefixed word, and the combination μετ(α)-εκ- appears to emphasize the transition from one state or thing to another (cf. μετεκβαίνω, the only other verb in μετεκ- attested in the classical period, at e. g. Hdt. 7.41.1 μετεκβαίνεσκε … ἐκ τοῦ ἅρματος ἐς ἁρμάμαξαν, "he transferred from his chariot into a luxury wagon", 100.2 μετεκβὰς ἐκ τοῦ ἅρματος ἐς νέα Σιδωνίην, [238] Montanari s. v. ("causat(ive) 'to bring about a change': τὸν νυνὶ τρόπον the current style") is garbled, but seems to be attempting to treat the noun as a direct object and has accordingly converted it into an accusative.

"transferring from his chariot to a Sidonian ship"; Antipho 5.23 μετεξέβημεν εἰς τὸ ἕτερον πλοῖον, "we transferred to another ship"; Pl. Lg. 642b μετεκβαῖμεν δ' εἰς ἕτερόν τινα λόγον, "and we should move on to another topic"). The analogy ἐκβαίνω ("go from") : μετεκβαίνω ("go from one to another") :: ἐκβολή ("throwing out; outlet") : μετεκβολή seems at first to suggest that μετεκβολή ought to be understood as a strengthened form of ἐκβολή (cf. ἀπεκβολή, "expulsion"; διεκβολή, "mountain pass"). But it is in fact a strengthened form of μεταβολή; cf. παραβολή ("comparison, illustration") and παρεκβολή ("digression"). μετεκβολή is thus perhaps formed by analogy with other nouns in -εκβολή; there are no known words in *ἐκ–PREFIX–βολή.[239] Most prefixes combine freely with others, and the existence of some combinations but not others may be due in part to analogical pressure. In some cases, a combination is attested but its inverse is not (e. g. εἰσ-απο- is attested (cf. εἰσαποβαίνω, "go away into something"), whereas ἀπο-εισ- is not), while in other cases either both combinations (cf. e. g. προαποβάλλω, "throw far away"; ἀποπροβάλλω, "throw away before") or neither is attested (e. g. there are no words in *περ(ι)-εισ- or *ἐισ-περ(ι)-). ἐκ- in particular appears first in compound prefixes only with δια-, παρα-, περι- and προ-, but second with nearly all other prefixes. μετα-, on the other hand, appears first in combination with most prefixes, but second only with a few, and there are no words in *ἐκμετ(α)-. Some other monosyllabic prefixes (e. g. εἰσ- and ἐν-) fare marginally better than ἐκ-, appearing less often first than second in combination with other prefixes, while προ- and συν- combine freely in either order.

fr. 475 K.–A. (428 K.)

Phot. μ 409
μ η ν υ τ ή ν (μηνύτην Phot.[gz] : corr. Schaefer)· τὴν γυναῖκα· Κρατῖνος

i n f o r m a n t (misaccented in Phot.[gz] : corrected by Schaefer): a woman (acc.); Cratinus

Discussion Lobeck 1837. 271; Fraenkel 1912 II.27

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note, although Kassel–Austin cite similar observations at Poll. 4.19 Ἀριστοφάνης δὲ παίζει ἐν Θεσμοφοριαζούσαις (432) λέγων ἡ γραμματεύς ("Aristophanes jests in Thesmophoriazusae (432), saying 'the (feminine) secretary'"); Phot. ρ 106 ῥητόρα· καὶ τὴν γυναῖκα.

[239] But cf. ἐκπροβάλλω, "expel" (Max. 6.241).

Ἀριστοφάνης (Th. 292) ("orator: also a woman; Aristophanes (Th. 292)"). Cf. ἡ στρατηγός at Ar. Ec. 491, 500 (acc.), 727 (gen.).

Interpretation μηνυτής (< μηνύω, "notify, betray, announce", generally in a legal or political context), first attested here, is late 5th-/4th-century Athenian vocabulary (e. g. E. Hipp. 1051; fr. 223.136 (the only attestations in elevated poetry); Antipho 5.24; Lys. 14.37; Th. 3.2.3; Pl. Lg. 809b; picked up by Lucian at Hist. 38). For a woman, *μηνύτρια (not attested) is expected; cf. fr. 459 θηλάστριαν with n. Whether the use for a woman of a term properly applied to a man was a joke or merely a broad use of word for which there was no common, established feminine form (women not normally being involved in such aspects of Athenian social and political life) is impossible to say. Cf. the mocking συκοφάντρια at Ar. Pl. 970.

fr. 476 K.–A. (429 K.)

Poll. 2.124
μικρολογεῖσθαι δὲ εἴρηκεν Εὔπολις (fr. 469) καὶ μ ι κ ρ ο λ ο γ ή σ ο μ α ι Κρατῖνος μικρολογήσομαι Poll.[A] : -ωμεν Poll.[S] : -ομεν Poll.[F] : fort. -όμεθα vel -ώμεθα

But Eupolis (fr. 469) says mikrologeisthai ("to quibble"), and Cratinus (says) m i k r o - l o g ê s ô m e n ("I'm going to quibble")

Meter Compatible with iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨×–⏑– ×⟩|⏑⏑⏑– ⏑–[c]⟨⏑–⟩

Citation context From a long collection of words derived from λόγος.

Text The common exemplar of the manuscripts of Pollux apparently offered only μικρολογ[μ] or the like, which was expanded in different ways by individual scribes. The verb is rare, but elsewhere in Attic dialect of the classical period it is always used in the middle (X. HG 3.1.26; Lys. 33.3; picked up by later Atticizing authors at e. g. Luc. JTr. 26 μικρολογούμεθα; Aristid. *or.*1.152), with the active first attested only in the Roman period.[240] Cratinus might conceivably have been cited because he employed the unexpected voice, and Bethe (followed by Kassel–Austin) printed μικρολογήσωμεν (Poll.[S]). But this is a gratuitously complicated hypothesis, and we follow Kock in printing μικρολογήσομαι (Poll.[A]).

[240] Thus LSJ, which lemmatizes the word as μικρολογέομαι. The point is somewhat obscured in Montanari, which lemmatizes under μικρολογέω.

Interpretation μικρολογία is an ugly preoccupation with details, especially financial details, that a decent person willingly overlooks: "The Μικρολόγος is mean and petty. His motive is not greed, and he does not wish to profit at the expense of others … He is afraid that others will take advantage of him, and is obsessed with keeping what is his own; and others pay the price for his petty economies and his jealous insistence on his rights" (Diggle 2004, Introductory note to Thphr. Char. 10, where the man in question, for example, refuses to allow anyone to pick up a fallen olive or date in his fields, offers his fellow demesmen the smallest cut of meat possible when he gives a feast, and refuses to allow his wife to lend anyone salt, cumin or the like because the expense adds up over the course of a year). Cf. Ephipp. fr. 15.10 (B.) ὡς μικρολόγος εἶ. (A.) σὺ δέ γε λίαν πολυτελής ("(B.) How stingy you are! (A.) But you're too extravagant"); Men. fr. 106.5–6 (in response to a man whose sandal-strap has broken, and who identifies this as an omen) σαπρὸς γὰρ ἦν, σὺ δὲ μικρολόγος ⟨×⟩ οὐ θέλων / καινὰς πρίασθαι ("Yes—because it was rotten; and you're μικρολόγος, … since you refuse to buy new ones"). The verb is attested sporadically from the late 5th century onward; the fragments of Eupolis and Cratinus cited by Pollux are the earliest examples of it or any of its cognates, which are colloquial Attic vocabulary absent from elevated poetry.

fr. 477 K.–A. (431 K.)

Phot. μ 480
μ ν α ρ ό ν· μαλακόν, ἡδύ, ῥᾴδιον. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

m n a r o n: soft, pleasant, easy. Thus Cratinus

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus. Other versions of the same material, although without the reference to Cratinus, are preserved at Hsch. μ 1493 μναρόν· μαλακόν, ἡδύ, θυμῆρες ("mnaron: soft, pleasant, pleasing"); Suda μ 1146 μναρόν· ἡδύ, μαλακόν ("mnaron: pleasant, soft").

Interpretation Beekes 2010 s. v. suggests that μναρόν is a by-form of μνιαρός ("soft as seaweed (μνίον)":[241] Opp. H. 2.167; AP 6.250.3), the iota having become consonantal, so that μνιαρός was pronounced μν*y*αρός, and subsequently lost. The phenomenon is ill-attested in 5th-century Athenian inscriptions, but is not unknown (Threatte 1980. 393). If this is right, μναρόν likely reflects how at least some average Athenians on the street spoke; cf. Pl. Com. fr. 183.2–3, where the crude, ill-educated Hyperbolus is ridiculed for pronouncing διῃτώμην ("I was living my life") as δῃτώμην, with Colvin 1999. 282.

fr. 478 K.–A. (433 K.)

Michael Ital. epist. 24, An.Ox. III p. 195.6–8
Πλάτων δέ, οὐχ ὁ φιλόσοφος ἀλλ' ὁ κωμικώτατος (fr. 210), ᾧ καὶ τὸν Κρατῖνον οἶδα συνᾴδοντα, ἀορίστως ἐπὶ συγγενείας ἔλαβε τὴν ὅ μ α ι μ ο ς λέξιν

And Plato—not the philosopher but the very amusing fellow (fr. 210), with whom I know Cratinus as well is in agreement—used the word h o m a i m o s without restriction in reference to kinship

Citation context From a letter to the Byzantine emperor Alexios Komnenos (reigned 1081–1118 CE), who had supposedly inquired about the word homaimôn. The information preserved here appears to be drawn ultimately from Aristophanes of Byzantium's Περὶ Συγγόνων (frr. 252–3) and was traced by Erbse, noting Phot. ο 260 = Suda ο 236 = Synag. ο 127 (ὅμαιμος καὶ ὁμαίμων· ἀδελφὸς ἢ συγγενής. καὶ ὁμονήδυος, "homaimos and homaimôn: a brother or relative; also someone from the same womb"; drawn from the common source of Photius, the Suda and the Synagoge generally referred to as Σ′) to Aelius Dionysius (ο 15). Note also Hsch. ο 670 ὅμαιμοι· ἀδελφοί, συγγενεῖς ("homaimoi: brothers, relatives"), which likely goes back to the same source.

---

[241] μνίον is "seaweed" (A.R. 4.1237; Numen. SH 571.2 (misleadingly cited at Montanari s. v. as "Ath. 7.295c"); Lyc. 398; Nic. Al. 396; Str. 16.770; Ael. NA 13.3; Opp. H. 2.649). LSJ s. v. μνιαρός offers "1. mossy, 2 soft as moss", which is corrected in the Supplement to "1. covered in seaweed, 2. soft as seaweed"; the error is nonetheless perpetuated in Montanari s. v., which offers "covered in moss or algae, mossy" (citing Opp. H. 2.167, where seaweed is in question) and "downy, soft like moss" (citing Antiphil. AP 6.250.3 = GPh 785, although the meaning there is simply "soft", i. e. "soft as seaweed"; see Gow–Page 1968 ad loc.). Note also that μνιώδης at Nic. Al. 497 is a reference to water-plants and must thus almost inevitably be "seaweed-like" rather than "moss-like, mossy" (Montanari s. v.).

Interpretation ὅμαιμος and ὁμαίμων (both < ὁμός, "same" + αἷμα, "blood", thus "related by blood" or as a substantive "blood relative, kinsman") are not attested in comedy except here and in the fragment of Plato Comicus mentioned by Michael and then quoted by him below (An.Ox. III p. 195.11–12, "no friend is more sympathetic than a homaimos, even if he is distantly related"). The words are instead confined in the classical period to tragedy (e. g. A. Th. 415; Supp. 225; Eu. 653; S. OT 639; Ant. 513; E. Hipp. 339; Ph. 319)[242] and Herodotus (1.151.2; 3.49.1; 8.144.2); are attested subsequently a few times in Hellenistic poetry (Theoc. 22.173; Lyc. 337, 1442), presumably as a poeticism; and appear occcasionally in Roman-era Atticizing prose (e. g. Plu. Lyc. 15.8; Luc. Cal. 28).

fr. 479 K.–A. (434 K.)

Poll. 6.163
καὶ ὡς Κρατῖνος π α ν α γ ά θ η

and as Cratinus (says) e n t i r e l y g o o d (fem. sing.)

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.212

Citation context From a collection of παν- compounds that also includes fr. 480, as part of a much larger discussion of compounds. A collection of ἡμι- compounds (including fr. 457) precedes, while a collection of compounds in παλιν- follows.

Interpretation πανάγαθος is attested elsewhere in the classical period only at [Pl.] Ep. 8 354e (neuter); its antonym πάγκακος is absent from comedy, but is common in tragedy (e. g. A. Ch. 740 (adv.); S. Tr. 1124; E. Hipp. 682 (superlative); HF 731 (superlative)). Although as a compound πανάγαθος would be expected to have only two terminations (thus LSJ and Montanari s. v.), Cratinus apparently treated it as having three; cf. fr. 411. The passage from [Plato] tells us nothing in this regard.

Intensive adjectives in παν- ("all X, entirely X; very X"), which persist in Modern Greek, are attested already in Homer (e. g. παναίολος, "shot through with every color"; πανάπαλος, "very smooth"; πανάργυρος, "made entirely of silver"). They are common in comedy, where many of the more unusual ones—especially those with a less openly colloquial or pejorative character—appear to have an elevated "poetic" flavor:[243] e. g. παγγέλοιος ("altogether laughable"; Eub. fr. 52.6), παγγλυκερός ("very sweet"; Ar. Lys. 970, lyric), πάγκαλος ("absolutely lovely"; Ar. Pl. 1018; Theopomp. Com. fr. 10.2), παγκαταπύγων ("utterly depraved"; Ar. Lys. 137), παγκατάρατος ("utterly cursed"; Ar. Lys. 588), πάγκυφος ("bent all the way over"; Ar. fr. 747), πάγχρηστος ("thoroughly useful"; Ar. Ach. 936, lyric), πάγχρυσος ("made entirely of gold"; Ar. Nu. 598–9, lyric), παμβδελυρός and παμμυσαρός ("utterly loathsome" and "utterly foul"; Ar. Lys. 969, lyric), παμμίαρος ("utterly vile"; Ar. Pax 183), παμπόνηρος ("completely base"; Ar. Ach. 854, lyric; Eq. 415; Ra. 921), πανάθλιος ("utterly wretched"; Ar. Th. 1107, paratragic; Timocl. fr. 27.1, paratragic), πανύστατος ("the very last"; Ar. Ach. 1184, paratragic), πανώλεθρος ("thoroughly destructive"; Ar. Lys. 1039, a gnome). Intensives in ὁλο- are much less common in comedy and have a more restricted field of meaning ("wholly X"), e. g. ὁλόλευκος ("all-white"; Antiph. fr. 184.2; Philetaer. fr. 20), ὁλοσίδηρος ("made entirely of iron"; Antiph. fr. 215), ὁλόχρυσος ("made entirely of gold"; Antiph. fr. 223.5), as are those in ὑπερ-, which mean "extraordinarily X", e. g. ὑπέρσοφος ("extraordinarily wise"; Ar. Ach. 971–2, lyric), ὑπέρμεγας ("extraordinarily large"; Ar. Eq. 158), ὑπέρλαμπρος ("extraordinarily brilliant"; Ar. Nu. 571–2, lyric), ὑπέρχολος ("extraordinarily angry"; Antiph. fr. 301); cf. ὑπεργέμων ("stuffed full"; Alex. fr. 219.1, contrasted with κενός, "empty").

[242] Note also the cognate adjective ὁμαίμιος at Pi. N. 6.16.

fr. 480 K.–A. (435 K.)

Poll. 6.163
πανήμερος πάννυχος· τοῦτον δὲ π α ν ε ύ φ ρ ο ν α Κρατῖνος καλεῖ

panêmeros ("lasting all day"), pannychos ("lasting all night"); but for the latter Cratinus uses p a n e u p h r ô n (masc. acc. sing. or neut. nom./acc. pl.)

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.212

Citation context From a collection of παν- compounds that also includes fr. 479, as part of a much larger discussion of compounds. A collection of ἡμι- compounds (including fr. 457) precedes, while a collection of compounds in παλιν- follows.

[243] Cf. in Aeschylus alone e. g. πανάθλιος ("utterly miserable"; Th. 970), παναίολος ("shot through with every color"; Pers. 636), παναληθής ("entirely true"; Th. 722), πανδάκρυτος ("full of tears"; Th. 654), πάνοιζυς ("utterly unhappy"; Ch. 49), πάνολβος ("truly blessed"; Supp. 582), πάνσοφος ("most clever"; Supp. 320), πανώλεθρος (Pers. 562; Th. 71).

Interpretation πανεύφρων ("lasting all night"; a hapax) is < εὐφρόνη ("kindly time", i. e. "night"), which is Ionic vocabulary (e. g. Hdt. 7.188.2; 8.12.1; Hp. Vict. 5 = 6.476.13 Littré; Nat. Mul. 109 = 7.430.4 Littré; conjectural at Archil. fr. 23.9) widely attested in elevated poetry (e. g. Hes. Op. 560; Pi. N. 7.3; A. Pers. 180, 221; Ag. 265; S. El. 19, 259; E. Tr. 665; Ph. 727; fr. 107.1) but absent from Attic prose and attested elsewhere in comedy only at Ar. Ec. 954 (lyric). The equivalent but more common compound πάννυχος (already at e. g. Il. 17.660; Od. 14.458) is likewise restricted in the classical period to Ionian prose and elevated poetry, and is absent from Attic prose and comedy (although cf. παννυχίζω, "celebrate an all-night festival", at e. g. Ar. Nu. 1069).[244] The same is true of the considerably rarer πανήμερος (Hdt. 7.183.3; [A.] PV 1024; Ar. Ra. 387 (an iambic cult-song); cf. fr. 149.1 πανημέριοι). Cratinus' adjective thus appears to be distinctly high-style, even if it was coined for straightforward metrical reasons.

For a different type of παν- compound, see fr. 479 with n.

fr. 481 K.–A. (436 K.)

Poll. 7.31
φαίης δ' ἂν καὶ μίτον, καὶ μίσασθαι (Pl. Com. fr. 276) τὸ μιτώσασθαι, καὶ π ο λ ύ μ ι τ α (sic Poll.^{FS} : πολύμιτος Poll.^{A}) ὡς Κρατῖνος ἔφη

You could also say mitos ("warp thread"), and misasthai (Pl. Com. fr. 276) means mitôsasthai ("to weave"[245]), and p o l y m i t a (thus Poll.^{FS} : polymitos Poll.^{A}), as Cratinus said

Text Either πολύμιτος (Poll.^{A}; printed by Bethe in his edition of Pollux and accepted by Kock) or πολύμιτα (Poll.^{FS}; printed by Kassel–Austin) might be correct. The common exemplar of the manuscripts of Pollux may simply have had πολύμι$^{\tau}$ or the like, which individual scribes expanded ad libitum.

---

244 The metri gratia variant form παννύχιος is likewise found in elevated poetry (e. g. Il. 24.678; E. Heracl. 748 (lyric)) and Herodotus (2.62.1), but is absent from Attic prose and comedy.

245 I.e. "to use a shuttle to place the warp-thread between the woof-threads", for which LSJ s. v. offers "to ply the woof in weaving" (not much clearer than the Greek for the modern reader) and Montanari s. v. offers the vague "to weave the web").

Citation context From a small collection of words derived from μίτος ("warp thread"), within a larger discussion of vocabulary pertaining to weaving. Another fragment of the same original source seems to survive at Phot. μ 466 μίσασθαι· τὸ μιτώσασθαι. Πλάτων (fr. 276) ~ Hsch. μ 1441 (but without the reference to Plato).

Interpretation A μίτος ("warp thread"; etymology uncertain, but attested already in Mycenaean (KN Lc 761) and at Il. 23.762) is properly one of the fixed, stiff vertical threads through which the soft, flexible woof thread (κρόκη) was drawn by means of a shuttle in the course of the weaving process; by extension the word can be used for the warp as a whole. Plin. Nat. 8.196 plurimis … liciis texere quae polymita appellant ("weaving with a large number of threads, which they call polymita"; distinguishing this style of decoration from embroidery with a needle, on the one hand, and the production of a woven image via the use of a variety of colors of thread, on the other) suggests that πολύμιτος fabric—mentioned at A. Supp. 432, probably in reference to πέπλοι, although the text is obscure, and several times as an export good in the Imperial-period Periplus Maris Erythraei[246]—literally "multiple warp thread" fabric, was made with basket-weave, in which two threads (in this case warp threads) of different colors are bundled together to produce one with a variegated appearance. Alternatively, some sort of twill (in which the woof thread, rather than being drawn over and under alternating warps threads is instead drawn over and under two or more at a time) might be in question.[247]

fr. 482 K.–A. (437 K.)

Phot. π 1168
πριών· ὀξυτόνως, τὸ ἅρμενον· πρίων δέ, ὡς παίων, ὁ τέμνων τῷ ἁρμένῳ τούτῳ· τὸ δὲ πληθυντικὸν π ρ ί ο ν ε ς διὰ τοῦ ο· Κρατῖνος priôn: with an acute accent on the final syllable, the tool; whereas príôn, like paíôn, (is) the man who cuts with this tool. And the plural (is) p r í o n e s with omicron: Cratinus Meter The iota is long.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.205; Lobeck 1866. 134–5

---

[246] Note also Petron. 40.4 alicula … polymita ("a light coat made of polymita").

[247] Thus the conventional "damask". Embroidery (Montanari s. v.) is clearly not in question, despite Hsch. π 2720 ποικιλτικήν· πολυμιταρικὴν τέχνην (probably to be rendered "variegated: a technique involving multiple warp threads").

Text Photius' claim that the noun meaning "saw" ought to be accented on the final syllable (πριών) would seem at first glance to require that the word he cites from Cratinus be accented πριόνες. Modern editors, however, following Lobeck 1866. 135, take the point of the alleged distinction to be to avoid confusion with the present active participle of πρίω,[248] and therefore accept πρίονος etc. in the oblique cases of the noun, on the ground that confusion with πρίοντος etc. is impossible.

Citation context A lexicographic note on a problematic word. Other fragments of the ancient discussion of πριών/πρίων are preserved at

- Sophronius ap. Theodos. Grammatici Graeci IV.2 p. 397.23–4 τὸ πριών ὀφείλει βαρύνεσθαι, ἡ μέντοι συνήθεια κατ' ὀξείαν λέγει ("priôn ought to have a recessive accent, but is customarily pronounced with the accent on the final syllable")
- [Arc.] p. 18.3 ἔτι καὶ τὰ ἔχοντα τὸ ι μακρὸν (sc. βαρύνεται)· κίων πρίων ("furthermore also those that have a long iota (sc. have a recessive accent): kíôn príôn")
- Choer. An.Ox. II p. 249.11–12 πρίων· διὰ τοῦ ι, παροξύνεται· παρὰ γὰρ τὸ πρίζω γέγονεν· πρίονος δὲ ἡ γενική ("príôn: with iota, accented on the penult; because it is cognate with prizô; and the genitive is príonos").

Interpretation The noun πριών/πρίων ("saw", e. g. Ar. fr. 61 πριονωτά, "serrated"; S. Tr. 699; Arist. Metaph. 1044ᵃ28; for the accent, see Text) is < πρίω ("saw"; e. g. Ar. V. 694 ὡς πρίονθ', "like two sawyers"; Ra. 927 μὴ πρῖε τοὺς ὀδόντας, "Don't gnash your teeth!"; Sophr. fr. 105 κύμινον ἔπρισεν, "he saws cumin", i. e. "he's a skinflint"[249]), of which πρίων is a masculine nominative singular participle. (πρίζω, cited by Choeroboscus, is a later form of the verb.)

πριών is an n-stem, of which there are several subcategories in Greek according to vocalism and accent. n-stems originally have a long vowel in the nominative singular and a short vowel in the other cases (e. g. αὐχήν, -ένος, "neck"; ἄρσην, -ενος, "male"; λαγών, -όνος, "flank"; τέκτων, -ονος, "craftsman"), but in many instances the long vowel of the nominative singular is generalized throughout the paradigm (e. g. λειχήν, -ῆνος, "moss"; Ἕλλην, -ηνος, "Hellene"; φαγών, -ώνος, "jaw"; φάγων, -ωνος, "glutton"); cf. Chantraine 1933.

---

[248] Cf. the supposed distinction between ἀρηγών, -όνος, "helper", and the participle ἀρήγων, -οντος, "helping", although in this case the oblique forms differ as well.

[249] A gnomic aorist (proverbial). The fragment is bizarrely mistranslated "he has divided the tip in two" in Montanari s. v. πρίω (apparently a clumsy attempt to deal with the misspelling "cimino" for "cumino" in the Italian original, as if this were an odd form of "culmine"). For the correct sense, see Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 253.3.

158–9; Buck–Petersen 1945. 247–8. Some such nouns are technical terms and denote objects or tools (in addition to πριών/πρίων, frr. 94 ἄκμων, "anvil"; 123 κύφων, "stocks"; 257.2 σκίπων, "staff"; 359.1 κήλων, "stud"; cf. Chantraine 1933. 162 with additional examples). Other nouns in -ων are derived from primary adjectives and denote persons pejoratively (e. g. κέντρων, "one who has been whipped" (Ar. Nu. 450 with Dover 1968 ad loc.) < κέντρον, "goad"; τρίβων, -ωνος, "scoundrel" (Ar. Nu. 869) < τρίβος, "beaten path"). This is also the case in Latin, where the suffix, having likewise generalized the long vowel throughout, formed descriptive cognomina (e. g. Varrō, -ōnis < varus, "bow-legged") and the names of disreputable professionals, as frequently in comedy (e. g. aleō, -ōnis, "gambler" (Naev. Com. 118) < alea, "dice"; latrō, -ōnis, "mercenary" (e. g. Plaut. Mil. 74) < λάτρον, "payment"); cf. Weiss 2009. 309–10. Such nouns thus come close to substantive participles, from which there may be no difference in the nominative.

fr. 483 K.–A. (438 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 102.19–21
π ρ ό τ η θ υ ς· ἡ οὕτω γραῦς, ὡς πρὸ Τηθύος τῆς Ὠκεανοῦ γεγονέναι γυναικός. Κρατῖνος τὴν ὑπεργήρων οὕτω λέγει παίζων p r o t ê t h y s: a woman old enough to have been born before Tethys the wife of Okeanos. Cratinus jokingly refers thus to an extremely old woman

Discussion Kock 1880 I.127

Citation context An isolated Atticist gloss.

Interpretation πρότηθυς (attested only here, and patently a humorous nonce-formation) is < προ- ("before") + Τηθύς ("Tethys"), likely with wordplay on προτήθη ("great-grandmother"; attested only in the same section of Pollux). Tethys is identified by Homer as the estranged wife of Ouranos and the mother of the gods (Il. 14.200–7 ~ 301–6), but by Hesiod (Th. 136 with West 1966 ad loc.)—seemingly followed by Phrynichus here—as a child of Gaia and Ouranos and as the wife of Okeanos and mother of the Rivers (Th. 337–68; cf. Hes. fr. 343.4, where she is again the wife of Okeanos and the mother of Metis; A. Th. 311; [A.] PV 137; Call. Del. 17). See in general Jentel, LIMC VIII.1 pp. 1193–5. A πρότηθυς would be a woman even older than Tethys, i. e. "old as the hills" vel sim.; cf. Ar. Nu. 929 and V. 1480 (out-of-date individuals as a "Kronos"); Av. 469–70 "you were born before Kronos, the Titans and Earth" (i. e. "you are unspeakably old"); Nicopho fr. *23 = Philonid. fr. dub. 17 (quoted below); adesp. com. frr. 607; 610; 751 (all mocking Κρόνος-compounds); Call. fr. 194.52 λευκὴν … Τηθύν ("a white-[haired] Tethys", i. e. "an old, old woman"); προσέληνος ("older than the moon"; Arist. fr. 591 Rose); Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 63.2 κρονικόν.

In kinship terminology, προ- was a third-generation marker, thus πρόπαππος ("great-grandfather"; cf. Lat. proavus) and προτήθη. The fourth-generation marker was ἐπι-, thus ἐπίπαππος ("great-great-grandfather") and ἐπιτήθη. Cf. Poll. 3.18, who expresses his dislike for παππεπίπαππος ("great-great-great-grandfather") even as he acknowledges its presence in Nicopho fr. *23 = Philonid. fr. dub. 17 νυνὶ δὲ Κρόνου καὶ Τιθωνοῦ παππεπίπαππος νενόμισται ("but as it is, he's considered the great-great-great-grandfather of Kronos and Tithonus"); see in general Mallory–Adams 2004. 209–10.

fr. 484 K.–A. (340 K.)

$\Sigma^{\text{VEI}^3\Theta}$ Ar. Eq. 407
τὸν Ἰουλίου γέροντα· ὡς παιδεραστὴς οὗτος ὁ πρεσβύτης διεβάλλετο. οὐκ ἀργῶς δὲ τὴν ἡλικίαν ἐνταῦθα προστέθεικεν. διαβολὴν γὰρ ἐπὶ τοῖς νεωτέροις ἔχοντος τοῦ πράγματος, μείζονα τὴν αἰσχύνην ἐποίησεν ἐπ' αὐτῷ, ᾧπερ γέροντι ὄντι ἀσελγαίνειν καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ὑβρίζειν πρόσεστι. παιδοπίπην δὲ τὸν παράγοντα καὶ παρακρουόμενον καὶ ἀναπείθοντα τὰ μειράκια. τοῦτον δὲ ὁ Κρατῖνος π υ ρ ο π ί π η ν λέγει, τουτέστι τὸν φύλακα τοῦ σίτου, ὡς εἰς τὸ πρυτανεῖον παρέχοντα ἄρτους the old son of Ioulios: This old man was slandered as a pederast. (The poet) did not add a reference to his age idly here. For although the matter brings reproach in reference to younger men, it produces greater shame in the case of someone who is an old man and behaves licentiously and engages in such outrageous actions. A paidopipês is an individual who leads young men astray and deceives and seduces them. Cratinus calls this man a p y r o p i p ê s, that is the guardian of the grain supply, since he supplied loaves of bread to the prytaneion

Meter Compatible with iambic trimeter,
e. g. ⟨×–⏑– ×⟩|–⏑– –⟨–⏑–⟩

Discussion Kock 1880 I.112; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context A gloss on Ar. Eq. 407–8 (424 BCE), transmitted in the form τὸν Ἰουλίου (codd. : τὸν Οὔλιόν Raubitschek) τ' ἂν οἴομαι γέροντα πυροπίπην / ἡσθέντ' ἰηπαιωνίσαι καὶ βακχέβακχον ᾇσαι, "and I expect that the son of Ioulios (thus the manuscripts : "Oulios" Raubitschek) the old pyropipês would be pleased and would produce a victory paean and sing 'Bacchus! Bacchus!'" (anticipated as a reaction to the Paphlagonian/Cleon being forced to disgorge the bribes he has received)—although the note seems to take Aristophanes to have written paidopipês ("boy-ogler"; also attested at Ath. 13.563e, suggesting that it was perceived to be an Atticism). Either word would scan. Closely related material, but without the reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Suda ω 141.

Interpretation πυροπίπης —like παιδοπίπης, modeled on Homeric παρθενοπίπης (Il. 11.385; cf. οἰνοπίπας at Ar. Th. 393)—is < πυρός, "wheat" + ὀπιπεύω, "stare at", and LSJ s. v. takes the scholion to be connecting the word with σιτοφύλαξ, an allotted office whose occupants (apparently ten in this period, five in the city and five in Piraeus) were charged with overseeing the sale of wheat, barley and bread (Lys. 22. 16; SEG XXVI 72 (375/4 BCE); [Arist.] Ath. 51.3). The sitophylakes are not otherwise known to have furnished the bread for dinners in the prytaneion (for which, see in general Schöll 1872), but there is no reason why they should not have done so.

Oulios (PA 11496; PAA 750610[250]) was a son of Cimon and the twin brother of the politically more active Lakedaimonios (see Davies 1971. 306–7), and must have had legal or political trouble with Cleon, hence his projected readiness to rejoice at the Paphlagonian's downfall. Perhaps Oulios actually served as sitophylax (not a very distinguished office), and Cratinus and Aristophanes both referred to him as a pyropipês on that account, or perhaps this is a mocking way of referring e. g. to his involvement in the grain trade or the bread-baking industry. In either case, Aristophanes was almost certainly echoing Cratinus rather than the other way around. Or perhaps the scholion is right, and Aristophanes wrote παιδοπίπην (not πυροπίπην) at Eq. 407, recalling but not repeating a word used by the older poet.

fr. 485 K.–A. (439 K.)

Poll. 2.10

γενειῶν (cf. Pl. Plt. 270e), γενειάσκων (cf. Pl. Smp. 181d), πώγωνος ὑποπιμπλάμενος (Pl. Prt. 309a), π ω γ ω ν ί α ς, ὡς Κρατῖνος having a beard (cf. Pl. Plt. 270e), beginning to get a beard (cf. Pl. Smp. 181d), filling out one's beard (Pl. Prt. 309a), p ô g ô n i a s, as Cratinus (says)

Citation context From a collection of terms for men at various stages of life, in this case as determined by the amount of facial hair they have. Cf. (likely all [250] PAA treats the otherwise unknown komôidoumenos as a different man (*750600 = PA 11496a).

referring to the Cratinus fragment and ultimately drawn from some collection of Attic vocabulary (Aristophanes of Byzantium?))

- Poll. 2.88 καὶ πωγωνίας δέ ("and also pôgônias"; from a collection of words having to do with the face and specifically facial hair, including a number of πώγων-derivatives)
- Suda π 2151 πωγωνίας· ὁ μέγας πώγων ("pôgônias: a big beard").

Interpretation πωγωνίας is < πώγων "beard, whisker" (e. g. Ar. Ach. 120; Philonid. fr. 10; A. Ag. 306; E. fr. 836). For the suffix (frequently used to produce adjectives used in mockery), see fr. 496 n. Phryn. PS p. 4.1–2 claims that ἄπλυτον πώγωνα ("an unwashed beard"; = adesp. com. fr. *556) could be used εἰ θέλοις ἀνεπαχθῶς σκῶψαί τινα πωγωνίαν ("if you would like to mock a pôgônias inoffensively"), suggesting that πωγωνίας, by contrast, was offensive. Later on the term comes to be used of comets (i. e. "bearded stars"; e. g. Arist. Mete. 344[a]23; Chrysipp. Stoic. fr. 692, SVF ii.201; Poll. 4.159), for which a more common term is κομήτης ("long-haired stars" (e. g. Arist. Mete. 343[b]5), whence the English word "comet") picked up as an Atticism at D. C. 59.26.7 λειογένειος αὖ καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο πωγωνίας ("clean-shaven and sometime later bearded"; of Caligula).

Athenians of the classical period routinely cultivated beards, but seem to have trimmed them, making anyone with an unkempt beard stand out (cf. εὐπώγων at Arist. Phgn. 808[a]23). According to Chrysippus (xxviii fr. 2, SVF iii.198 ap. Ath. 13.565a), fashions changed in the time of Alexander the Great.

fr. 486 K.–A. (440 K.)

Phot. ρ 169 = Suda ρ 282
ῥ ύ γ χ ο ς· τὸ πρόσωπον· Κρατῖνος (καὶ Κρατῖνος Suda) καὶ ἕτεροι

r h y n c h o s: the face; Cratinus ("both Cratinus" Suda) and others

Citation context A fragment of an Atticist discussion of the appropriateness of the use of ῥύγχος in an extended sense, drawn from the common source of Photius and the Suda conventionally referred to as Σ′′. Related material is preserved at

- Antiatt. ρ 4 ῥύγχος· τὸ πρόσωπον. Ἀραρώς (fr. 1)· ὁ γὰρ θεὸς τὸ ῥύγχος ὡς ἡμᾶς στρέφει ("rhynchos: the face. Araros (fr. 1): for the god is turning his rhynchos toward us"), the original—doubtless much fuller—version of the text likely having been the source of the entry in Photius

- Ath. 3.95e ὅτι δὲ κυρίως λέγεται ῥύγχος ἐπὶ τῶν συῶν προείρηται. ὅτι δὲ καὶ ἐπ' ἄλλων ζῴων Ἄρχιππος Ἀμφιτρύωνι δευτέρῳ (fr. 1) κατὰ παιδιὰν εἴρηκε καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ προσώπου οὕτως· καὶ ταῦτ' ἔχων τὸ ῥύγχος οὑτωσὶ μακρόν. καὶ Ἀραρὼς Ἀδώνιδι (fr. 1)· ὁ γὰρ θεὸς τὸ ῥύγχος ὡς ἡμᾶς στρέφει ("That rhynchos is properly used of pigs was noted earlier.[251] But Archippus in Amphitryôn II (fr. 1) says that (it can also be used) in reference to other animals, and even of the human face, as follows: and having (masc.) as big a rhynchos as this at that! And Araros in Adonis (fr. 1): for the god is turning his rhynchos toward us"; part of a longer treatment of the word preserving many of the poetic fragments cited in Interpretation)
- Poll. 2.47 τὸ δὲ ὑπὸ τῷ μετώπῳ πρόσωπον, ὃ μόνον ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων οὕτω καλοῦμεν· ἐπὶ γὰρ τῶν ζῴων προτομήν, ὡς ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρνίθων ῥύγχος καὶ ῥάμφος ("the prosôpon is the part of the face below the forehead, a term we only use thus only in reference to human beings; for in reference to animals the word is protomê, while in reference to birds it is rhynchos and rhamphos")
- Suda ρ 34 ῥάμφος· ῥύγχος ὀρνίθων. πρόσωπον. ῥάμφος ἐπὶ ὀρνέου, ῥύγχος ἐπὶ χοίρου ("rhamphos: the rhynchos of birds; face. Rhamphos is used in reference to a bird, rhynchos in reference to a pig").

Note also
- Poll. 5.79 περὶ δὲ συὸς εἴποις ἂν βαθύνει τῷ ῥύγχει τὴν γῆν ("in reference to a pig, you would say that he roots up the earth with his rhynchos")
- $\Sigma^{\text{REΓ}}$ Ar. Ach. 744 τὰ ῥυγχία· τὰ ῥυγχία κυρίως ἔφη. ἐπὶ γὰρ χοίρου λέγεται ῥύγχος ("ta rhynchia: [the poet] was right to use ta rhynchia; because rhynchos is used in reference to a pig")
- Σ^{LEAT} Theoc. 6.29 ῥύγχος· καταχρηστικῶς ἐπὶ τοῦ κυνὸς νυνὶ λέγεται· κυρίως δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρνέων ("rhynchos: the word is misused today to refer to a dog, but is properly applied to birds").

Interpretation ῥύγχος (first attested in Stesich. PMG 221 = fr. 184 Finglass; from Boar-Hunters) is typically used of the beaks of birds (e. g. Ar. Av. 364, 479; Arist. HA 517^{a}8; GA 756^{b}20) or the snouts of animals, especially pigs (e. g. Pherecr. fr. 107; Ar. Ach. 744 (diminutive ῥυγχία); Anaxil. frr. 11; 13.2; 19.4; Arist. HA 595^{a}18; of a dog at Thphr. Char. 4.12; Theoc. 6.30; of a dolphin at Arist. HA 566^{b}15). Cf. Headlam 1922 on Herod. 5.41. The use of the word in reference to a human being's face is thus likely most often abusive, as certainly at Eup. fr. 282 (with Olson 2016 ad loc.); Hermipp. fr. 74.2–3 αἱμορυγχιᾶν, "to have a bloody snout/nose"; and probably at Arar. fr. 1; Archipp. fr. 1 (both quoted in Citation context) as well.

[251] Untrue, at least of the text of Athenaeus as it has come down to us.

fr. 487 K.–A. (441 K.)

Phot. ρ 171
ῥ ύ δ η ν· σφοδρῶς καὶ ἀθρόως· οὕτως Κρατῖνος

r h y d ê n: excessively and all at once; thus Cratinus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.206

Citation context Cf. Hsch. ρ 471 ῥυδὸν ἢ ῥύδην· χύδην, δαψιλῶς, ῥευστικῶς, σφοδρῶς ("rhydon or rhydên: in a flood, abundantly, in a torrent, vehemently"), which Hansen traces to Diogenianus. Hsch. ρ 468 ῥύδην· εὐκόλως, ἢ ἀθρόως ἐπιτρέχοντες ("rhydên: easily, or running up to one all at once"; also traced to Diogenianus by Hansen) is not obviously from the same source. Poll. 6.175 (a collection of -δην words) expresses uncertainty about whether ῥύδην (like φυράδην) is acceptable diction, suggesting that the reference in Photius comes from an Atticist lexicographer attempting to show that the word had good 5th-century credentials.

Interpretation ῥύδην (< ῥέω, "flow") is first attested at Hippon. frr. 36.1 (opposed to ἡσυχῇ); 107.11; subsequently at Plb. fr. 19 and in Plutarch (e. g. Sulla 21.2; Luc. 39.2; Caes. 29.3).

The suffix -δην was used to form adverbs, as already in Homer, e. g. ἄδην ("to one's fill"; Il. 5.203); τμήδην ("with cutting"; Il. 7.262); λίγδην ("grazing"; Od. 22.278). Cf. in comedy ἀναβάδην (Ar. Ach. 410; Pl. 1123); ἄρδην (Ar. Th. 274; Diph. fr. 105.2; Men. Kol. 87); βάδην (Ar. Ach. 535; Lys. 254; Sosip. fr. 1.50); διαρρήδην (Men. Epitr. 929); καταβάδην (Ar. Ach. 411); κρύβδην (Ar. V. 1018); μεσοπέρδην (adesp. com. fr. 775); παμπήδην (Men. Asp. 413); προβάδην (Ar. Ra. 351); στάδην (Pl. Com. fr. 138.2); σπερχυλλάδην (adesp. com. fr. *422); συλλήβδην (Ar. V. 657; Pl. 646); φαρυγίνδην (adesp. com. fr. 549); χύδην (Pherec. fr. 179; Alex. fr. 54; Diph. fr. 42.3); and elsewhere also e. g. ἀμφάδην (Archil. fr. 128.4); διαφάδην (Sol. fr. 37); λάγδην (S. fr. 693); παμπήδην (A. Pers. 715; S. Ai. 916). Lucian offers several such nonce-forms in his Lexiphanes (5 δράγδην, "in one's grasp"; 10 ἄγδην, "by carrying"). In general, see Frohwein 1868. 106–13 (an extensive list of adverbs in -δην); Haas 1959; Rau 2006.

fr. 488 K.–A. (442 K.)

Phot. σ 19
Σ ά γ ρ α· ἀντὶ τοῦ (Dindorf : † αἰ τοῦ † Phot.) ἀλήθεια. οὕτως Κρατίνος

S a g r a: in place of (thus Dindorf : † ai tou † Phot.) "truth". Thus Cratinus Discussion Lelli 2006. 93–4

Citation context Cf. Phot. σ 20 Σάγρα· ποταμὸς ἐν Ἰταλίᾳ καὶ τόπος, ἀφ' οὗ ἡ παροιμία "ἀληθέστερα τῶν ἐπὶ Σάγρᾳ" ("Sagra: a river in Italy and a place, whence the proverb 'truer than what happened at Sagra'"), which looks like a more complete version of this note. Note also fr. 238 (mentioning a Phormio from Croton), where Kassel–Austin cite similar material at Suda φ 604 Φορμίων· ... ἦν δὲ Κροτωνιάτης καὶ ἐν τῇ ἐπὶ Σάγρᾳ μάχῃ ἐτρώθη ("Phormio: he was from Croton and was wounded in the battle at Sagra").

Interpretation Σάγρα as a synonym for "truth" refers to the proverb ἀληθέστερα τῶν ἐπὶ Σάγρᾳ ("truer than what happened at Sagra"), which is also said to have been used or adapted at Sophr. fr. 169; Alex. fr. 306 with Arnott 1996 ad loc.; Men. fr. 32. The saying is mentioned by Cicero (N.D. 3.13) and is first quoted at Strabo 6.261. The Sagra River (not securely identifiable, but perhaps the Torbido or Allaro, both in Calabria; cf. Bicknell 1966. 294 n. 1) was the site of a battle between Croton and Epizephyrian Locris, whose forces, although outnumbered, were victorious; see Bicknell 1966; Sourvinou-Inwood 1974; Wonder 2012. 139. On the same day, according to Zenob. 2.17, a rumor of the victory reached the Spartans, who had previously rejected a Locrian request for assistance. But the news was not credited until it was later confirmed by messengers, hence the proverb, referring to news that is true yet nonetheless not believed. For other proverbs in Cratinus, cf. test. 15; frr. 64; 96; 135; 261–3.

fr. 489 K.–A. (337 K.)

Eust. (1) p. 1669.44–6 = i.395.13–14 = Suet. περὶ βλασφημίας C.IV.80 (p. 102) τὸν μωρὸν οἴδαμεν σάνναν καλεῖσθαι ὡς ἀπό τινος κυρίου ὀνόματος. καὶ παράγεται Κρατῖνος, κωμῳδῶν τοιοῦτον, τὸν Θ ε ο ζ ο τ ί δ η ν (K.–A. : Θεοδοτίδην Eust.) σ ά ν ν α ν

We know that an idiot is called a sannas, as if from a proper name. And Cratinus, mocking someone of this sort, introduces T h e o z o t i d e s (thus K.–A. : Theodotides Eust.) as a s a n n a s

Eust. (2) p. 1761.19–23 = ii.73.35–9
καινὴ καὶ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀσυνήθης λέξις ἐστὶν, οὕτω καὶ ὁ παρὰ τῷ κωμικῷ Κρατίνῳ σ ά ν ν α ς. αὐτὸς μέντοι οὐ τὸν εὐήθη ἁπλῶς δηλοῖ ἀλλὰ τὸν μωρόν, ὃν ἴσως ἡ κοινὴ γλῶσσα τζαννὸν λαλεῖ. δόξοι δ' ἂν εἰλῆφθαι ἡ λέξις ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀσιανῶν σάννων, οὓς οἱ ἰδιῶται τζάννους καλοῦσι, βαρβαρικοὺς ὄντας καὶ, ὡς εἰκός, εὐήθεις δι' ἀπαιδευσίαν. ὁ δὲ τὸν σάνναν τοῦτον παρασημηνάμενος Ἀριστοφάνης ὁ γραμματικὸς καὶ ἄλλας ἐκτίθεται καινοφώνους λέξεις, οἷον (gl. 5) ——

This is a strange and unusual word to many people, like s a n n a s in the comic playwright Cratinus. He himself, however, does not show that the word means merely "simple" (euêthês) but "idiot", for which colloquial speech perhaps uses tzannos. The word would appear to have been taken from the Asian sannoi, whom ignoramuses call tzannoi, since they are barbaric and, it seems, simple because of their lack of education. Aristophanes the grammarian, after defining a sannas thus, also cites other novel words, such as (gl. 5) ——

Eust. (3) p. 777.62 = II.816.6
σάννας ὁ μωρὸς παρὰ Κρατίνῳ sannas is an idiot in Cratinus

Phot. σ 69
σάνναν· τὸν μωρόν. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

sannas (acc.): an idiot. Thus Cratinus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.187; Clark 1955. 245–6; Pfeiffer 1968. 198–9; Kassel–Austin ad loc.

Text Eustathius transmits the name as Θεοδοτίδης, while at Pl. Ap. 33e it appears variously as Θεοζ- and Θεοσδ-. But inscriptions always have Θεοζ- (cf. Threatte 1980. 550), hence Kassel–Austin's correction here.

Citation context Eustathius (2) identifies Aristophanes of Byzantium (fr. 1, presumably from On Suspect Words) as the source for this information. Erbse traced the note to Aelius Dionysius (σ 8; perhaps drawing on Pamphilus) and suggests that the note in Photius may come from the same source.

Related material is preserved at POxy. 2176 fr. 1.2–3 = Hippon. fr. 129A.2–4 (commentary on Hippon. fr. 129) [κύριο]ν ὄνομα ὁ Σάννος, ὦ⟨ι⟩ λοιδορ̣[εῖται.] πεποιῆσθαί φασιν παρὰ τὴ[ν σαννάδα] ("Sannos is a proper name, which is used as a term of abuse. Authorities say that it is derived from sannas"); Hsch. σ 175 σάννορος· μωρός. παρὰ Ῥίνθωνι (fr. 20) ("sannoros: an idiot; in Rhinthon (fr. 20)"); Ar. Byz.[M] (part of fr. 1) σάννας· ὁ μωρός ("sannas: an idiot").

Interpretation Meineke thought the reference was to Theozotides (PA 6913–14; PAA 507785) the father of Nicostratus and Theodotus mentioned by Plato (Ap. 33e), who was prosecuted by Lysias in 403/2 BCE for an unconstitutional financial proposal (or. 64, frr. 128–50; cf. Poll. 8.46) and who proposed a decree pertaining to war orphans (IG II^2 5.3; cf. Stroud 1971). Clark, on the other hand, took the reference to be to Theozotides' homonymous grandson (PA 6915; PAA 507790) and accordingly attributed this fragment to Cratinus Junior, hence its inclusion among the dubia. At one point when the younger Theozotides was serving as a choregos, he employed a certain Sannion (PA 12553; PAA 811840; Stephanis #2212) to train his chorus (D. 21.59 with MacDowell 1990 ad loc.), and Sannion is said at Demochar. FGrH 75 F 6a to have helped Aeschines when Aeschines (serving as tritagonist) stumbled on stage. Since Aeschines was not born until ca. 390 BCE, a reasonable terminus post quem for the connection between Aeschines, Sannion and the younger Theozotides is 370 BCE. Clark argues that the coincidence of two rare personal names, from the second of which Eustathius seems to derive sannas (ὡς ἀπό τινος κυρίου ὀνόματος), cannot be a coincidence, dating the fragment about 50 years after the likely date of Cratinus' death.

σαννάς (not attested outside of this fragment and the ancient authorities who preserve it) may be < σαίνω, "wag one's tail, fawn" (e.g. Ar. Eq. 1031). Note σαννίων (Arr. Epict. 3.22.83), formed with the suffix -ίων, which adds a pejorative sense (cf. Ar. Pax 193 δειλακρίων) and taken over in Latin as sannio ("buffoon"; Cic. Orat. 251; Fam. 9.16.10; Plin. Nat. 7.55; as a personal name in Ter. Eu. and Ad.), perhaps via Greek comic authors from Southern Italy such as Rhinthon and subsequently via Atellan farce (a fragment of Novius' Sanniones is preserved, cf. Ribbeck 1871. 267), and σάννορος ("foolish"; Hsch. σ 175, quoted above), as well as personal names such as Σαννίων (D. 21.58), Σαννυρίων (a 5th-century comic poet) and Σαννίδωρος (D.L. 10.8).

fr. 490 K.–A. (443 K.)

Poll. 10.143
καὶ ξυστὰ δ' εἴποις ἂν καὶ κάμακας καὶ παλτὰ καὶ σαρίσσας καὶ σ α υ ν ί α· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ὄνομα ἐπ' ἀνδρείου αἰδοίου ἐστὶ παρὰ Κρατίνῳ, ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ δόρατος ἐν Φιλαδέλφοις Μενάνδρου (fr. 399)· ——

And you could also call spears kamakes, palta, sarissai and s a u n i a; for the word is used to refer to male genitalia in Cratinus, but to a spear in Menander's Philadelphoi (fr. 399): ——

Hsch. σ 273 = Phot. σ 99 σ α ύ ν ι ο ν· ἀκόντιον βαρβαρικόν. καὶ (⟨ἀνδρεῖον αἰδοῖον⟩ add. Marzullo) σαθρόν, χαῦνον, ἀσθενές, παρὰ Κρατίνῳ

s a u n i o n: a barbarian javelin. Also (one that is; "male genitalia that are" added instead by Marzullo) unsound, loose, weak, in Cratinus Discussion Meineke 1839 II.213–14; Marzullo 1959. 154; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context The reference in Pollux comes from a collection of words having to do with soldiers' equipment within a larger discussion of tools associated with various trades and enterprises; a list of equipment for hunting precedes, while a list of artisans' tools follows.

Interpretation σαυνίον—attested nowhere after Menander until the Roman period; etymology unknown, but probably a foreign loan-word, given the claim in Hsch. = Phot. that it was used specifically for a non-Greek style of javelin—is not found elsewhere with the meaning "penis". Words for weaponry are occasionally used figuratively in a sexual sense (cf. δορύ, "spear" ~ "erect penis", at Ar. Lys. 985). But Hsch. σ 172 σάννιον· τὸ αἰδοῖον, ἀντὶ τοῦ κέρκιον· παρὰ τὸ τῇ κέρκῳ σαίνειν. τὸ γὰρ αἰδοῖον ἐσθ' ὅτε οὐρὰν ἔλεγον, ὡς Εὔπολις (fr. 471) ("sannion: a penis, in place of 'a little tail': from 'to fawn (sainein) with its tail'. Because they sometimes called a penis a tail (oura), as Eupolis (does) (fr. 471)") suggests that Cratinus actually wrote not σαύνιον but σάννιον (for which, see Olson 2014. 234, and cf. fr. 489 n.), and that the word was garbled in transmission early on. If so, Hsch. σ 273 = Phot. σ 99 suggests that the adjective, whatever it was, that Cratinus added to describe the penis in question must have been intended to make clear that it would have difficulty achieving an erection, like Philocleon's σαπρὸν … σχοινίον ("rotten little cable") at Ar. V. 1343.

fr. 491 K.–A. (444 K.)

EM pp. 717.57–718.3
σκιρωθῆναί φαμεν ἐπὶ τοῦ ῥύπου τοῦ σφόδρα ἐμμένοντος καὶ δυσεκπλύτου. Σώφρων ἐν τοῖς Γυναικείοις τροπικῶς (fr. 32)· ——. σ κ ῑ ρ ο ν δὲ τὸν ἀειδῆ ῥύπον καὶ Κρατῖνος λέγει, καὶ Εὔπολις (fr. 299.2) ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐν τῷ τυρῷ ῥύπου. ἀλλὰ καὶ Ξενοφῶν ἐν τῷ περὶ Ἱππικῆς (4.2) οὕτω λέγει

σκῖρον K.–A. : σκίρων EM[D] : σκίρον EM[cett.] ἀειδῆ EM : ἀηδῆ Meineke

We use the term skirôthênai in reference to dirt that clings closely to something and is difficult to wash off. Sophron in his Women's Mimes (uses the verb) figuratively (fr. 32): ——. But Cratinus too calls unsightly filth s k î r o n, while Eupolis (fr. 299.2) uses the word in reference to the rind on cheese. And Xenophon too uses (the verb) thus[252] in his On Horsemanship (4.2)

Text The manuscripts of the EM offer σκίρον ("parasol") and in one case σκίρων (presumably to be understood as gen. pl. of Σκίρα, the name of an Athenian festival, for which see e. g. Pherecr. fr. 265; Ar. Ec. 18, and cf. Harp. pp. 276.12–277.4 = Σ 29 Keaney, citing other sources). But σκῖρον—the long iota is metrically guaranteed at Eup. fr. 299.2; Ar. V. 925—is required by the sense.

Citation context Cf. Σ^{VT} Ar. V. 925, which quotes a more complete version of the fragment of Eupolis referenced by the EM and is likely drawn from the same source: τὸ σκῖρον ἐξεδήδοκεν: σκῖρον τὸ ῥυπῶδες τὸ ἐπὶ τῶν τυρῶν. Εὔπολις Χρυσῷ γένει (fr. 299)· ——. ἀπὸ τούτου καὶ τὰ λίαν προσεχόμενα ἐνεσκιρῶσθαι λέγεται ("he's eaten off the rind: skîron is the dirty part on cheeses. Eupolis in Chrysoun genos (fr. 299): ——. As a consequence, whatever clings too closely is said to have turned into skîron"). Note also Hsch. σ 893 σκεῖρος· ῥύπος. καὶ ὁ δριμὺς τυρός. καὶ ἄλσος καὶ δρυμός. Φιλήτας (fr. 21 Dettori) δὲ τὴν πυρώδη γῆν ("skeiros: filth; also pungent cheese; also a sacred grove and a thicket. But Philetas (fr. 21 Dettori) uses it of fiery earth[253]"), which Theodoridis traces to Diogenianus.

Interpretation σκῖρος is the "rind" on cheese at Ar. V. 925 (with Biles–Olson 2015 ad loc.) and Eup. fr. 299.2 (with Olson 2016 ad loc.), while in medical writers it refers to a fibrous mass that forms for example in the uterus (cf. Hp. Mul. 18 = 8.58.3–8 Littré; Erot. s. v. ἐμυλώθη). In both cases, as well as in the other meanings for the word offered by Hesychius (see Citation context), a rough overgrowth of some sort is in question. But the etymology and thus the root-sense is unclear; see in general Dettori 2000. 147–52. Beekes 2010 s. v. takes the variants ὁ σκῖρος, τὸ σκῖρον, σκῖρρον, σκῦρον to suggest that the word is substrate vocabulary.

---

[252] I.e. in the same way Sophron does, in the sense "become chronic" in reference to a disease.

[253] I.e. the crust that forms on top of lava? Dettori 2000. 151 compares Eust. p. 1304.28 = IV.742.13–14 ὁ σκῖρος καὶ γύψον ἢ γῆν γυψώδη δηλοῖ ("skîros refers to gypsum or earth that contains gypsum") and suggests emending to γυψώδη γῆν.

fr. 492 K.–A. (336 K.)

Hsch. σ 1156
Σ κ υ θ ι κ ό ς· Κρατῖνος Σκυθικὸν ἔφη τὸν Ἱππόνικον, διὰ τὸ πυρρὸν εἶναι. καὶ ᾧ ξανθίζονται αἱ γυναῖκες καὶ βάπτουσι τὰ ἔρια

S c y t h i a n: Cratinus called Hipponicus Scythian because he was redheaded. Also what women use to color their hair blond and to dye wool Meter The upsilon in Σκυθικός is short.

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.199; Lelli 2006. 94–5

Citation context Traced by Hansen to Diogenianus. Hsch. ι 292 and $\Sigma^{VE\theta}$ Ar. Ra. 308 (preserving Eup. fr. 20) are perhaps drawn ultimately from the same source as the first half of the note. For the second half, cf.

- Hsch. θ 155 θάψινον· τὸ ξανθόν, ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς θάψου, ᾧ ξανθίζουσι τὰ ἔρια καὶ τὰς κεφαλάς. τοῦτό τινες (Sapph. fr. 210) Σκυθικὸν λέγουσι ("thapsinon: blond, from thapsos wood, with which they dye their wool and their heads; some authorities (Sapph. fr. 210) refer to this (wood) as Scythian")
- Phot. θ 44 θάψος· ξύλον, ᾧ ξανθίζουσι τὰ ἔρια καὶ τὰς τρίχας· ὃ Σαπφὼ (fr. 210) "Σκυθικὸν ξύλον" λέγει ("thapsos: a wood with which they dye their wool and their hair blond; Sappho (fr. 210) refers to it as 'Scythian wood'")
- Σ^{UEA} Theoc. 2.88b (p. 286 Wendel) θάψος … ἐστι ξύλον τι, ὃ καλεῖται καὶ Σκυθικὸν ξύλον, ὥς φησι καὶ Σαπφώ (fr. 210). τούτῳ δὲ τὰ ἔρια βάπτουσι καὶ ποιοῦσι μήλινα καὶ τὰς τρίχας ξανθίζουσιν ("thapsos is a type of wood, which is also called Scythian wood, as Sappho (fr. 210) as well says. They use this to dye their wool and give it a quince-color, and to color their hair blond").

Interpretation Hipponicus II (PA 7658; PAA 538910), the son of Callias II (PA 7825; PAA 554480) of the deme Alopeke and Elpinice (PA 4678; PAA 387165; see Olson 2016. 244 on Eup. fr. 221), born sometime in the first quarter of the 5th century BCE, was famously wealthy, having inherited a fortune amassed by exploiting slave-labor in the silver mines at Laurion (Lys. 19.48; X. Vect. 4.15; Isoc. 16.31; And. 1.115, 130; Phot. λ 44). He also controlled large amounts of land in Attica, as well as the Eleusinian dadouchia. Hipponicus' son Callias III was the central target of Eupolis' Kolakes, which was staged in 421 BCE, apparently shortly after Hipponicus' death; see in general Meyer 1899. 28–32; Davies 1971. 259–63; Olson 2016. 35–6, 40.

LSJ s. v. σκυθικός, citing also Alc. fr. 354 (= fr. 48B Bergk[4]) Ἀχίλλευς ὁ τὰς Σκυθίκας μέδεις ("Achilleus who rules over the Scythians"; not obviously relevant), takes the reference to be to Hipponicus' allegedly ruddy complexion. But the Scythians were notoriously blond (πυρρός), which Hesychius attests was the point of the remark; cf. Hdt. 4.108.1 with Stein 1896 ad loc.; Hp. Aer. 20 = 2.74.15–17 Littré; Xenoph. 21 B 16.2 with Diels–Krantz 1952 ad loc.;[254] Arnott 1996 on Alex. fr. 103.16–18. At the same time, Σκυθικός likely amounts to a malicious charge of non-Athenian status; cf. Ar. Ach. 704 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; Aeschin. 3.172; Olson 2016 on Eup. fr. 172.14 (with further bibliography); and in general Olson 2002 on Ar. Ach. 704–5; Olson 2016a on Eup. fr. 61.

Scythia (an ill-defined region north of the Black Sea stretching roughly from the Danube River to the Volga, and thus encompassing parts of modern Ukraine, southern Russia and Kazakhstan) was inhabited in the 1st millennium BCE by Eastern-Iranian-speaking peoples whom the Greeks called "Scythians".[255] Herodotus devotes much of his Book 4 to Scythians and is thus our chief historical source for their history and ethnography, although Iranian peoples first appear in the historical record in 9th-century Assyrian sources (cf. Beckwith 2009. 61). Herodotus gives four contradictory accounts of the Scythians' origins (4.7–8, 11, 13), but according to the account that he himself found most credible, they crossed from Asia into Cimmeria (4.11) after fighting with the Massagetae in the 8/7th century BCE. According to Herodotus, the Scythians were nomads[256] who carried their homes on wagons,[257] were skilled archers and horsemen, and lived off their cattle rather than agriculture (4.46); wore pants and pointed caps and carried daggers and axes, in addition to their bows, (4.64); and were corpulent with broad faces and flat noses (4.23; cf. Hp. Aer. 20 = 2.74.8–9 Littré). See in general Rolle 1989; Beckwith 2009. 58–77; Rolle 2011.

Thapsus is a species of cotinus (Cotinus coccygia, or Rhus cotinus Linnaeus), a ubiquitous perennial shrub that flowers in May-June and is poisonous if eaten (cf. Krochmal–Lavrentiades 1955. 185). Its wood was used to make a yellow dye for wool and hair known as "young fustic" (cf. Theoc. 2.88 μευ χρὼς μὲν ὁμοῖος ἐγίνετο πολλάκι θάψῳ, "my skin was often similar to thapsus", i. e. pale; Nic. Al. 570). A recipe for hair-dye made from alum, orpiment, saffron and thapsus is preserved at Paul. Aeg. 3.2.6. See in general Martelli 2014. 124.

---

254 Diels–Krantz misleadingly say that the adjective means rothaarig here, but cite Hippocrates for what they take to be a different sense.

255 Borrowed from Iranian skuδa-*, "archer"; cf. Szemerényi 1980.

256 At 4.108, however, he mentions Gelonus, a large fortified city with temples inhabited by the Budini, a Scythian tribe.

257 Cf. [A.] PV 709–10 ("wicker huts carried on high, well-wheeled carts").

fr. 493 K.–A. (368 K.)

Eust. p. 294.40–3 = I.455.10–14
Αἴλιος Διονύσιός (λ 1) φησιν οὕτω· Λακεδαίμονα καὶ Σπάρτην διορίζουσι τινες, Λακεδαίμονα μὲν πᾶσαν καλοῦντες τὴν Λάκαιναν, Σπάρτην δὲ τὴν μίαν πόλιν, Ἀττικοὶ δὲ αὐτὴν καὶ Λακεδαίμονα. Κρατῖνος δὲ καὶ τὴν χώραν Σπάρτην οἶδεν, οὐ μόνον Λακεδαίμονα

Aelius Dionysius (λ 1) says the following: some authorities differentiate between Lakedaimôn and Spartê, calling Spartan territory as a whole Lakedaimôn, but the city in particular Spartê, although Attic-speakers also referred to (the city) as Lakedaimôn. And Cratinus knows the region as Spartê, not just as Lakedaimôn

Phot. λ 37
Λακεδαίμονα καὶ Σπάρτην ὁρίζουσί τινες· Λακεδαίμονα μὲν πᾶσαν νομίζοντες καλεῖσθαι τὴν Λάκαιναν, Σπάρτην δὲ τὴν μίαν πόλιν· οἱ δ' οὖν Ἀττικοὶ τὴν πόλιν αὐτὴν οὐ μόνον Σπάρτην, ἀλλὰ καὶ Λακεδαίμονα καλοῦσιν. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

Some authorities distinguish between Lakedaimôn and Spartê, reasoning that Spartan territory as a whole is called Lakaina, but the city in particular (is called) Spartê. Attic-speakers accordingly call the city itself not only Spartê but also Lakedaimôn. Thus Cratinus

Citation context Traced to Aelius Dionysius by Eustathius (discussing Il. 2.581–2 οἳ δ' εἶχον κοίλην Λακεδαίμονα κητώεσσαν, / Φᾶρίν τε Σπάρτην τε πολυτρήρωνά τε Μέσσην); the version of the text in Photius seemingly garbles the point, taking Cratinus to have made the common substitution "Lakedaimôn" for "Spartê", whereas the more detailed note in Eustathius says he did the opposite. Hsch. λ 186 is a much abbreviated version of the same material: Λακεδαίμων· ἡ Σπάρτη. καὶ ποτὲ ἡ χώρα πᾶσα· ποτὲ δὲ πόλις ὁμώνυμος τῇ χώρᾳ ("Lakedaimôn: Spartê. Sometimes the whole country, but at other times the city is referred to by the same name as the country"); cf. Σ^{AD} Il. 2.581 (glossing κοίλην Λακεδαίμονα, "hollow Lakedaimôn") τὴν δὲ πόλιν Σπάρτην καλοῦσιν ("but they refer to the city as Spartê").

Interpretation The appellation Spartê ("Sparta"; etymology uncertain, as often with toponyms) is already attested in Homer as the name of the city (e. g. Il. 2.581–2; 4.52), and elsewhere in comedy is always used that way (Ar. Av. 814; Lys. 1072; Th. 860, 919; Anaxandr. fr. 42.20).[258] Cratinus' use of the name to [258] In fr. 119, Ψύρα τε τὴν Σπάρτην ἄγεις ("and you make Sparta out to be Psyra", a tiny, unimportant island, and thus "to be nothing"), it is unclear whether the city or the region is meant. If the latter, fr. 493 is merely another reference to that line.

refer instead to the region—properly Lakedaimôn (etymology also uncertain; attested already in Mycenaean)—is paralleled elsewhere at Pherecyd. FGrH 3 F 168 Οἴτυλος, ἀφ' οὗ ἡ πόλις ἡ ἐν Σπάρτῃ καλεῖται ("Oitylos, from whom the city in Sparta gets its name"); Plb. FGrH 87 F 48 = fr. 240a Edelstein–Kidd. The opposite confusion (Lakedaimôn used to refer to the region's most important city), which Eustathius and Photius both treat as common in Attic sources, is far more natural but also more difficult to detect—since e. g. any ambassador sent to Sparta could also be said, with a bit less geographical precision, to be sent to Lakedaimon, although one could also go to Lakedaimon without going to Sparta in particular—but cf. e. g. Ar. Ach. 175; Eq. 668; Th. 1.72.1, 90.5; And. 3.3; X. HG 1.3.19, and note the explicit comment at Str. 10.446 καθάπερ Λακεδαίμων τε καὶ Σπάρτη ἡ αὐτή ("just as the same city is called Lakedaimôn and Spartê").

fr. 494 K.–A. (445 K.)

Phot. σ 642
σ τ ρ ω μ α τ ί τ η ς· ἐν ᾧ ἑαυτοῖς στρώματα παρεῖχον. οὕτως Κρατῖνος στρωματίτης Alberti ex Hsch. σ 2057 : στρωματητης Phot.^{g} : στρωματήτς Phot.$^{z^{ac}}$: στρωματητής Phot.$^{z^{pc}}$ s t r ô m a t i t ê s: at which they provided their own bedding. Thus Cratinus

Meter Compatible with iambic trimeter, e. g.
⟨– – ⏑ – –⟩ – ⏑ – – ⟨– ⏑ –⟩

Text Photius' στρωματητης (i. e. στρωματήτης) is suspect since no other nouns in -ητης are formed from neuters in -μα, -ματος, hence Alberti's correction (drawing on the parallel material in Hesychius quoted in Citation context). The accentuation of nouns in -της is variable, and the original state of affairs, whatever it was, seems to have been disturbed. But in general, polysyllabic nouns in -της derived from nouns are paroxytone (e. g. ἐργάτης, "workman" if < ἔργον, "work"), while those derived from verbs are oxytone (e. g. ἐργαστής, "workman" if < ἐργάζω, "work"). See in general Chantraine 1933. 320; Buck–Petersen 1945. 545–6.

Citation context A lexicographic note traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus. Hsch. σ 2057 στρωματίτην· ἔρανόν τινα, ἐν ᾧ ἑαυτοῖς παρεῖχον τὰ στρώματα ("strômatitên: a joint-contribution meal at which they provided their own bedding") must be drawn from the same source, although the reference to Cratinus has been stripped out there.

Interpretation στρωματίτης is < στρῶμα ("spread object"; in the plural generally "bedclothes"), which is in turn derived < στόρνυμι ("spread out"). For the use of στρώματα to cover the wooden couches (κλῖναι) on which the Greeks reclined at dinner parties and symposia, e. g. Hermipp. fr. 77.2; Ar. Ach. 1090 with Olson 2002 ad loc.; V. 1213; Ra. 544; Pl. Com. fr. 230.1; cf. Ransom 1905. 39–54. An ἔρανος was properly an informal feast to which everyone contributed a share (e. g. Od. 1.226; 11.415, in both of which an ἔρανος is contrasted with an εἰλαπίνη, "solemn feast", on the one hand, and a γάμος, "wedding banquet", on the other; X. Cyr. 7.1.12). Here the idea is apparently that everyone brings his own bedding[259] (sc. because a host is providing the food?; contrast the arrangement at Ar. Ach. 1085–93, where Dicaeopolis brings his dinner and his wine, but everything else is furnished).

The suffix -ῖτης was used to form appellatives (e. g. τρισμακαρίτης Antiph. fr. 166.8; τεμαχίτης Eub. fr. 8.4; πυαλίτης Eub. fr. 57.4), often designating ethnicity (e. g. Συβαρίτης, "Sybarite" (Ar. V. 1427); Ταρταρίτης, "inhabitant of Tartarus" (adesp. com. fr. 876); cf. Ar. Eq. 42 Δῆμος Πυκνίτης, "Demos of Pnyx", 547 θόρυβον χρηστὸν Ληναΐτην, "a useful Lenaean din"), professions (e. g. ὁπλίτης, "hoplite" (e. g. Ar. V. 360; Lys. 394) < ὅπλον, "equipment"; τραπεζίτης, "banker" (e. g. Antiph. fr. 157.11) < τράπεζα, "table"; θρανίτης, "rower" (e. g. Ar. Ach. 162) < θρᾶνος, "bench"), and types of wine (e. g. μηλίτης, "cider" < μῆλον, "apple"; αὐτίτης, "home-made wine" (Telecl. fr. 10; Polyzel. fr. 1) < αὐτός, "self; same"), types of bread (e. g. τηγανίτης, "frying-pan-cake" (Hippon. fr. 37.2) < τήγανον, "frying pan"; κλιβανίτης, "baked in a pan" (e. g. Sophr. fr. 27; Ar. Ach. 1123; fr. 129.2; Amips. fr. 5) < κρίβανος, "earthenware vessel"; κρησερίτης, bread made from sifted flour (Diph. fr. 25) < κρησέρα, "flour sieve"; ἀταβυρίτης (Sopat. fr. 9)) and stones (e. g. μαργαρίτης, "pearl"). But occasionally such nouns had a generically adjectival meaning; cf. Diogenian. 7.41 οὐ φελλίνας ὁ ἀγών· οἷον οὐ στεφανίτης ἀλλὰ χρηματίτης ("the contest is not phellinas: that is, not stephanitês ('for a crown') but xrêmatitês ('for money')"). See in general Redard 1949.

[259] Not "one providing couches" (thus Storey 2011. 433).

fr. 495 K.–A. (446 K.)

Phot. σ 878
σ φ ί γ κ τ α ς· Κρατῖνος τοὺς κιναιδώδεις καὶ μαλθακούς

s p h i g k t a i (acc.): Cratinus (refers thus to) men who are perverted and effeminate

Discussion Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context A lexicographic note tentatively traced by Theodoridis to Diogenianus. A similar note, but without reference to Cratinus, is preserved at Hsch. σ 2903 σφίγκται· οἱ κίναιδοι καὶ ἁπαλοί ("sphigktai: perverts and effeminates"; similarly traced by Hansen to Diogenianus). Cf. Phot. μ 174 Μεγαρικαὶ Σφίγγες· αἱ πόρναι οὕτως εἴρηνται (Call. Com. fr. 28)· ἴσως δὲ ἐντεῦθεν καὶ σφίγκται οἱ μαλακοὶ ὠνομάσθησαν ("Megarian Sphinxes: prostitutes are referred to thus (Call. Com. fr. 28), and perhaps for this reason effeminates were also called sphigktai").

Assignment to known plays Kaibel tentatively assigns the fragment to Malthakoi. But there is no reason why Cratinus should have restricted his references to effeminate men to that play.

Interpretation σφίγκτης is < σφίγγω ("bind, embrace, jam in"; cf. σφίγκτηρ, "contractile muscle"; σφιγκτός, "tightly bound"), although the point of the term (patently abusive) is unclear; Photius' derivation from Σφίγγες is a folk etymology. σφίγκτης is attested nowhere else, but Lat. spintria, "prostitute" (Petron. 113.11; Tac. Ann. 6.1; Suet. Tib. 43.1; Cal. 16.1) appears to be < *σφίγκτρια, the (unattested) feminine corresponding to it; see André 1971. 104–5.

fr. 496 K.–A. (447 K.)

Phot. σ 911
σ χ ι ζ ί α ς· ὁ τετανὸς καὶ ἰσχνός. οὕτως Κρατῖνος

s c h i z i a s: a man who is stretched out and thin. Thus Cratinus

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.207

Citation context A lexicographic note, likely from the same source as Phot. ι 251 ἰσχνός· σχιζίας· ἰσχνοὶ γὰρ οἱ παλαιοί. οὕτως Ἀριστοφάνης (Pl. 561) ("thin: schizias: for the ancients were ischnoi. Thus Aristophanes (Pl. 561)").

Interpretation σχιζίας is < σχίζα ("chip of wood, splinter") and is cognate with σχίζω, "cut, separate". Philostr. Gymn. 38 (cited by K.–A.) offers an ampler definition: σχιζίαι τε ⟨καὶ⟩ ἱμαντώδεις εὐμήκεις μὲν ἄμφω καὶ μακροὶ τὰ σκέλη καὶ ὑπέρχειρες, διενηνόχασι δὲ ἀλλήλων μικρά τε καὶ μείζονα· οἱ μὲν γὰρ στρυφνοί τε φαίνονται καὶ εὔγραμμοι καὶ πολυσχιδεῖς, ὅθεν οἶμαι καὶ ἡ ἐπωνυμία αὐτοῖς ἥκει ("[Athletes who are] schiziai ⟨and⟩ 'strap-like' are both tall and long-legged and have larger than average arms, but they differ from each other in both small and larger points. For the former look rigid, well defined and polyschideis—hence, I think, the nickname has come to be applied to them"); cf. colloquial Engl. cut and Germ. geschnitten to refer to a lean, muscular physique. Clem. Al. Protr. 30.7 (also cited by K.–A.) traces the word to a description of Heracles offered by Dicaearchus (fr. 54 Wehrli = fr. 67 Mirhady): σχιζίαν, νευρώδη, μέλανα, γρυπόν, ὑποχαροπόν, τετανότριχα ("schizias, sinewy, swarthy, hook-nosed, rather blue-eyed, with long straight hair"), and two scholia ad loc. comment (I p. 306.3–4 Stählin) σχιζίας, λεπτὸς παρὰ Ἀττικοῖς, ὡς Διογενιανός φησι ("schizias: thin in Attic authors, according to Diogenianus") and (I p. 306.5 Stählin) σχιζίας, ἤτοι ἰσχνός, λιγνός ("schizias, i. e. thin, skinny").[260] The word is attested also in PCair. Zen. 3 59374.3–6 Φιλάμμονα Θεσσαλὸν … ξεναγὸν σχιζίαν πυρράκη κλαστὸν οὐλὴν ἔχοντα ("Philammon, a Thessalian … xenarch ('commander of mercenaries'), schizias, ruddy complexion, with a broken scar"; a 3rd-century BCE letter describing the appearance of a master to whom a slave is being delivered); and PPetr. 2 17.38 σχιζίας σπανοπώγων ("schizias, with a scant beard"; a 3rd-century BCE will).

The suffix -ίας was used inter alia to form words designating a person by a characteristic trait, often pejoratively, e. g. ἀποπυρίας (fr. 106), στημονίας (fr. 399 with n.), πισσοκωνίας (fr. 397 with n.), φιλοπραγματίας (fr. 382 with n.), βαδισματίας (fr. 422 with n.), πωγωνίας (fr. 485 with n.), στιγματίας (Eup. fr. 172.14 with Olson 2016 ad loc.), καπνίας (Ar. V. 151; cf. fr. 462); cf. Chantraine 1933. 93; Buck–Petersen 1945. 169–73. In the classical period, such formations, many attested only once, are common in the comic poets, Aristotle and Theophrastus, suggesting that they were typical of colloquial Attic. Lucian accordingly offers a number of them (e. g. ἀνθρακίας, "black as coal" (JTr. 15; Icar. 13); γυναικίας, "effeminate" (Pisc. 31); φαλαντίας, "bald" (Herc. 1; Tim. 47)), as do other Atticizing authors (e. g. κοπρίας, "shitty", at D. C. 50.28).

---

[260] The gloss λιγνός in the second scholion must be a late addition, since the word is not attested until the 9th century CE.

fr. 497 K.–A. (449 K.)

Poll. 2.7
τόκος, τίκτει, ἐπίτεξ, ἐπίφορος καὶ ἐπίτοκος· τ ο κ ῶ σ α ὡς Κρατῖνος (sic Poll.[MSFA] : δὲ εἶπε Κρατῖνος Poll.[BC]) childbirth, gives birth, about to give birth (adv.), about to bear and about to give birth; g o i n g t o g i v e b i r t h (f e m .), as Cratinus (said) (thus Poll.[MSFA] : "and Cratinus said" Poll.[BC])

Citation context From a collection of words derived from τεκ-, as part of a discussion of terms pertaining to children and childbirth.

Interpretation The verb τοκάω (< τόκος, "childbirth") is attested nowhere else. Many alpha-contract verbs fall into well-defined semantic categories, among which are those pertaining to agricultural work (e. g. τρυγάω, "gather crops" (Ar. V. 634); ἀλοάω, "thresh" (Ar. Th. 2)), sickness (e. g. λημάω, "be bleary-eyed" (Ar. Nu. 327); λεπράω, "have leprosy; be moldy" (Ar. fr. 743)) and longing (e. g. θανατάω, "long for death" (Alex. fr. 214.2); λογάω, "long for conversation" (Luc. Lex. 15)). Sütterlin 1891. 24 takes τοκάω to belong to the latter class and thus to mean "long for τόκος" vel sim. For cognate vocabulary used metaphorically, e. g. τόκος (lit. "childbirth") in the sense "interest", i. e. the offspring of lent money (Ar. Nu. 18, 1285; Axionic. fr. 10.2; Men. frr. 176.9; 446; Pl. R. 555e; Arist. Pol. 1258^{b}5; a pun on the two meanings at Ar. Th. 843);[261] τοκίζω, "lend on interest" (D. 45.70); τοκογλύφος, "usurer" (adesp. com. fr. *666); τοκοφορέω, "pay interest" ([D.] 59.52). Cf. τίκτω (lit. "give birth") at e. g. fr. *203 ὕδωρ δὲ πίνων οὐδὲν ἂν τέκοις σοφόν ("you couldn't come up with anything clever by drinking water"); Ar. V. 651 νόσον … ἐν τῇ πόλει ἐντετοκυῖαν ("a disease innate to the city"); Ra. 1059 τὰ ῥήματα τίκτειν ("to produce speeches"); Anaxandr. fr. 69 οὐχὶ … ἡ χάρις τίκτει χάριν ("kindness doesn't beget kindness") with Millis 2015 ad loc.; Call. Iamb. 13.14 τὰ χωλὰ τίκτειν ("produce limping [sc. metra]") with Acosta-Hughes 2002 ad loc.

[261] Cf. Mod. Grk. τόκος, "interest".

fr. 498 K.–A. (351 K.)

Phot. υ 272 = EM p. 784.21–3 = Suda υ 622 ὕπουλα γόνατα καὶ ὕπουλον πόδα καὶ ὕπουλον χεῖρα καὶ σῶμα, τὸ φλεγμαῖνον διά τινας πληγὰς καὶ ἐγγὺς τοῦ ἀφίστασθαι ὄν. Κρατῖνος (sic Suda : Κρ$^{\tau}$ Phot. : om. EM) hypoula knees, and a hypoulon foot, and a hypoulon hand and a body, that which is swollen as the result of blows and is on the verge of bursting open. Cratinus (thus Suda : Kr^{t} Phot. : the name is omitted in EM)

Discussion Kock 1880 I.114; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text Cratinus' name is given in full in the Suda; appears in the abbreviated form Κρ$^{\tau}$ in Photius; and is omitted in the EM. If Κρ$^{\tau}$ vel sim. stood in the exemplar and was expanded into Κρατῖνος in the Suda (and omitted from the EM as seeming nonsense?), the fragment might just as easily be assigned to Crates, and it ought therefore probably to have been included among the dubia.

Citation context From the common source of Phot. = EM = Suda conventionally referred to as Σ′′, drawing in this case on Phrynichus' Praeparatio Sophistica, the surviving (abridged) version of which reads (p. 117.14–18) ὕπουλα γόνατα καὶ ὕπουλον χεῖρα καὶ πόδα, σῶμα· τὸ φλεγμαῖνον διά τινας πληγάς. τὸ δόξαν μὲν ἔχον ὑγιείας, ἔνδοθεν δὲ σαθρὸν καὶ φλεγμαῖνον. ὅθεν μεταφέρουσιν ἐπὶ τῶν εὐπρεπῶς μὲν διαλεγομένων, ἔνδοθεν ⟨δὲ⟩ ἐπιβουλευόντων ("hypoula knees and a hypoulon hand or foot (or) body: that which is inflamed as the result of blows. That which appears to be healthy, on the one hand, but is unsound and inflamed within, on the other; as a consequence of which they use the word metaphorically of those who engage in decorous conversation, on the one hand, ⟨but⟩ are secretly plotting, on the other").

Interpretation The adjective ὕπουλος (5th-century vocabulary) is properly applied to an injury hidden by the surface of the flesh, i. e. an abscess or the like (e. g. Hp. Medic. 11 = 9.216.14 Littré; Pl. Ti. 72d; Arist. Pr. 863^{a}12; = LSJ s. v. 1). Kock (followed by LSJ) took Cratinus to have used the word in this sense in reference to a σῶμα ("body"), which would seem to be the implication of the entry in Phot. = EM = Suda. But the more expansive version of the source text preserved in Phryn. PS (see Citation context) makes it at least as likely that Cratinus was originally said to have employed ὕπουλος with its more widely attested metaphorical meaning "insidious, deceitful" (e. g. S. OT 1396; fr. 1105; Th. 8.64.5; D. 18.307; cf. Poll. 1.150; 3.132; 4.37, 51; 5.120; Hsch. υ 781; = LSJ s. v. 2), as Kaibel thought.

fr. 499 K.–A. (451 K.)

Phryn. Ecl. 402
καταφαγᾶς· πόθεν, Μένανδρε (fr. 320), συσσύρας τὸν τοσοῦτον τῶν ὀνομάτων συρφετὸν αἰσχύνεις τὴν πάτριον φωνήν; τίς γὰρ δὴ τῶν πρὸ σοῦ τῷ καταφαγᾶς κέχρηται; ὁ μὲν γὰρ Ἀριστοφάνης οὕτω φησίν (Av. 289)· ——. ἐχρῆν οὖν Κρατίνῳ πειθόμενον φ α γ ᾶ ς εἰπεῖν. ἴσως δ' ἂν εἴποις ὅτι ἠκολούθησα Μυρτίλῳ λέγοντι (fr. 5)· ——. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐχρῆν τὰς ἅπαξ εἰρημένας λέξεις ἁρπάζειν kataphagas ("glutton"): Where did you scrape up such a trashy word from, Menander (fr. 320), and disgrace your paternal tongue? Because which of your predecessors uses kataphagas? For Aristophanes says the following (Av. 289): ——. Thus you should have followed Cratinus' guidance and said p h a g a s. Perhaps you might claim, "I followed Myrtilus, who says (fr. 5): ——." But you should not have been picking up hapax legomena

Discussion Lobeck 1820. 433–7; Peppler 1902. 41; Thumb 1905. 474; Durham 1913. 69; Latte 1968. 617 n. 16

Citation context An Atticist note traced by Valente to Ar. Byz. fr. 8 καὶ καταφαγᾶς, ὁ ἀδηφάγος ("and kataphagas, one who is an incessant eater"). Phrynichus was likely responding to Antiatt. κ 104 καταφαγᾶς· Μένανδρος Πωλουμένοις (fr. 320) ("kataphagas: Menander in Pôloumenoi (fr. 320)"), which must have cited the word to show that it was in fact acceptable Attic usage. Other reflexes of the same original material, although without reference to Cratinus, are preserved at

- Poll. 6.40 παμπόνηρον δὲ καὶ τὸ παρὰ Μυρτίλῳ τῷ κωμικῷ (fr. 5) καταφαγάς, κἂν Αἰσχύλος (fr. 428) αὐτὸ ᾖ προειρηκώς ("kataphagas in the comic poet Myrtilus (fr. 5) is utterly deplorable, even if Aeschylus (fr. 428) had used it previously")
- Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 51.8–9 (a discussion of nouns in -ᾶς) ἢ ἐπὶ σκώμματος τασσόμενα φαγᾶς καταφαγᾶς ("or the joking formations phagas (and) kataphagas")
- Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 53.18–19 τὰ εἰς γας πάντα βαρύνεται, εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ σκώμματος εἴη, ὡς ἔχει τὸ φαγᾶς ("nouns in -gas all take an acute on the ultima, unless it is for the sake of a joke, like the word phagas").

Interpretation Why Phrynichus condemns καταφαγᾶς in Aristophanes, Menander, Aeschylus and Myrtilus (also attested at Petron. 39.9), but not the simple form φαγᾶς (a hapax < φαγεῖν, "eat")[262] in Cratinus is unclear, although neither Aeschylus nor Myrtilus is normally included in his narrow canon of "good" authors. Lobeck (followed by Peppler) suggested that Phrynichus thought καταφαγᾶς otiose, since φαγᾶς could not properly be intensified with a prefix.[263] But the limited number of nouns in -ᾶς makes judgments of this sort uncertain, and a derivation from καταφαγεῖν ("devour") rather than from φαγᾶς seems more likely in any case. Thumb took the word to be an Ionicism. For nouns in -ᾶς, cf. fr. 349.2 Κοννᾶς (a personal name); Peppler 1902. 41–2.

[262] Cf. φάγος, "glutton" (e.g. Matt. 11:19; Luke 7:34); phagones, "gluttons" (Var. Men. fr. 529 Astbury); pultiphagus, "pap-eater" (Plaut. Mos. 828; Poen. 54).

fr. 500 K.–A. (452 K.)

Poll. 7.39
ἐν ᾧ δ' ἐξέπλυνον, οὐ μόνον λίτρον καὶ Χαλαστραῖον λίτρον, ἀλλὰ καὶ χ α λ α ί ρ υ - π ο ς (Jungermann ex Hsch. χ 34, 50 : χάρυπος Poll.[BC] : ῥῦπος Poll.[AS] : ῥύπτος Poll.[F]), ὡς Κρατῖνος ὠνόμασεν that which they used to wash out (dirt is) not only soda and Chalastrian soda, but also c h a l a i r h y p o s (thus Jungermann from Hsch. χ 34, 50 : charhypos Poll.[BC] : rhypos Poll.[AS] : rhyptos Poll.[F]), as Cratinus referred to it[264]

Hsch. χ 34
χ α λ α ί ρ υ π ο ς· ὁ τῶν πλυνομένων ἱματίων ῥύπος

c h a l a i r h y p o s: the dirt (rhypos) from clothes that were washed

Hsch. χ 50
χ α λ έ ρ υ π ο ν· τὸ ῥύμμα τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ νίτρου γενόμενον, ὅ τινες νίτρωμα λέγουσι

c h a l e r h y p o n: the sediment that comes from nitron, which some call nitrôma

Text The textual variants in Pollux represent a series of attempts to deal with a corrupt and confusing exemplar. Jungermann corrected the text on the basis of Hsch. χ 34, 50.

Context context Pollux quotes the fragment as part of a collection of words related to washing and laundry. The entries in Hesychius must go back to the same (Atticist) source.

---

[263] Lobeck compares Latin edax, "gluttonous" (< esse, "eat") and vorax, "gluttonous" (< vorare, "devour") against the unattested comedax* (< comesse, "devour") and devorax* (< devorare, devour"). But this is an argument from silence and ignores the fact that edo, "glutton" (< esse, "eat"), exists alongside comedo, "glutton" (< comesse, "devour").

[264] Thus not "dirt washed off" (Storey 2011. 433).

Interpretation The hapax χαλαίρυπος (< χαλάω, "loosen" + ῥύπος, "dirt") is a high-style compound; cf. χαλίφρων, "slack-minded" (Od. 4.371; 19.530); χαλαίπους, "slack-footed" (Nic. Th. 458; of the crippled Hephaestus).[265] The word may play on the name of the Thracian/Macedonian city Χαλάστρη/Χαλέστρη (IACP #548[266]), which appears to have been an important source of high-quality soda (νίτρον/λίτρον).[267] For the use of λίτρον/νίτρον as a detergent, cf. Pl. Ti. 60d; Poll. 10.135.

fr. 501 K.–A. (453 K.)

Poll. 2.153
χειρονομῆσαι δὲ τὸ ταῖν χεροῖν ἐν ῥυθμῷ κινηθῆναι· Ἡρόδοτος (6.129.3) δὲ εἴρηκεν ἐπὶ Ἱπποκλείδου τοῦ Ἀθηναίου τοῖς ποσὶν[268] ἐχειρονόμησεν, Κρατῖνος (Κρατῖνος om. Poll.[FS]) δὲ καὶ χ ε ι ρ ο ν ο μ η σ ε ί ο ν τ α ς (sic Poll.[AC] : χειρονομησείοντα Poll.[S] : χειρονομησίοντα Poll.[F]) εἶπεν cheironomêsai is to move both one's hands rhythmically. But Herodotus (6.129.3) says in reference to Hippocleides of Athens that he echeironomêse with his feet. And Cratinus ("Cratinus" omitted by Poll.[FS]) said "w a n t i n g t o c h e i r o n o m e ô"[269] (masc. acc. pl.) (thus Poll.[AC] : masc. acc. sing. in Poll.[S] and—with epsilon omitted—Poll.[F])

Meter The word as transmitted scans –⏑⏑––– × and could be accommodated in e. g. iambs, anapaests or hexameters.

Text The plural χειρονομησείοντας of Poll.[AC] is more likely to be correct than the singular forms transmitted by Poll.[SF], since it is easier to imagine that the sigma was lost from the end of the word than that one was added. But either might be right.

---

265 For the alternation between χαλαι- and χαλι-, see Schwyzer 1953 I.448.

266 Without reference to this fragment or the other evidence for Chalastrian soda cited below. For the spelling in epsilon, see Hdt. 7.123.3. Called Χαλαίστρα at Plu. Alex. 49.

267 Cf. Pl. R. 430a Χαλεστραίου … καὶ κονίας ("Chalestraian (soda) or soap"); Alciphr. 3.25.1 ῥύμ⟨μ⟩ατι καὶ νίτρῳ Χαλαστραίῳ ("fuller's earth and Chalastraian soda"; a bit of Atticizing color); Plin. Nat. 31.107 (drawing on Theophrastus).

268 Herodotus actually says τοῖσι σκέλεσι ("with his legs"), but the point is in any case that Hippocleides is standing on his head and waving his feet/legs about as if they were his hands/arms.

269 Not "shake one's hands" (Storey 2011. 433), as if this were a compound of σείω, "shake".

Citation context From a collection of words derived from χείρ ("hand") in the larger context of words for body-parts.

Interpretation χειρονομησείω (attested only here; for the sense, see below) is a desiderative of χειρονομέω (prosaic; also e. g. X. Smp. 2.19; Pl. Lg. 830c) formed with the suffix -σείω. Such formations are found already in Homer (Il. 14.37 ὀψείοντες, "wanting to see") and are attested in the classical period in both poetry (e. g. S. Tr. 1232 ἐργασείω, "want to do"; fr. 991 ἀκουσείω, "want to hear"; Ar. Pax 62 δρασείω, "want to do"; Nu. 295 χεσείω, "want to shit") and prose (e. g. Th. 1.33.3 πολεμησείω, "want to make war"; 8.79.3 ναυμαχησείω, "want to fight a naval battle"; Pl. Phd. 64b γελασείω, "want to laugh"). Many such desideratives are nonce-forms (e. g. Call. fr. 435 βρωσείω, "want to eat") or perhaps simply ill-attested. But the presence of a number of them in Second Sophistic authors (e. g. Luc. Cont. 9 ἐλασείω, "want to march"; Alciphr. 1.16.2 γαμησείω, "want to marry") suggests in any case that they came to be regarded as particularly characteristic of Attic Greek; cf. Hdn. Epim. p. 249.7–10 καὶ ὅσα Ἀττικοί εἰσι μέλλοντες· τύψω, τυψείω· πλέξω, πλεξείω· βρώσω, βρωσείω· θύσω, θυσείω· ποιήσω, ποιησείω ("and however many are Attic futures: typsô ('will hit'), typseio ('want to hit'); plexô ('will plait'), plexeiô ('want to plait'); brôsô ('will eat'), brôseiô ('want to eat'); thysô ('will sacrifice'), thyseiô ('want to sacrifice'); poiêsô ('will do'), poiêseiô ('want to do')"). On desideratives in general, see Schwyzer 1953 I.789 (who overlooks χειρονομησείω).

LSJ (followed in each case by Montanari) glosses χειρονομέω at Hdt. 6.129.3 (Hippocleides stands on his head and moves his legs at Cleisthenes of Sicyon's great party), X. Smp. 2.19 and D.C. 32.20 "gesticulate" (= s. v. I), whence its "wish to gesticulate" for χειρονομησείω in Cratinus, but offers "practice shadow-boxing" for Thrasym. 85 B 4 D.–K.; Pl. Lg. 830c; Plu. Mor. 747b (= s. v. II), whence its "shadow-boxing" s. v. χειρονομία at Hp. Vict. 64 = 6.580.17 Littré.[270] "Practice shadow-boxing" or the like is also clearly the sense, however, at X. Smp. 2.19 and is compatible with Hdt. 6.129.3, where what is meant must then be "he waved his legs about as if he were shadow-boxing with them", i. e. "as if he were pedaling a bicycle upside-down" vel sim. The crucial difference between χειρονομία and σκιαμαχία, in fact, seems to be that the former was performed to the accompaniment of the aulos (as at Cleisthenes' party); cf. Arist. fr. 583 Rose (the luxury-loving Sybarites trained their horses to stand on their rear legs and dance to aulos music ὥσπερ χειρονομοῦντας, "as if they were engaging in χειρονομία"); Diogenes of Babylon fr. 66 von Arnim ap. Philodem. On Music 39–40 (athletes ran and jumped to aulos music, and χειρονομία was performed to similar accompaniment); García Romero 1994. 117–21 (considering the question primarily in the context of the history of athletics). Most of the citations in LSJ s. v. χειρονομέω I, at any rate, ought to be transferred to s. v. II, and s. v. χειρονομησείω should be revised to read "wish to practice shadow-boxing" vel sim. For boxing, see in general Olson 2014 on Eup. fr. 350.

[270] Parallel to κωρυκομαχίη, "work out with a punching bag".

fr. 502 K.–A. (335 K.)

Hsch. χ 643
Χοιριλεκφαντίδης (sic Meineke : Χορίλα Ἐκφαντίδες Hsch. : Χοιριλεκφάντιδες Luppe)· Κρατῖνος τὸν Ἐκφαντίδην οὕτως εἶπεν † αὐτὸν τὸν Χορίλλον † (sic Hsch. : διὰ τὸν Χοιρίλον Meineke : διὰ τὸ τὸν Χοιρίλον ⟨συνποιεῖν αὐτῷ τὰς κωμῳδίας⟩ Cobet : ⟨τὸν⟩ αὐτὸν τῷ Χοιρίλῳ van der Valk)

Choirilekphantidês[271] (thus Meineke : Chorila Ekphantides Hsch. : Choirilekphantides Luppe): Cratinus referred to Ecphantides in this way † Chorillos himself † (thus Hsch. : "on account of Choirilos" Meineke : "on account of the fact that Choirilos ⟨helped him write his comedies⟩" Cobet : "that he was identical to Choirilos" van der Valk)

Meter The word scans –⏑––⏑–.

Discussion Naekius 1817. 54–5; Bergk 1838. 256; Meineke 1839 II.199; Cobet 1875. 294; Kock 1880 I.111; Luppe 1967. 404; van der Valk 1972. 67; Ornaghi 2006. 96–105; Wright 2012. 8–10

Assignment to known plays Attributed to Archilochoi (along with frr. 342 and *361) by Ornaghi 2006. 104.

Text Luppe suggests that the name is actually in the vocative.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note traced to Diogenianus by Hansen–Cunningham; but see below on Hsch. ε 1439, which appears to refer to the same passage of Cratinus.

Interpretation For the comic poet Ecphantides, see fr. 462 n.; only six short fragments of his plays survive. According to Hsch. ε 1439 Ἐκφαντίδῃ … τῷ κωμικῷ Χοιρίλος θεράπων ἦν, ὃς συνεποιεῖτο κωμῳδίας ("Choerilus was a servant of the comic playwright Ecphantides who helped him compose his comedies"); cf. Ar. fr. 596 (Cephisophon collaborated with Euripides), which Satyros in his Life of Euripides explains as referring to a slave-boy who belonged to the poet. But Choerilus was also the name of an early 6th-century tragedian (PA 15562; PAA 990605) said to have been victorious 13 times (sc. at the City Dionysia), suggesting that Cratinus' point may instead be similar to that of fr. 342.2 εὐριπιδαριστοφανίζων (n.). If so, the note in Hesychius is likely an attempt to explain the obscure "Choerilekphantidês" by someone who had never heard of the tragic poet Choerilus, in the same way that Satyrus' story about Cephisophon has probably been generated out of a combination of Ar. fr. 596 and the reference to Cephisophon's supposed contributions to Euripides' plays at Ar. Ra. 944.[272] For similarly mocking compound names, cf. Ar. Ach. 603 Τεισαμενοφαινίππους, Πανουργιπαρχίδας, 605 Γερητοθεοδώρους, Διομειαλαζόνας; and note the play-titles Titanopanes (Myrtilus); Aeolosikôn (Aristophanes); Dêmotyndareôs (Polyzelus); Orestautokleidês (Timocles).

[271] Not "Choerilo-Ecphantides" (Storey 2011. 431).

fr. 503 K.–A. (455 K.)

Phryn. PS p. 20.6–10
ἀπονυχίζεσθαι τοῦ ὀνυχίζεσθαι Ἀττικῶς διαφέρει. τὸ μὲν γὰρ σημαίνει τὸ τοὺς ὄνυχας ἀφαιρεῖσθαι, τὸ δὲ ὀνυχίζειν καὶ ἐξονυχίζειν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐρευνᾶν ἀκριβῶς καὶ ἐξετάζειν τὸ ὑποκείμενον πρᾶγμα ⟨τίθεται⟩. Κρατῖνος μέντοι τὸ ὠ ν υ χ ι σ μ έ ν ο ν ἐπὶ τοῦ τετμημένου τοὺς ὄνυχας τέθεικεν aponychizesthai is different from onychizesthai in Attic, since the former means to have one's nails trimmed, whereas onychizein and exonychizein ⟨are used⟩ in reference to inquiring carefully and searching out the matter at hand. Cratinus nevertheless uses ô n y c h i s m e n o s in reference to someone who has had his nails cut[273]

Citation Context Part of an Atticist note, other versions and portions of which are preserved (without mention of Cratinus) at

- Phryn. PS p. 95.9–10 ὀνυχίζειν καὶ ἐξονυχίζειν· τὸ περί τι ἀκριβολογεῖσθαι. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ ἀπονυχίζειν τὸ τοὺς ὄνυχας ἀφαιρεῖν ("onychizein and exonychizein: to be precise about something. But they also use aponychizein to refer to trimming someone's nails")
- Phryn. PS p. 128.19–20 ὠνυχισμένος· ἐπὶ τοῦ τετμημένου ὑπὸ λύπης ("ônychismenos: referring to someone who has been cut by pain")
- Phryn. Ecl. 253 ὀνυχίζειν καὶ ἐξονυχίζειν· ταὐτὸ σημαίνει ἑκάτερα καὶ τίθεται ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀκριβολογεῖσθαι. τὸ δ' ἀπονυχίζειν τὸ τὰς ὑπεραυξήσεις

---

272 Thus Dover 1993. 54; Ornaghi 2006. 100–1.

273 Not simply "trimmed his nails" (Storey 2011. 433), as if this were a finite verb rather than a participle.

τῶν ὀνύχων ἀφαιρεῖν σημαίνει. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ὁ πολὺς συρφετὸς λέγουσιν "ὀνύχισόν με" καὶ "ὠνυχισάμην", σημαινόμεθα τὰ ὀνόματα καί φαμεν ὅτι, εἰ μὲν ἐπὶ τοῦ τοὺς ὄνυχας ἀφαιρεῖν τίθησί τις, χρήσαιτο ἂν τῷ ἀπονυχίζειν, εἰ δ' ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀκριβολογεῖσθαι καὶ ἐξετάζειν ἀκριβῶς, τῷ ὀνυχίζειν χρήσαιτ' ἄν ("onychizein and exonychizein: both mean the same thing and are used to refer to being precise, whereas aponychizein means to trim the excess growth from one's nails. But since the unsophisticated majority say 'Onychison me!' and 'ônychisamên', we provide the meaning of the words, and we say that if someone uses (one of them) in reference to trimming someone's nails, he should use aponychizein, whereas in reference to being precise and searching out something carefully, he should use onychizein").

Note also

- Poll. 2.146 ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ὀνύχων ὀνυχίσασθαι καὶ ἀπονυχίσασθαι, ᾧ καὶ μᾶλλον χρηστέον, εἴρηται δὲ τὸ ἐξονυχίσασθαι, φαύλως δέ ("onychisasthai and aponychisasthai are derived from onyches ('nails'); the latter is to be preferred, although exonychisasthai is used, but is bad style")
- Orus fr. B 38 = Suda α 3461 = Synag. B α 1919 ἀπονυχίσαι μᾶλλον λέγουσιν ἢ ὀνυχίσαι ("they say aponychisai rather than onychisai")
- Harp. ap. Keaney, TAPA 98 (1967) 209 #13 ἀπονυχίζειν τὸ ἀφαιρεῖν τὰς ὑπεραυξήσεις τῶν ὀνύχων παρὰ Μενάνδρῳ (fr. 487) ("aponychizein means to trim the excess growth from one's nails in Menander (fr. 487)")
- [Hdn.] Philet. 38 ἀπονυχίζεσθαι λέγουσι τὸ ἀφαιρεῖσθαι τοὺς ὄνυχας τῶν δακτύλων· ἐξονυχίζειν δὲ τὸ λεπτολογεῖσθαι, ὅπερ καῖ τερθρείαν ("they use aponychizesthai to mean to have one's fingernails trimmed, whereas exonychizesthai is to talk subtly, for which they also use the term terthreia")
- Hsch. ω 251 ὠνυχισμένον· ἀφῃρημένον ("ônychismenos: removed")
- Hsch. ω 931 ὀνυχιεῖ· ἐπιμελῶς ἐξετάσει ("onychiei: he/she will examine carefully")
- Phot. α 2595 ἀπονυχίζεσθαι καὶ ὀνυχίζειν καὶ ἐξονυχίζειν διαφέρουσι· τὸ μὲν οὖν ἀπονυχίζειν μετὰ τῆς ἀπό προθέσεως σημαίνει τὸ τοὺς ὄνυχας ἀφαιρεῖν. τὸ δὲ ὀνυχίζειν καὶ ἐξονυχίζειν τιθέασιν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐρευνᾶν ἀκριβῶς καὶ ἐξετάζειν τὸ ὑποκείμενον πρᾶγμα. Ἀριστοφάνης Ὁλκάσιν (fr. 421)· —— ("aponychizesthai and onychizein and exonychizein are different. aponychizein with the prefix apo- means to trim someone's nails, whereas they use onychizein and exonychizein in reference to inquiring carefully and searching out the matter at hand. Aristophanes in Holkades (fr. 421): ——"; traced by Theodoridis to Phrynichus)
- Phot. α 2596 ἀπονυχιοῦμαι· Εὔπολις (fr. 433) ἔφη ("I'll get my nails trimmed: thus Eupolis (fr. 433)")

– Phot. o 367 = Suda o 411 ≈ Synag. o 177 ὀνυχίζεται· ἀκριβολογεῖται. οὕτως Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 866) ("onychizetai: he is precise. Thus Aristophanes (fr. 866)").

Interpretation For trimmed nails as part of a decent public appearance, cf. Thphr. Char. 26.4 with Diggle 2006 ad loc. (the Oligarchic Man goes out dressed in his cloak, with his hair cut and ἀκριβῶς ἀπωνυχισμένος ("with carefully trimmed fingernails"), as opposed to the Offensive Man, who goes out with dirty nails (Thphr. Char. 19.1)); Eup. fr. 433 with Olson 2014 ad loc. Nail-trimming seems to have been done by barbers rather than by oneself; cf. the common expressions "Trim my nails!" and "I had my nails trimmed" ("ὀνύχισόν με" καὶ "ὠνυχισάμην") cited at Phryn. Ecl. 253 (see Citation context); Facet. 199 ἀφυὴς μαθητὴς κακῶς τινα κείρας καὶ παρωνυχίδας ποιήσας καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ὑπὸ τοῦ ὀνυχιζομένου ἀπωσθεὶς ἀνεβόησεν· ἐπιστάτα, τί οὐκ ἀφίησί με μαθεῖν; ("A clumsy student, after giving someone a bad haircut and tearing the skin on his fingers, and on this account being driven away by the man who was having his nails cut, cried out: 'Boss, why don't you let me learn?"); Philet. AP 6.307 = HE 3010–17; Plaut. Aul. 312; Hor. Ep. 1.7.50–1; Mart. 3.74.2–3.

fr. 504 K.–A. (432 K.)

Poll. 6.21
διῳνωμένος δὲ καὶ κατῳνωμένος (codd. : διοινρ et κατοιν- Poll.), ὡς Πλάτων (Lg. 775c; 815c), καὶ ὠ ν ω μ έ ν ο ι (sic Meineke : οἰνώμενοι Poll.[SABC] : οἰνομενοι Poll.[F]), ὡς Κρατίνος (ὡς Κρατίνος om. Poll.[C])

"very full of wine" and "drunken", as Plato (Lg. 775c; 815c) (says), and "i n t o x i c a t e d" (thus Meineke : spelled with an omicron rather than an omega in Pollux), as Cratinus ("as Cratinus" omitted by Poll.[C]) (says)

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.211; Lautensach 1899. 33–4

Text In all three cases, the manuscripts offer οιν- rather than ῳν-, and Poll[SABC] accordingly accents as if Cratinus' οἰνώμενοι were a present participle; corrected by Meineke.

Citation Context From a small collection of words derived from οἶνος and meaning "drunk" or the like, in the context of a larger discussion of sympotic vocabulary.

Interpretation ὠνωμένοι The verb is attested already in Homer (Od. 16.292 = 19.11).

Dubia

fr. 505 K.–A. (29 Dem.)

τὸν θεὸν δ’ ἐμοῦ
κλύων σέβ’ ὄντα μάντιν ἀψευδέστατον

1–2 τὸν θεὸν δ’ ἐμοῦ κλύων σέβε ὡς ὄντα ὡς Phot. Lex.Sabb. : ὡς del. et sic scripsit Weil

Listen to me and revere the god, who is an oracle not at all inclined to lie!

Phot. α 3478
ἀψευδέστατος μάντις· Κρατῖνος· —— an exceptionally true oracle: Cratinus: ——

Meter Iambic trimeter.
⟨×–⏑– ×–⏑⟩|– ⏑–⏑–
––⏑– ⏑|–⏑|– ––⏑–
See Text.

Discussion Blass 1884. 496; Weil 1892. 323; Kock 1893. 580–1; Kaibel ap. Kassel–Austin; Kassel–Austin ad loc.

Assignment to known plays Tentatively assigned to Archilochoi by Kaibel; see Interpretation.

Text Kassel–Austin (following Kock) print ⟨× – ⏑⟩ τὸν θεὸν δ’ ἐμοῦ κλύων σέβε, / ὡς ὄντα ⟨– × ⟩ μάντιν ἀψευδέστατον,[274] and note as possible supplements (all appropriately bland) of 2 ὡς ὄντα ⟨πάντων⟩ (Kock), ὡς ὄντα ⟨θνητοῖς⟩ (Kassel) and ὡς ⟨αἰὲν⟩ ὄντα (Austin). But this yields tetrahemimeral/medial caesura in 1, which is not impossible in a comic trimeter but ought to be excluded on methodological grounds when a line is restored. Weil’s excision of ὡς (as a prosaic supplement) and correction of scriptio plena σέβε to σέβ’ produces a normal caesura in 1 and avoids the need to posit a lacuna in 2.

---

[274] Thus ⟨×–⏑⟩– ⏑–⏑– ⏑–⏑–
⏑–⏑⟨– ⏑⟩|–⏑|– ––⏑–
Alternatively, 2 might be restored –⟨–⏑⟩– ⏑|–⏑|– ––⏑– or ––⏑– ×|⟨–⏑⟩|– ––⏑–.

Citation context An isolated lexicographic note also preserved at Lex.Sabb. p. 43.13–14 (presumably taken over direct from Photius).

Interpretation Aristid. or. 2.166 quotes an anonymous poetic fragment Ζεὺς ἐν θεοῖσι μάντις ἀψευδέστατος ("Zeus is the truest prophet among the gods") and reports that this was followed (τὸ γὰρ δεύτερόν ἐστιν αὐτῷ) by the phrase καὶ τέλος αὐτὸς ἔχει ("and himself controls the end" vel sim.); a scholion ad loc. attributes the lines to "unproduced plays" (ἐν ἀπράκτοις δράμασιν) by Euripides (= fr. dub. 1110 N[2]). The first verse scans as an iambic trimeter, but the second (fragmentary) line does not,[275] and Blass argued that the assignment to Euripides was patently a guess and attributed the fragment to Archilochus instead (= fr. 298). Why Kock (followed by Kassel–Austin: "de Cratino auctore non sine causa dubitat Kock") maintains that this sheds doubt on Photius' assignment of fr. 505 to Cratinus is unclear.

A plea or order directed to a single person disinclined to believe a prophecy or supposed prophecy. The use of κλύω (see below) and the absence of resolution suggest paratragedy;[276] cf. S. OT 952 ἄκουε τἀνδρὸς τοῦδε, καὶ σκόπει κλύων ("Listen to this man, and as you listen, consider!"); E. Ion 947 ἀνάσχου ταῦτ' ἐμοῦ κλύων ("Bear with these things and listen to me!"). The god in question is most easily taken to be Apollo; cf. A. Ch. 559 ἄναξ Ἀπόλλων, μάντις ἀψευδὴς τὸ πρίν ("Lord Apollo, formerly a true prophet"). But he might be e. g. Zeus Dodonaios (cf. Il. 16.233; Hes. fr. 97; Hdt. 2.55.1–3; Pl. Phdr. 275b) instead, or this might be a joke referring to some trivial secondary figure. For references to μάντεις and oracles elsewhere in comedy, e. g. fr. 171.38; Epich. fr. 9; Eup. fr. 231 with Olson 2016 ad loc.; Ar. Pax 1026 with Olson 1998 ad loc., 1046; Av. 593–7, 719; Pl. 11 (Apollo); Archipp. fr. 15; Nicoch. fr. 1 οἶδα δ' ὡς / ἀψευδόμαντις ἥδε καὶ τελεσφόρος ("I know that this woman is an unlying seer and that what she says comes to fulfilment") / * * * / γνώσῃ δὲ τέχνην τὴν ἐμὴν ἐτητύμως / ἀψευδόμαντιν οὖσαν ("you will come to know my skill, which is truly unlying"; from Agamemnôn, with the first verse taken by Weil to refer to Cassandra and the second to be spoken by her; note again the lack of resolution, as well as χν making position in v. 3, both suggesting high-style parody); Alex. Manteis; fr. 160.7.

2 κλύω (< kleu–*, "hear", and related to κλυτός, "famous"; Lat. inclutus, "famous"; Engl. loud) is elevated poetic vocabulary and is used at the beginning of prayers and requests for attention from an audience at e. g. Il. 1.37; 3.97; Od. 2.25; 4.762; Pi. O. 14.5; P. 4.13; A. Th. 171 (lyric); Supp. 348 (lyric); E.

---

[275] It could easily be emended, however, to καὐτὸς τέλος ἔχει (––⏑⏑ –|⟨–⏑– ×–⏑–⟩).
[276] Cf. Kassel–Austin ad loc. "fr. trag.?"

Med. 168); attested elsewhere in Attic comedy only at Pherecr. fr. 155.1 (the personified Music is speaking); Ar. Eq. 813 (paratragic anapaests); Av. 407 (lyric), 432 (lyric), 1390 (a poet is speaking); Th. 1018–19 (paratragic lyric); Ra. 1173, 1174 (both tragic quotations); Pl. 561 (anapaests), 601 (paratragic). The upsilon is naturally long, but is often lengthened metri gratia; its value here cannot be determined.

The active imperative σέβε is otherwise attested only late (e. g. App.Anth. 536.6) and appears to be a metrically convenient alternative for the expected middle form σέβου ([A.] PV 937); cf. the use of active plural σέβετε at Ar. fr. *322.2; E. Ba. 590, for the expected middle σέβεσθε (A. Supp. 223); Schwzyer 1950 I.234.

ἀψευδής is attested elsewhere in comedy only as the title of a play by Telecleides (but note the cognate verb in Ar. fr. 789 ἀψευδοῦντες); of seers and oracles at e. g. Hes. Th. 233 (Nereus); A. fr. 350.5 (Apollo); Hdt. 1.49; 2.152.3; E. IT 1253 (Apollo's throne); Or. 364 (Glaukos)).

fr. 506 K.–A. (346 K.)

εὐιπποτάτη Μαραθῶν

Marathon most rich in horses

Philemon ap. Porph. ad Il. p. 288.18–21 Schrader = pp. 38.31–3 Sodano πολλὰ γὰρ οὗτοι τῶν ὀνομάτων χαίρουσι θηλυκῶς ἐκφέροντες, οἷον τήν τε λίθον καὶ τὴν κίονα καὶ ἔτι τὴν Μαραθῶνα. Κρατῖνος· ——. Νίκανδρος (fr. 111)· εὐκτιμένην Μαραθῶνα

For these authors delight in using many nouns (sc. that one would expect to be masculine) as feminine, e. g. lithos and kiôn and also Μαραθῶν. Cratinus: ——. Nicander (fr. 111): well-inhabited (fem.) Marathon

Meter The fragment as transmitted scans ——⏑⏑—⏑⏑— and could be accommodated in e. g. anapaests or hexameters (see Interpretation).

Citation context The Atticist glossographer Philemon (ca. 200 CE), responding to the grammarian Alexander of Cotiaeum (1st/2nd c. CE), cites this fragment as evidence of the tendency of Ionic Greek to treat masculine nouns as feminine, as a way of demonstrating that Hdt. 1.92.2 ἐν Βραγχίδῃσι τῇσι Μιλησίων ("among the Branchidae of Miletus") is idiomatic rather than wrong and thus need not be emended to ἐν Βραγχίδῃσι τῇς Μιλησίων ("among the Branchidae of the (land of the) Milesians"), as Alexander thought was necessary. Philemon says that, although he initially agreed with Alexander, he changed his mind after encountering Hdt. 2.159.3 ἐς Βραγχίδας τὰς Μιλησίων ("to the Branchidae of Miletus"). It is easier to believe that the paradosis is wrong in both cases via confusion regarding the gender of a rare name (seemingly feminine, but actually masculine), and that the former passage should be emended to ἐν Βραγχίδῃσι τοῖσι Μιλησίων (thus Reiske), the latter to ἐς Βραγχίδας τοὺς Μιλησίων,

Related material, without mention of Cratinus but clearly drawn from the same source, is preserved at

- Σ Pi. O. 1.10 (ἐρήμας δι' αἰθέρος) παρὰ τοῖς Ἴωσιν οὕτω θηλυκῶς προφέρεται, ὡς ἡ κίων καὶ ἡ Μαραθών. οὐ πάντα δὲ τὰ τοιαῦτα Ἰωνικά εἰσιν· ἐπεὶ καὶ οἱ Ἀττικοὶ πολλὰ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀρσενικὰ ὄντα θηλυκῶς ἐκφέρουσιν ("(through the empty air) The word is used thus, as a feminine, in Ionic authors, like kiôn and Marathôn. But not all such cases are Ionic, since Attic authors as well give many masculine nouns in feminine form")
- Thom. Mag. p. 242.5–8 ἀρσενικῶς οἱ Ἀττικοὶ τὸν Μαραθῶνα λέγουσιν. Ἀριστείδης ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ (Pan. 110)· οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν ὅστις ἀκούσας τὸ τοῦ Μαραθῶνος ὄνομα. Ἴωνες δὲ θηλυκῶς ("Attic authors use Marathôn as masculine. Aristides says in the same speech (Pan. 110): for there is no one who, after he hears the name of Marathon (masc.). But Ionic-speakers (use it) as feminine").

Note also Σ^{M} Od. 6.80 = Eust. p. 1568.43–4 = i.260.38–9 καὶ ἡ Μαραθών γὰρ λέγεται καὶ ὁ Μαραθών ("For Marathon is used as both masculine and feminine").

Interpretation Kassel–Austin treat the fragment as dubious on the ground that Philemon cites it as a witness to the Ionic rather than the Attic dialect, and tentatively suggest that it be assigned to Choerilus of Samos (ca. 400 BCE), who wrote an epic poem about the Persian invasions (note esp. fr. 22.16, p. 204 Bernabé [Μιλ]τιάδου .ο.[ ].αμον ἐν Μα̣[ραθῶνι]). There is no obvious reason why Cratinus' name should have driven out Choerilus', and it might be the case instead that Porphyry or his source has carelessly swept together a number of texts (including one from Attic comedy) that used Μαραθών as a feminine, and that the problem is simply that his argument is not as coherent as it ought to be.[277]

---

[277] κίων is both masculine and feminine in Homer (e.g. πρὸς κίονα μακρόν at Od. 8.66 = 8.473, but πρὸς κίονα μακρήν at Od. 1.127 = 17.29; 23.90), but is otherwise masculine in Attic-Ionic. The word is feminine, on the other hand, several times in

In the absence of specific evidence to the contrary, any mention of Μαραθών in a 5th-century source can generally be taken to refer somehow to the Athenian defeat of a Persian expeditionary force there in 490 BCE, and Hdt. 6.102 observes that the Peisistratid tyrant Hippias chose to land the Persians at Marathon ἦν γὰρ ὁ Μαραθὼν ἐπιτηδεότατον χωρίον τῆς Ἀττικῆς ἐνιππεῦσαι ("because Marathon was the place in Attica best suited for riding horses in"). The Athenian cavalry, on the other hand, is conspicuously absent from ancient accounts of the battle; see in general Shrimpton 1980. But here the point may simply be that the Marathon plain was not just broad but marshy, and thus full of fodder and good for horses. Μαραθών is also feminine (by attraction to the gender of πόλις in the sense "inhabited place" (thus LSJ s. v. II; cf. Schwyzer 1953 II.33) at Pi. O. 13.110 λιπαρὰ Μαραθών ("rich [fem.] Marathon"). For the place itself, see most recently Petrakos 1996, esp. 3–7; Tsirigotou-Drakotou 2010.

εὔιππος is otherwise absent from comedy and is mostly confined to elevated poetry (e. g. Hes. fr. 150.21; hAp. 210; Pi. O. 3.39; 8.47; P. 3.8; 4.2; S. OC 668 (lyric), 711 (lyric); E. Andr. 1019 (lyric); Hec. 1090 (lyric); IT 132 (lyric); Ph. 17; Ba. 574 (lyric)); in 4th-century prose at X. HG 4.2.5; Cyr. 4.2.1 (conjectural); 5.5.5). For the formation, with εὐ- in the sense "rich in", cf. εὔαρνος, εὔβοτρυς, εὔβους, εὔδενδρος, εὐήλιος, εὐήνωρ, etc.

fr. 507 K.–A. (326 K.)

Σ^{KUEAT} Theoc. 9.19a

χόρια δὲ τὰ τῶν ἐμβρύων ἀγγεῖα· εἰώθασι γὰρ ἐν γάλακτι καταπλάσσοντες καὶ ξηραίνοντες ὀπτᾶν, εἶτα ἐσθίειν ταῦτα, ἅ καὶ χόρια προσαγορεύουσι. ⟨ ... ⟩ † κ ρ α τ ὶ ὑ ο σ τ ρ ό φ ο ι ο (sic Σ^{K} : νεοστέφοι Σ^{UEA} : νεοστέφει Σ^{T}) γ έ ν ν α ς (Κρατίνος· ἀρνὸς εὐτρόφου κρέας Toup : Κρατῖνος Τροφωνίῳ Hemsterhuis : Κρατῖνος· εὐτρεφεῖς ἀγέλας Kock : Κρατῖνος· νεοτρόφοιο γέντα Marzullo) † χ ό ρ ι ά τ ’ ἐ μ β ρ ύ ω ν τ ε π λ ή θ η

Choria are the afterbirth of newborn animals; for they are accustomed to knead these in milk, let them dry, and roast and then eat them, and they refer to them as choria. ⟨ ... ⟩ † k r a t i h y o s t r o p h o i o (thus Σ^{K} : neostephoi Σ^{UEA} : neostephei Σ^{T}) g e n n a s † ("Cratinus: meat of a well-raised lamb" Toup : "Cratinus in Trophônios" Hemsterhuis :

Pindar (O. 8.27; P. 1.19; 4.267; fr. 52i.69–70; other examples are ambiguous), as well as in a few 2nd-century BCE inscriptions from Central Greece (e. g. IG IX,2 258.2 (Thessaly); FD III 4.355.46 (Delphi)); cf. Schwyzer 1953 I.468. λίθος is frequently feminine in all genres and dialects (LSJ s. v. II).

"Cratinus: well-raised flocks" Kock : "Cratinus: entrails of a newly-reared (animal)" Marzullo) and choria and large quantities of newborns

Discussion Hemsterhuis in Gaisford 1820. 142; Toup in Warton 1770 I.217; Meineke 1839 II.226–7; Meineke 1856. 272; Kock 1880 I.109; Marzullo 1959. 151–2

Assignment to known plays Hemsterhuis tentatively attributed the fragment to Trophônios on the basis of his emendation of the corrupt paradosis κρατὶ ὑοστρόφοιο. Kock took the text as he emended it to perhaps refer to the Cyclops' flocks and thus to be drawn from Odyssês.

Text Efforts to restore the text generally begin with the assumption that the paradosis κρατὶ ὑοσ- (Σ^{K}) or κρατὶ νεοσ- (Σ^{UEAT}) conceals Κρατῖνος. None of the various attempts to salvage what follows can be called anything more than a guess; Marzullo's Κρατῖνος· νεοτρόφοιο γέντα (with the final syllable of Κρατῖνος presumably omitted via haplography) is relatively close to what the various versions of the scholion preserve, although γέντα ("innards") is exceedingly rare and found only in dactylic hexameter (Hes. Th. 283; Call. fr. 322.1; Nic. Al. 62, 556a).[278] Toup (followed by Meineke, Kock and Marzullo) took χόριά τ' ἐμβρύων τε πλήθη to be part of the fragment (allegedly trochaic). The lack of extended spacing in Kassel–Austin makes it clear that they disagree, although for reasons left unspecified.

Citation context A scholion on Theoc. 9.19 ἐν πυρὶ δὲ δρυΐνῳ χόρια ζεῖ ("choria are boiling in/on an oak-wood fire"; a detail in a description of an ideal life for a shepherd). Cf. Hsch. χ 642 χόρια· τὰ τῶν ἀρνῶν καὶ ἐρίφων ἀγγεῖα. ἄλλοι τὰ μέλιτος καὶ γάλακτος γενόμενα βρώματα ("choria: the afterbirths of lambs and kids. Other authorities say that they are food made of honey and milk"); Ath. 14.646e χόρια. βρώματα διὰ μέλιτος καὶ γάλακτος γινόμενα ("choria: food produced from honey and milk").

Interpretation The association of this material with Cratinus is tenuous at best; see Text.

---

[278] Marzullo's νεότροφος is attested elsewhere only at A. Ag. 724 νεοτρόφου τέκνου δίκαν ("like a newly-born child", of a lion reared by men; lyric) and adesp. tr. fr. 692.13 [νε]ότροφον (lyric?). The archaic genitive ending -οιο is generally confined to epic and lyric, and is rare in both Attic tragedy (e.g. E. Hipp. 560 (lyric); Supp. 1030 (lyric); IT 1149 (lyric)) and comedy (Ar. Eq. 1016 (hexameter; parody of prayer); V. 1521–2 (lyric)).

A χόριον is an embryonic sac (in reference to both animals and human beings). For the word used in the plural for a delicacy (see Citation context), as seemingly in whatever passage was cited by the scholion on Theocritus, cf. Ar. frr. 333.5; 581.4; Anaxandr. fr. 42.44 with Millis 2015 ad loc. (citing earlier literature); Eub. frr. 74.4; 109.4; Alex. fr. 178.13.

An ἔμβρυον is something that grows (βρύω) within (ἐν) something else, and thus a fetus and by extension a new-born creature; of lambs and kids at Od. 9.245 = 309 = 342.

fr. 508 K.–A.

St.Byz. α 60
Ἀδραμύτειον · πόλις τῆς κατὰ Κάικον Μυσίας. ἡ γραφὴ διχῶς, διὰ τοῦ τ καὶ διὰ τοῦ δ, καὶ διὰ διφθόγγου καὶ διὰ τοῦ ι, καὶ δι' ἑνὸς τ καὶ διὰ δύο. ἀλλὰ δι' ἑνὸς τ, ὅταν ἔχῃ δίφθογγον, καὶ διὰ δύο, ⟨ὅταν⟩ τὸ ι μόνως … ὁ πολίτης Ἀδραμυττηνός, ὡς Ἀρτακηνός Δατηνός Δαυηνός Σεβαστηνός. λέγεται δὲ καὶ Ἀ δ ρ α μ ύ τ ι ο ν (sic Kassel–Austin, praetereunte Schmidt : Ἀδραμύττιον St.Byz.[RP] : Ἀδραμυττῖνος St.Byz.[Q]) διὰ τοῦ ι, ὡς Κρατῖνος (sic St.Byz. : Κραστῖνος Salmasius)

Adramyteion: a city in Mysia on the Caecus River. The word can be written several ways: either with a tau or with a delta; and with a diphthong or with an iota; and with one tau or two. And it (is written) with a single tau when it contains a diphthong, but with two taus, ⟨when⟩ it contains only an iota … A citizen (of the place) is an Adramyttênos, like Atrakênos, Datênos, Dauênos, Sebastênos. It is also pronounced A d r a m y t i o n (thus Kassel–Austin, following Schmidt : Adramyttion St.Byz.[RP] : Adramyttinos St.Byz.[Q]) with an iota, as Cratinus (has it) (thus St.Byz. : "like (the name) Krastinos" Salmasius)

Discussion Meineke 1857 I.24, 727–8; Jacoby 1952. 67 n. 52; Kassel–Austin ad loc.

Text Ἀδραμύττιον (the reading in the majority of the manuscripts) follows the rule laid out by Stephanus in the opening portion of the note (i. e. the name takes two taus when it is spelled with iota vs. one tau when it is spelled with epsilon-iota). Kassel–Austin (following Schmidt), however, emend to Ἀδραμύτιον, taking this to be a third alternative. Ἀδραμύττειον in Eup. fr. 421 is a fourth. Manuscripts of the Greek authors who refer to the place offer both Ἀδρα- and Ἀτρα-; as Threatte 1980. 557 notes, this is likely nothing more than a "characteristic fluctuation in Hellenizing the non-Greek word". Local coins consistently spell the name Ἀδρα- (Stauber 1996 II.183–241).

Citation context Much of this material must go back to Herodian (referenced as a source in a portion of the entry not printed above). Drawn ultimately from the same source by way of the Ethnika of the 5th-century CE grammarian and lexicographer Orus is $\Sigma^{ABFGMc2}$ Th. 5.1 (p. 288.4 Hude) Ὥρου· Ἀδραμύττειον Εὔπολις (fr. 421), Ἀτραμύττειον Θουκιδίδης (5.1; 8.108.4) ("from Orus: Eupolis (fr. 421) says Adramytteion, whereas Thucydides (5.1; 8.108.4) says Atramytteion"; ≈ Suda α 521). Related material (paralleling another portion of Stephanus omitted above) is preserved at Hsch. α 1188 Ἀδραμών· ὁ Ἕρμων παρὰ Λυδοῖς. καὶ Ἀδραμύτειον ⟨ἀπὸ⟩ Ἕρμωνος ("Hadramôn: Hermôn according to the Lydians. Also Adramyteion ⟨from⟩ Hermon").

Interpretation In the text of Stephanus as printed here (following St.Byz.^{RP} with Schmidt's emendation), some form of the word Ἀδραμύττιον is assigned to Cratinus; cf. references to the text of other authors introduced in the same way (ὡς Ἀριστοτέλης, ὡς Ἡρωδιανός) elsewhere in the note. Salmasius' ὡς Κραστῖνος (adopted by Meineke, who excluded this fragment from his edition of Cratinus), on the other hand, converts this into a comparison with the form Ἀδραμυττῖνος in St.Byz.^{Q}.

Adramyteion (IACP #800)—called, according to Stephanus, after its founder Adramys or Adramyttes (thus also Xanth. FGrH 765 F 4a), a brother of the Lydian king Croesus—was a coastal city in Mysia opposite Lesbos; cf. Hdt. 7.42.1; X. An. 7.8.8; Str. 13.612–14; Stauber 1996 I.127–47, esp. 127–33. The city only enters the historical record with the events of Summer 422 BCE, when the Persian satrap Pharnakes allowed some of the Delians expelled from their island by the Athenians to settle there (Th. 5.1; D.S. 12.73.1–2). This supplies a reasonable terminus post quem for the mention of the place by Eupolis (fr. 421 with Olson 2014 ad loc.), but is almost certainly too late for Cratinus, who seems to have died around the same time. Either the place already had significance for the Athenians before this,[279] therefore, or the fragment belongs to another author (hence the designation of it as a dubium).

fr. 509 K.–A.

Phot. μ 475 = Suda μ 1112
μισήτη· … καὶ ὁ Κρατῖνός (fr. 354) που τοῦτο ἔφη· ——. τὸν δὲ ἁπλῶς μισητὸν τὸν ἀνίκανον λέγει (sic Phot. : λέγεται Suda) [279] Str. 13.606 and Eust. p. 284.29 = I.438.7–8 call the place an Athenian colony (cf. Stauber 1996 I.130), although this may simply be a garbled reference to the events of 422 BCE; cf. Figueira 2008. 486.

---

misêtê (fem.): … And Cratinus (fr. 354) somewhere said the following: ——, whereas he refers to a man who is generally misêtos as anikanos (thus Phot. : "it is said that a man who is generally misêtos (is) anikanos" Suda)

Hsch. μ 1450
μισήτην· τὴν καταφερῆ λέγουσιν μισήτην· (fr. 354) ——, οἱ δὲ ἁπλῶς μισητὸν τὸν ἀνίκανον ἢ ἄπληστον τῇ τροφῇ

misetê (acc.): they use the term for a woman prone [sc. to sexual activity]: (fr. 354) ——, but some authorities refer to a man who is anikanos or insatiable (aplêstos) when it comes to food as simply misêtos

Citation context Traced by Erbse to the Attic lexicographer Pausanias (μ 22). See in general fr. 354 Citation context.

Interpretation Although Photius seems to claim that Cratinus used ἀνίκανος to refer to someone generally misêtos ("hated", but by extension "greedy"), the Suda and Hesychius merely report that the word was used in that sense by one or more ancient authorities, hence the designation of this fragment as a dubium. ἀνίκανος (< privative prefix ἀ(ν)- + ἱκανός, "sufficient"; thus "insatiable") is exceedingly rare and is not otherwise attested until the Imperial period (e.g. Arr. Epict. 4.1.106), which can also be taken to count against the assignment to Cratinus.

fr. 510 K.–A.

Hsch. ε 2300 ≈ Phot. ε 688
Ἐμβλώ· πέπλασται παρὰ τὸ ἐμβλέπειν (sic Hsch. Phot. : ἐμβάλλειν Kaibel : ἐμβλῆναι Lobeck)· ὡς ἡ Δωρὼ (fr. 70.1) καὶ Δεξώ (fr. 435) (ὡς κτλ om. Phot.)

Emblô: (the name) is formed from emblepein ("look at") (thus Hesychius and Photius : "to throw in" Kaibel : "to be thrown in" Lobeck), like Dôrô (fr. 70.1) and Dexô (fr. 435) ("like Dôrô" etc. omitted by Photius)

Discussion Bergk 1838. 69; Lobeck 1843. 35–6 n. 36; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Text If the name Ἐμβλώ were actually formed from ἐμβλέπω, one would expect Ἐμβλεψώ (cf. Δεξώ from δέχομαι) or Ἐμβλεπώ; cf. Interpretation. But this means only that the analysis offered by the source behind Hesychius = Photius is incorrect, not that the text requires emendation.

Citation context A discussion of fictitious theonyms drawn from some now-lost, most likely Atticist source.

Interpretation Neither Hesychius nor Photius attributes the name Emblô to Cratinus, but Bergk (followed by Kaibel) tentatively assigned the word to him on the ground that Hesychius cites as comparanda two other Cratinean coinages, the second of which he expressly gives to Cratinus at δ 644. As Kassel–Austin on fr. 70 note, however, this would seem to suggest that Cratinus might be assigned Γοργώ, Ζηλώ and Χρυσώ (cf. Hsch. γ 853) as well, which begins to strain credulity.

Ἐμβλώ is likely formed from ἐμβάλλω rather than ἐμβλέπω, and is thus to be translated "Gimme!" vel sim.; cf. Ar. Eq. 1083 ἔμβαλε κυλλῇ ("throw [money] into my hand!"), and for the formation generally, fr. 435 n. Bergk thought the reference was to one of Pericles' associates. More likely the name was coined, like Dôrô and Dexô, as a satirical personification of bribery and extortion of one sort or another.

fr. 511 K.–A. (362 K.)
= Crates of Mallos fr. 80a Mette

Σ^{V} Ar. V. 352 b
ὅτι ἐν Ὄρνισι (82) τινὲς τὸ —— ἐξηγοῦνται καρπὸν τὸν σέρφον· ἔστι δὲ θηρίδιόν τι σμικρόν. Κρατῖνος (Κράτης Dobree; = fr. 80a Mette) μ ύ ρ μ η κ ά φησι τ ὸ ν σ έ ρ - φ ο ν . οἱ δὲ ζωύφιον κωνωπῶδες, ἀφ' οὗ ἡ παροιμία· ἔνεστι κἀν μύρμηκι κἀν σέρφῳ χολή, παρεγγυῶσα μηδὲ τῶν μικρῶν καταφρονεῖν

As regards —— in Birds (82), some authorities explain serphos as a fruit; but it is a tiny little creature. And Cratinus ("Crates" Dobree; = Crates of Mallos fr. 80a Mette) says that a s e r p h o s i s a n a n t. Other authorities claim that it is a gnat-like little animal, whence the proverb "both an ant and a serphos have a sting", which recommends not disparaging even tiny things

Discussion Dobree 1843. 198; Kock 1880 I.116; Marzullo 1959. 152; Kaibel ap. K.–A Citation context Related material, but without mention of Cratinus, some of it going back to Didymus and through him doubtless to earlier scholars, is preserved at

- Hsch. σ 433 σέρφοι· οἱ πτερωτοὶ μύρμηκες ("serphoi: winged ants")[280]
- Phot. σ 148 σέρφοι· οἱ πτερωτοὶ μύρμηκες, οὓς ἡμεῖς νύμφας. οὕτω Δίδυμος (Comic Vocabulary fr. 13, p. 37 Schmidt). Κάσσιος δὲ Λογγῖνος σέρφος [280] Cf. Hsch. ν 713 νύμφαι· οἱ πτερωτοὶ μύρμηκες, which Phot. σ 148 (cited below) shows must go back to the same source, i. e. Didymus.

πτηνόν τι μικρὸν κώνωπι ἐμφερὲς κατὰ τὸ μέγεθος· μετὰ δὲ τοῦ τ στέρφους φησὶν εἶναι τοὺς πτερωτοὺς μύρμηκας ("serphoi: winged ants, which we (call) nymphai. Thus Didymus (Comic Vocabulary fr. 13, p. 37 Schmidt). But Cassius Longinus (says that) a serphos is a little winged creature similar in size to a gnat, whereas he says that sterphoi with a tau are winged ants")

– Σ^{R} Ar. Av. 82 σέρφος· σκωληκῶδες ζωΰφιον, ἢ μυρμηκῶδες. ταῦτα δὲ νέμονται τὰ ὄρνεα. καὶ ἡ παροιμία· ἔνεστι κἀν μύρμηκι κἀν σέρφῳ χολή. Νικοφῶν ἐν Ἀφροδίτης Γοναῖς (fr. 1)· —— ("serphos: a worm-like or ant-like little animal. Birds eat them. Also the proverb: both an ant and a serphos have a sting. Nicopho in Aphroditês gonai (fr. 1): ——")

– Suda σ 256 σέρφος· ζῷον μυρμηκῶδες. (Ar. Av. 569) ——. καὶ παροιμία· ἔνεστι κἀν μύρμηκι κἀν σέρφῳ χολή. ἀρσενικῶς δὲ λέγεται ὁ σέρφος. ταῦτα δὲ νέμονται τὰ ὄρνεα. Νικοφῶν ἐν Ἀφροδίτης γοναῖς (fr. 1)· —— ("serphos: an ant-like animal. (Ar. Av. 569): ——. Also a proverb: both an ant and a serphos have a sting. Serphos is masculine. Birds eat them. Nicopho in Aphroditês gonai (fr. 1)").

Hsch. σ 279 σύρφος· θηρίδιον μικρόν, ὁποῖον ἐμπίς ("syrphos: a tiny little creature, some sort of gnat") may be part of the same tradition.[281]

The Cassius Longinus mentioned by Photius is presumably the 3rd-century CE philosopher and teacher of Porphyry, who according to Suda λ 645 wrote inter multa alia two alphabetically-arranged works on Attic vocabulary.

Interpretation Dobree attributed the fragment to Crates of Mallos, a 2nd-century BCE grammarian, on the ground that a name parallel to Didymus and Cassius Longinus in Photius is wanted. If so, the error likely goes back to a mistaken expansion of an abbreviated Κρα$^{\tau}$ or the like.

A σέρφος (identified as substrate vocabulary by Beekes 2010 s. v.; for a fanciful folk-etymology, see Orion σ p. 144.25–8) is a tiny winged insect repeatedly described as eaten by birds (Ar. Av. 82, 569; Nicopho fr. 1) and treated as proverbially small at Ar. V. 352; at Ael. NA 14.22 a σέρφος is treated as potentially useful as fishing-bait. The proverb cited by the scholia to Birds and the Suda (cf. Greg.Cypr. cod. Mosq. 3.8 with Leutsch 1839 ad loc.) gives the creature a sting (cholê), so a mosquito seems more likely than a gnat, although the Greeks did not distinguish clearly between the two. There is accordingly no obvious reason why Cratinus should not have used the word as the scholion claims he did, in reference to a sexually mature ("alate") ant. See in general Beavis 1988. 251–2; Davies–Kithirithamby 1986. 164–7.

---

281 Beekes 2010 s. v. serphos, however, argues that syrphos is difficult to reconcile with serphos, and suggests that these may be completely different words.

fr. 512 K.–A. (349 K.)

Hsch. ν 152
Ν α ύ σ ω ν· Κρατῖνος (sic Hsch. : Ναύσων ⟨Ναυκράτη⟩· Κρατῖνος Kaibel : Ναύσων ⟨ναυκρατεῖ⟩· Κρατῖνος Latte : Ναύσων ⟨Ναυ⟩κράτει Heringa) ὠνοματοποίησε τὸν Ναύσωνα (sic Kassel–Austin, ducente Heringa : ὄνομα ποίησετο Ναύσων ἃ Hsch.) παρὰ τὴν ναῦν καὶ τὸ ναυκρατεῖν (sic Hsch. : καὶ τὸ κρατεῖν Heringa : καὶ τὸ ⟨Ναυκράτης παρὰ τὸ⟩ ναυκρατεῖν Ritschl : καὶ τὸ Ναυ⟨κράτης παρὰ τὸ ναῦς καὶ⟩ κρατεῖν Kaibel). πολλὰ δέ ἐστι τοιαῦτα· καὶ ἀγαθῶν ⟨ἀγαθίδες⟩ (= adesp. com. fr. 796) καὶ λευκότερος Λεύκωνος

N a u s ô n: Cratinus (thus Hsch. : "Nausôn ⟨Naukratê⟩: Cratinus" Kaibel : "Nausôn ⟨controls the sea⟩: Cratinus" Latte : "Nausôn to ⟨Nau⟩kratês" Heringa) coined the name Nausôn (thus Kassel–Austin, following Heringa : "† Nausôn will make a name for himself which things †" Hsch.) from naus ("ship") and naukratein ("to control the sea") (thus Hsch. : "and kratein ('to control')" Heringa : "and ⟨Naukratês from⟩ naukratein ('to control the sea')" Ritschl : "and Nau⟨kratês from naus ('ship') and⟩ kratein ('to control')" Kaibel). There are many such (phrases): both agathôn agathides ("troves of treasure"; = adesp. com. fr. 796) and leukoteros Leukônos ("whiter than Whitey")

Prov. Bodl. 677 (= App. prov. 4.1) = Suda ν 77
Ναύσων Ναυκράτη (sic Suda$^{\text{cett.}}$: ναυκρατεῖ Prov. Suda^{GMac})· ἐπὶ τῶν ὁμοίως ἀποδιδόντων ἀλλήλοις (ἐπὶ … ἀλλήλοις om. Prov. Suda^{F})· ὠνοματοποίησις δὲ (sic Suda : ὠνοματοποίησαν Prov.) τὸ Ναύσων παρὰ τὸ ναῦς καὶ τὸ κρατεῖ (sic Prov. : παρὰ τὸ ναῦς καὶ τὸ κρατεῖ om. Suda : παρὰ τὴν ναῦν καὶ τὸ ⟨Ναυκράτη παρὰ τὸ ναυ⟩κρατεῖν Leutsch). πολλὰ δέ ἐστι τοιαῦτα (πολλὰ … τοιαῦτα om. Suda), οἷον λευκότερος Λεύκωνος καὶ ἀγαθίδες ἀγαθῶν (= adesp. com. fr. 796) (sic Prov. : ὡς τὸ ἀγαθίδες ἀγαθῶν καὶ λευκότεροι Λεύκωνος Suda)

Nausôn Naukratês (acc.) (thus Suda$^{\text{cett.}}$: "controls the sea" Prov. Suda^{GMac}): in reference to those who make equal exchange with one another ("in reference … another" omitted by Prov. Suda^{F}). But Nausôn is a coinage (thus Suda : "they coined 'Nausôn'" Prov.) from naus ("ship") and kratei ("he/she/it rules") (thus Prov. : "from naus and kratei" omitted by Suda : "from naus ('ship') and ⟨Naukratês from nau⟩kratein ('to control the sea')" Leutsch). There are many such phrases ("There are … phrases" omitted by Suda), e. g. leukoteros Leukônos ("whiter than Whitey") and agathides agathôn ("troves of treasures", = adesp. com. fr. 796) (thus Prov. : "like a agathides agathôn ('troves of treasures') and leukoteros Leukônos ('whiter than Whitey')" Suda)

Discussion Heringa 1749. 295; Ritschl ap. Ribbeck 1879 I.282; Marzullo 1959. 152; Luppe 1967. 403–4; Kassel–Austin ad loc.

Text The text in both Hesychius and Prov. Bodl. = Suda ν 77 is lacunose and corrupt, and Hesychius' claim that the name Nausôn is derived from ναῦς + ναυκρατεῖν makes no sense. The comparanda ἀγαθίδες ἀγαθῶν and λευκότεροι Λεύκωνος offered at the end of both notes, along with their repeated references to formations somehow based on κρατέω, strongly suggest that Ναύσων was balanced by a form of Ναυκράτης or ναυκρατέω, as in the Suda. If so, Κρατῖνος in Hesychius is likely a mistake for Ναυκράτη or ναυκρατεῖ (as in Prov. = Suda), hence the designation of this fragment as a dubium.

Citation context Two separate versions of the same note most likely drawn from an earlier collection of proverbs. For similar jingles, cf. Ael. Dion. τ 1 Ταντάλου τάλαντα· παροιμία ἐπὶ τῶν πλουσίων … ἢ καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ ὀνόματος ὁμοιότητος, ὡς ἀγαθίδες ἀγαθίδων ἢ ἀγαθίδες ἀγαθῶν ("Tantalus' talent: a proverb in reference to the wealthy … or it is based on the similarity of the words, like agathides agathidôn ('troves of troves') or agathides agathôn ('troves of good things')"); Suda ε 3248 ἔσχατα ἐσχάτων κακὰ διαπέπρακται· ὁμοία ἐστὶ τῇ δεινότερα Δεινίου καὶ κύντερα Κύντωνος. ἡ παροιμία ἐπὶ τῶν ἄκρων κακῶν ("the worst of the worst troubles have come to pass: similar to deinotera Deiniou ('cleverer than Deinias')[282] and kuntera Kuntônos ('more doggish than Kyntôn')[283]"; ≈ [Plu.] Prov.Alex. fr. 38).

Interpretation The comparandum ἀγαθῶν ἀγαθίδες (= adesp. com. fr. 796) offered by both Hesychius and Prov. Bodl. = Suda is specifically attributed to the comic poets by Poll. 7.31 and Phot. α 82 = Suda α 123. Kassel–Austin accordingly raise the possibility that, even if Ναύσων Ναυκράτη (or Ναύσων ναυκρατεῖ) is not from Cratinus (see Text), the words may nonetheless be an adespoton comic fragment. In that case, λευκότερος Λεύκωνος might be one as well.

The figure of speech at work in all these examples is properly known as parechesis (Hermog. Inv. 4.7; Meth. 13; in Rh. 3.115; cf. Robertson 1891. 20–5) and is by no means restricted to comedy: e. g. Il. 2.758 Πρόθοος θοός ("prompt Prothoos"); Gorg. Hel. 9 δεῖ δὲ καὶ δεῖξαι καὶ δόξαι ("it demands to display and to demonstrate"); Pl. Smp. 185c Παυσανίου παυσαμένου ("after Pausanias paused"); additional examples at Smyth 1956 § 3037. For criticism of the use of parechesis in serious prose, see D.H. Lys. 14; Th. 48.

The personal name Ναύσων (formed as though from a full name in Ναυσι- such as Nausicrates, just as Νίκων and Νικίας are shortened from Νικόστρατος) is rare in Athens, but note Ar. Eq. 1309 οὐδὲ Ναυφάντης γε τῆς Ναύσωνος ("nor of Nauphantê, daughter of Nausôn"; an anthropomorphized ship identifies herself by a suitably nautical name in imitation of the real names used for Athenian triremes); IG II^2 2492.47 (345/4 BCE); 1199.8–9, 26 (325/4 BCE); 2325.315 = 2325H.118 Millis–Olson (a 2rd-century BCE tragic actor). Nausicratês (if that is the word to be restored here) is far more common (at least a dozen additional 5th-/4th-century examples in LGPN s. v.). ναυκρατέω (the alternative restoration in Hesychius and Prov. Bodl. = Suda) is rare and otherwise prosaic; to the passages from the classical period cited in LSJ s. v., add Ephor. FGrH 70 F 149 (p. 87; from Strabo, and thus perhaps his own paraphrase or insertion) and multiple examples in Plutarch (e. g. Luc. 2.3), Appian (e. g. BC 5.8.67) and Dio Cassius (e. g. 42.1.3), and cf. Herodotus' ναυκρατής (5.36.2).

---

282 Deinias (PA 3154; PAA 302175) was one of the γελωτοποιοί, a group of notoriously funny late 4th-century Athenians; cf. Ath. 14.614d–e.

283 Kyntôn is otherwise obscure, but the jingle (~ "more doggish than Douglas") is the point in any case.

fr. 513 K.–A. (448 K.)

St.Byz. τ 12
ταμιεῖον· οἶκος ἐν ᾧ τὰ ἀναγκαῖα ἀπετίθεσαν, ὡς Ἀριστοφάνης (fr. 897) καὶ † ἰπνὸς † (sic St.Byz. : Ἴστρος Holsten : Κρατῖνος Meineke) καὶ ἄλλοι. Φρύνιχος δὲ ἐν σοφιστικῇ παρασκευῇ (fr. 2) καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν κακῶν φησι τὸ ταμιεῖον tamieion: a structure in which they stored provisions, according to Aristophanes (fr. 897) and † ipnos † (thus St.Byz. : "Istros" Holsten : "Cratinus" Meineke) and others. But Phrynichus says in the Praeparatio Sophistica (fr. *2) that tamieion is also used in reference to troubles Discussion Meineke 1849. 600; Nauck 1894. 67; Kaibel ap. K.–A.

Citation context The first part of the note is traced by Lentz to Herodian (Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 375.26–7; a discussion of words in -εῖον), with supplementary material drawn from Phrynichus. Meineke thought that Phrynichus might have had in mind Anaxandr. fr. 81 = Diph. fr. dub. 134 κόρης ἀπαλλαττόμεθα ταμιείου πικροῦ ("we are free from the bitter storehouse of a girl").

Interpretation Meineke tentatively suggested καὶ Κρατῖνος for the corrupt paradosis καὶ † ἰπνὸς † . Holsten's καὶ Ἴστρος is at least equally compelling.

A ταμιεῖον (< τέμνω, "cut; divide up") was either a dedicated storehouse (e. g. Pl. R. 416d; Men. Sam. 229, 233 (diminutive), 236, 257) or another structure used as such (Th. 7.24.2; Pl. Prt. 315d), in which money (e. g. Th. 1.96.2), provisions (Pl. R. 548a; 550d; X. Mem. 1.5.2; Eq. 4.1; Thphr. Char. 4.9) or the like could be kept.[284] For the metaphorical use of the word (attested in Phrynichus as an Atticism, but omitted from LSJ s. v.), cf. Democr. 68 B 149 D.–K. κακῶν ταμιεῖον ("a store-house of evils"); Anaxandr. fr. 71 ταμιεῖον ἀρετῆς ἐστι γενναία γυνή ("a noble wife is a store-house of virtue") with Millis 2015 ad loc.; Men. fr. 716 ταμιεῖον ἀρετῆς ἐστιν † ἡ σωφροσύνη † ("† prudence † is a store-house of virtue"); Phoenicid. fr. 3.4. See in general Blümner 1891. 62–3.

fr. 514 K.–A. (450 K.) = test. 24

$\Sigma^{ABFMGc2}$ Thucydides 1.30.1 (p. 32.19–21 Hude) τροπαῖον ἡ παλαιὰ Ἀτθίς, ἧς ἐστιν Εὔπολις (test. 41), Κρατῖνος, Ἀριστοφάνης (test. 87), Θουκυδίδης· τρόπαιον ἡ νέα Ἀτθίς, ἧς ἐστιν Μένανδρος (test. 156) καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι tropaíon is the old Attic dialect, to which belong Eupolis (test. 41), Cratinus, Aristophanes (test. 87), Thucydides; trópaion is the new Attic dialect, to which belong Menander (test. 156) and the others

Discussion Meineke 1839 II.237; Kock 1880 I.128

Citation context A note on the accent of the word τροπαῖον in Thucydides' description of the aftermath of the naval battle between the Corcyreans and the Corinthians at Leucimne, οἱ Κερκυραῖοι τροπαῖον στήσαντες ("after the Corcyreans erected a trophy"). Thucydides' name is added after those of Eupolis, Cratinus and Aristophanes to make it clear that his work too represents the "old Attic" dialect. Related material is preserved at

- Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 369.9–10 τρόπαιον καὶ τροπαῖον Ἀττικῶς ("trópaion and tropaíon in the Attic style")
- $\Sigma^{RVMEΘMatrBarbRsV57}$ Ar. Pl. 453 τροπαῖον· οἱ παλαιοὶ Ἀττικοὶ προπερισπῶσιν, οἱ δὲ νεώτεροι προπαροξύνουσιν ("tropaíon: the old Attic authors put a circumflex accent on the penult, whereas the more recent authors put an acute accent on the antepenult"; combined with the Thucydides scholion at Suda τ 1049)
- Σ^{R} Ar. Th. 697 τροπαῖον προπερισπωμένως ἀναγνωστέον παρὰ Ἀριστοφάνει καὶ παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ, τρόπαιον δὲ προπαροξυτόνως παρὰ τοῖς νεωτέροις ποιηταῖς ("tropaíon with a circumflex accent on the penult

[284] According to a complex of related lexicographic notes on Ar. Ec. 14 (Hsch. σ 1886; Phot. σ 570; Suda σ 1126; Σ^{R} Ar. Ec. 14; cf. Poll. 1.78), the word was a synonym for στοά, and Arist. fr. 412 mentions tamieia near the Areopagus and the Stoa Basileios.

should be read in Aristophanes and in Thucydides, but trópaion with an acute accent on the antepenult in the more recent poets")

– Σ Dionysius Thrax Grammatici Graeci I.3 p. 131.18–19 ἡμεῖς μὲν … τρόπαιον λέγομεν, … ὁ δὲ Θουκυδίδης τροπαῖον Ἀττικῶς ("we say trópaion, … whereas Thucydides says tropaíon in the Attic style").

Interpretation According to Herodian and the scholia to Dionysius Thrax (both quoted under Citation context), τροπαῖον was the Attic form of the word, τρόπαιον the common form. Modern texts of 4th-century Athenian authors vary more or less randomly between the two, depending on the preferences of individual editors.

Meineke (followed by Kock) took the scholion to Thucydides to preserve fragments of both Eupolis and Cratinus, and Aristophanes does in fact use τροπαῖον repeatedly (e. g. V. 711; Lys. 285; Th. 697). But Eupolis, Cratinus and Aristophanes are merely offered here as representatives of the "old Attic dialect", and no specific claim is advanced about their individual vocabulary or their accentuation choices.

Bibliography

Adkins 1976: A. W. H. Adkins, "POLUPRAGMOSUNE and 'Minding One's Own Business: A Study in Greek Social and Political Values", CP 71: 301–27

Aguilar–López Salvá–Rodríquez Alfageme 1994: R. M. Aguilar, Mercedes López Salvá and Ignacio Rodríquez Alfageme (eds.), ΧΑΡΙΣ ΔΙΔΑΣΚΑΛΙΑΣ (Festschrift Luis Gil: Madrid)

Alpers 1970: K. Alpers, "Supplementa comica", Philologus 114: 144–5

André 1971: J. André, Emprunts et suffixes nominaux en latin (Geneva and Paris)

Andrewes 1974: A. Andrewes, "The Survival of Solon's Axones", in Bradeen–McGregor 1974, pp. 21–8

Andrews 1956: A. C. Andrews, "Sage as a Condiment in the Graeco-Roman Era", Economic Botany 10: 263–6

Anthon 1847: C. Anthon, The Anabasis of Xenophon (New York)

Arnott 1962: W. Geoffrey Arnott, "Ocnus, with Reference to a Passage of Apuleius and to a Blackfigure Lekythos in Palermo", C&M 23: 233–47

Arnott 1996: W. G. Arnott, Alexis: The Fragments. A Commentary (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 31: Cambridge)

Arnott 2007: W. Geoffrey Arnott, Birds in the Ancient World (London and New York)

Asheri 1969: D. Asheri, "Note on the Site of Brea: Theopompus, F 145", AJP 90: 337–40

Atallah 1966: W. Atallah, Adonis dans la littérature et l'art grec (Études et commentaires LXII: Paris)

Atchley 1938: S. C. Atchley, Wild Flowers of Attica (Oxford)

Austin–Olson 2004: C. Austin and S. Douglas Olson (eds.), Aristophanes: Thesmophoriazusae (Oxford)

Bagordo 2001: A. Bagordo, "Die Degeneration eines tragischen Argumentum (Cratin. fr. 323 K.-A.)", in Zimmermann 2001, pp. 169–73

Bakola 2010: E. Bakola, Cratinus and the Art of Comedy (Oxford)

Baldry 1953: H. C. Baldry, "The Idler's Paradise in Greek Comedy", G&R 22: 49–60

Bamberg 1874: A. v. Bamberg, "Zur attischen Formenlehre", Zeitschrift für das Gymnasialwesen 28: 1–40

Banfi 2003: A. Banfi, Il governo della città. Pericle nel pensiero antico (Istituto italiano per gli studi storici 50: Bologna)

Barrett 1964: W. S. Barrett (ed.), Euripides: Hippolytos (Oxford)

Baudy 1986: G. J. Baudy, Adonisgärten: Studien zur antiken Samensymbolik (Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie 176: Frankfurt am Main)

Beavis 1988: I. C. Beavis, Insects and Other Invertebrates in Antiquity (Exeter)

Beazley 1947: J. D. Beazley, "The Rosi Krater", JHS 67: 1–9

Beazley 1955: J. D. Beazley, "Hydria-Fragments in Corinth", Hesperia 24: 305–19

Bechtel 1898: F. Bechtel, Die einstämmigen männlichen Personnamen des Griechischen, die aus Spitznamen hervorgegangen sind (Abhandlungen der königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: Berlin)

Beckwith 2009: C. I. Beckwith, Empires of the Silk Road (Princeton)

Beekes 1999: R. S. P. Beekes, "The Greek Word for 'lead'", Münchener Studien zur Sprachwissenschaft 59: 7–14

Beekes 2010: R. Beekes, Etymological Dictionary of Greek (2 vols.: Leiden)

Bergk 1838: T. Bergk, Commentationum de reliquiis comoediae Atticae antiquae libri duo (Leipzig)

Bergk 1853: T. Bergk, Poetae Lyrici Graeci[2] (Leipzig)

Bergk 1882: T. Bergk, Poetae Lyrici Graeci Vol. II (Leipzig)

Berman 2005: D. W. Berman, "The Hierarchy of Herdsmen, Goatherding, and Genre in Theocritean Bucolic", Phoenix 59: 228–45

Bernabé 2013: A. Bernabé, "The Ephesia Grammata: Genesis of a Magical Formula", in Faraone–Obbink 2013, pp. 71–96

Bers 1984: V. Bers, Greek Poetic Syntax in the Classical Age (Yale Classical Monographs 5: New Haven and London)

Bianchi 2013: F. P. Bianchi, "'Religious Register' and Comedy: The Case of Cratinus", in Virgilio García–Ruiz 2013, pp. 190–8

Bianchi 2016: Francesco Paolo Bianchi (ed.), Cratino, Archilochoi — Empipramenoi (frr. 1–68): Introduzione, Traduzione, Commento (Fragmenta Comica Band 3.2: Heidelberg)

Bicknell 1966: P. Bicknell, "The Date of the Battle of the Sagra River", Phoenix 20: 294–301

Biles 2011: Z. Biles, Aristophanes and the Poetics of Competition (Cambridge)

Biles–Olson 2015: Z. Biles and S. D. Olson (eds.), Aristophanes: Wasps (Oxford)

Bing 1985: P. Bing, "Kastorion of Soloi's Hymn to Pan (Supplementum Hellenisticum 310)", AJP 106: 502–9

Biraud 1993: M. Biraud, "Usages de l'asphodèle et étymologies d'ἀσφόδελος", in Manessy-Guitton 1993, pp. 35–46

Bishop 1899: C. E. Bishop, "The Greek Verbal in –TEO", AJP 20: 1–21, 121–38, 241–53

Blass 1884: F. Blass, "Ein verkanntes Fragment des Archilochus", Jahrbüch für classische Philologie 129: 496

Blaydes 1890: F. H. M. Blaydes, Adversaria in comicorum graecorum fragmenta Pars I (Halle an der Saale)

Blaydes 1896: Fredericus H. M. Blaydes, Adversaria in comicorum graecorum fragmenta Pars II (Halle an der Saale)

Bliquez–Rodgers 1998: L. J. Bliquez and P. Rodgers, "ΚΥΑΘΟΣ at Aristophanes Pax 538–42, Lysistrata 443–44, and [Aristotle] Problems 890B7–38", CP 93: 236–41

Blok–Lardinois 2006: J. H. Blok and A. P. M. H. Lardinois (eds.), Solon of Athens: New Historical and Philological Approaches (Mnemosyne Supplement 272: Leiden and Boston)

Blümner 1884: H. Blümner, Technologie und Terminologie der Gewerbe und Künste bei Griechen und Römern Band III (Leipzig)

Blümner 1891: H. Blümner, Studien zur Geschichte der Metapher im Griechischen Heft 1 Über Gleichniss und Metapher in der attischen Komödie (Leipzig; reprint Stuttgart 1974)

Blümner 1912: H. Blümner, Technologie und Terminologie der Gewerbe und Künste bei Griechen und Römern Band I[2] (Leipzig and Berlin)

Boardman 1999: J. Boardman, The Greeks Overseas: Their Early Colonies and Trade[4] (London and New York)

Bonanno 1972: M. G. Bonanno, Studi su Cratete comico (ΠΡΟΑΓΩΝΕΣ, Collezione di studi e testi, Studi 11: Padua)

Bonfante 2011: L. Bonfante (ed.), The Barbarians of Ancient Europe: Realities and Interactions (Cambridge)

Bonner 1950: C. Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian (University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series 4: Ann Arbor)

Bonner–Smith 1938: R. J. Bonner and G. Smith, The Administration of Justice from Homer to Aristotle Vol. II (Chicago)

Borgeaud 1979: P. Borgeaud, Recherches sur le dieu Pan (Institut Suisse de Rome: Geneva; English translation The Cult of Pan in Ancient Greece, 1988)

Borthwick 1967: E. K. Borthwick, "Trojan Leap and Pyrrhic Dance in Euripides' Andromache 1129–41", JHS 87: 18–23

Borthwick 1969: E. K. Borthwick, "Two Notes on Athena as Protectress", Hermes 97: 385–91

Borthwick 1970: E. K. Borthwick, "P. Oxy. 2738: Athena and the Pyrrhic Dance", Hermes 98: 318–31

Boschung–Bremmer 2015: D. Boschung and J. N. Bremmer (eds.), The Materiality of Magic (Morphomata Vol. 20: Paderborn)

Bossi 1986: F. Bossi, Studi sul Margite (Quaderni del Giornale Filologico Ferrarese 6: Ferrera)

Bothe 1855: F. H. Bothe, Poetarum Comicorum Graecorum Fragmenta (Paris)

Bradeen–McGregor 1974: D. W. Bradeen and M. F. McGregor (eds.), ΦΟΡΟΣ Tribute to Benjamin Dean Meritt (Locust Valley NY)

Bradley–Wilson 2006: G. Bradley and J.-P. Wilson (eds.), Greek and Roman Colonization: Origins, Ideologies and Interactions (Swansea)

Brown 1977: E. L. Brown, "The Divine Name 'Pan'", TAPA 107: 57–61

Browning 1969: R. Browning, Medieval and Modern Greek (London)

Bruzzone 2009: R. Bruzzone, "Menander, Samia 606–8", CQ NS 59: 640–2

Buck–Petersen 1945: C. D. Buck and W. Petersen, A Reverse Index of Greek Nouns and Adjectives (Chicago)

Bühler 1982: W. Bühler (ed.), Zenobii Athoi proverba Vol. IV (Göttingen)

Buraselis–Meidani 2010: K. Buraselis and K. Meidani (eds.), Marathon: The Battle and the Ancient Deme (Athens)

Burkert 1979: W. Burkert, Structure and History in Greek Mythology and Ritual (Berkeley and Los Angeles)

Busolt 1897: G. Busolt, Griechische Geschichte bis zur Schlacht bei Chaeroneia (Gotha)

Buttmann 1837: P. Buttmann, A Catalogue of Irregular Greek Verbs (transl. and ed. J. R. Fishlake: London)

Buttmann 1839: P. Buttmann, Ausführliche griechische Sprachlehre Vol. 2[2] (Berlin)

Camp 1999: J.McK. Camp II, "Excavations in the Athenian Agora 1996 and 1997", Hesperia 68: 255–83

Campagner 2002: R. Campagner, "Il gioco del cottabo nelle commedie di Aristofane", QUCC 72: 111–27

Carawan 1998: E. Carawan, Rhetoric and the Law of Draco (Oxford)
Casevitz 1991: M. Casevitz, "Hellenismos. Formation et fonction des verbes en –IZŌ et de leurs dérivés", in Said 1991, pp. 9–16 Casoria–Menale–Muoio–Botanico 1999: P. Casoria, B. Menale, R. Muoio and O. Botanico, "Muscari comosum, Liliaceae, in the Food Habits of South Italy", Economic Botany 53: 113–15
Casson 1995: L. Casson, Ships and Seamanship in the Ancient World (Baltimore)
Chadwick 1996: J. Chadwick, Lexicographica Graeca. Contributions to the Lexicography of Ancient Greek (Oxford)
Chandler 1881: H. W. Chandler, A Practical Guide to Greek Accentuation (Oxford)
Chantraine 1933: P. Chantraine, La formation des noms en grec ancien (Paris)
Chantry 1994: M. Chantry (ed.), Scholia in Aristophanem Pars III Scholia in Thesmophoriazusas; Ranas; Ecclesiazusas et Plutum Fasc. IV[a] Scholia vetera in Aristophanis Plutum (Groningen)
Cheung 2007: J. Cheung, Etymological Dictionary of the Iranian Verb (Leiden and Boston)
Christ 1998: M. R. Christ, The Litigious Athenian (Baltimore and London)
Christesen 2003: P. Christesen, "Economic Rationalism in Fourth-Century BCE Athens", G&R 50: 31–56
Christidis 2001: A.-F. Christidis (ed.), A History of Ancient Greek: From the Beginnings to Late Antiquity (Cambridge)
Clark 1955: P. M. Clark, "Cratinus Frag. 337 Kock", CR NS 5: 245–6
Cobet 1854: C. G. Cobet, Variae lectiones quibus continentur observations criticae in scriptores graecos (Brittenburg) Cobet 1858: C. G. Cobet, Novae lectiones quibus continentur observationes criticae in scriptores graecos (Brittenburg) Cobet 1861: C. G. Cobet, Annotationes Criticae et Palaeographicae ad Iuliani Orationes (Continued)", Mnemosyne 10: 164–92
Cobet 1875: C. G. Cobet, "De locis quibusdam apud Hesychium", Mnemosyne 3: 291–7
Coche-Zvie 1972: C. Coche-Zvie, "Nitocris, Rhodopis et la troisieme pyramide de Giza", Bulletin de I'institut français d'archéologie orientale 72: 115–38
Cohen 2015: E. E. Cohen, Athenian Prostitution: The Business of Sex (Oxford)
Cohn 1881: L. Cohn, De Aristophane Byzantio et Suetonio Tranquillo Eustathi Auctoribus (Leipzig; = Jahrbücher für Classische Philologie Supplementband XII, pp. 285–374)
Cohn 1888: L. Cohn, "Inedita aus der atticistischen Litteratur", RhM 43: 405–18
Collard 1975: C. Collard (ed.), Euripides Supplices (2 vols.: Groningen)
Collins–Bachvarova–Rutherford 2004: B. Jean Collins, M. R. Bachvarova and I. Rutherford (eds.), Anatolian Interfaces: Hittites, Greeks and Their Neighbours: Proceedings of an International Conference on Cross-cultural Interaction, September 17–19, 2004, Emory University, Atlanta, GA (Oxford)
Collitz–Bechtel 1899: H. Collitz and F. Bechtel, Sammlung der griechischen Dialektinschriften Vol. 2 (Göttingen)
Colvin 1999: S. Colvin, Dialect in Aristophanes and the Politics of Language in Ancient Greek Literature (Oxford Classical Monographs: Oxford)

Conti Bizzarro 1999: F. Conti Bizzarro, Poetica e critica letteraria nei frammenti dei poeti comici greci (Naples)
Conwell 2008: D. H. Conwell, Connecting a City to the Sea: The History of the Athenian Long Walls (Mnemosyne Supplement 293: Leiden and Boston)
Coppola 1936: G. Coppola, Il teatro di Aristofane Vol. 1 (Bologna)
Corcoran 1963: T. H. Corcoran, "Roman Fish Sauces", CJ 58: 204–10
Craik 1990: E. M. Craik (ed.), Owls to Athens (Festschrift K. J. Dover: Oxford)
Crosby 1943: M. Crosby, "A Silver Ladle and Strainer", AJA 47: 209–16
Crusius 1889: O. Crusius, "Coniectanea ad comoediae antiquae fragmenta", Philologus 47: 33–44
Csapo–Miller 1991: E. Csapo and M. C. Miller, "The 'Kottabos-Toast' and an Inscribed Red-Figure Cup", Hesperia 60: 367–82
Csepregi–Burnett 2012: I. Csepregi and C. Burnett (eds.), Ritual Healing. Magic, Ritual and Medical Therapy from Antiquity until the Early Modern Period (Micrologus' Library: Florence)
Curtis 1991: R. I. Curtis, Garum and Salsamenta: Production and Commerce in Materia Medica (Studies in Ancient Medicine 3: Leiden)
Cuvigny 2008: H. Cuvigny, "Χίλωμα = musette", ZPE 166: 195–8
Dahlmann–Merkelbach 1959: H. Dahlmann and R. Merkelbach (eds.), Studien zur Textgeschichte und Textkritik (Cologne)
Dale 1968: A. M. Dale, The Lyric Metres of Greek Drama[2] (Cambridge)
Dasan 2015: V. Dasan, "Probaskania: Amulets and Magic in Antiquity", in Boschung–Bremmer 2015, pp. 177–203
Davidson 1981: A. Davidson, Mediterranean Seafood[2] (Baton Rouge)
Davidson–Muecke–Wilson 2006: J. Davidson, F. Muecke and P. Wilson (eds.), Greek Drama III: Essays in Honour of Kevin Lee (BICS Supplement 87: London)
Davies 1971: J. K. Davies, Athenian Propertied Families 600–300 B.C. (Oxford)
Davies–Kithirithamby 1986: M. Davies and J. Kithirithamby, Greek Insects (New York and Oxford)
Delvaux 1996: G. Delvaux, "Panétius, le pseudo-Théopompe, une source des Vies parallèles des Grecs de Plutarque", AC 65: 107–17
Denniston 1927: J. D. Denniston, "Technical Terms in Aristophanes", CQ 21: 113–21
Derkson 2008: R. Derksen, Etymological Dictionary of the Slavic Inherited Lexicon (Leiden and Boston)
Dettori 2000: E. Dettori (ed.), Filita grammatico, Testimonianze e frammenti (Seminari Romani di cultura greca Quaderni 2: Rome)
Dickey 1996: E. Dickey, Greek Forms of Address (Oxford Classical Monographs: Oxford)
Diggle 2004: J. Diggle (ed.), Theophrastus: Characters (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 43: Cambridge)
Dillon 2003: M. P. J. Dillon, "'Woe for Adonis' — But in Spring, not Summer", Hermes 131: 1–16
Dindorf 1838: W. Dindorf (ed.), Aristophanis comoediae. Accedunt perditarum fabularum fragmenta. Vol. IV: Scholia Graeca (Oxford)

Dobree 1820: P. P. Dobree, Ricardi Porsoni Notae in Aristophanem, quibus Plutum comoediam partim ex eiusdem recensione partim e mss. emendatam et variis lect. instructam praemisit et collationum append. adiccit P. P. Dobree (Cambridge)
Dobree 1833: P. P. Dobree, Adversaria Vol. II (Cambridge)
Dobree 1874: P. P. Dobree, Adversaria Vol. III Miscellaneae Observationes ad Varios Scriptores Graecos (Berlin)
Dohm 1964: H. Dohm, Mageiros (Zetemata Heft 32: Munich)
Dougherty 1993: C. Dougherty, The Poetics of Colonization: From City to Text in Archaic Greece (Oxford and New York)
Dover 1968: K. J. Dover (ed.), Aristophanes: Clouds (Oxford)
Dover 1974: K. J. Dover, Greek Popular Morality in the Time of Plato and Aristotle (Oxford)
Dover 1993: K. J. Dover (ed.), Aristophanes: Frogs (Oxford)
Downes 1904: W. E. D. Downes, "The Offensive Weapon in the Pyrrhic", CR 18: 101–6
Dübner 1877: F. Dübner (ed.), Scholia Graeca in Aristophanem (Paris; reprint Hildesheim 1969)
Dunbar 1995: N. Dunbar (ed.), Aristophanes: Birds (Oxford)
Durham 1913: D. B. Durham, The Vocabulary of Menander (Diss. Princeton) Easterling–Hall 2002: P. Easterling and E. Hall (eds.), Greek and Roman Actors: Aspects of an Ancient Profession (Cambridge)
Ehrenberg 1947: V. Ehrenberg, "Polypragmosune: A Study in Greek Politics", JHS 67: 46–67
Elmsley 1811: P. Elmsley, Review of Porson 1808, Edinburgh Review 19: 64–94
Erbse 1950: H. Erbse, Untersuchungen zu den attizistischen Lexika (Abhandlungen der deutschen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin, Philosophisch-historische Klasse Jahrgang 1949 Nr. 2: Berlin)
Erbse 1960: H. Erbse, Beiträge zur Überlieferung der Iliasscholien (Zetemata Heft 24: Munich)
Faraone 2017: C. Faraone, The Transformation of Greek Amulets in Roman Imperial Times (Philadelphia)
Faraone–Obbink 2013: C. A. Faraone and D. Obbink (eds.), The Getty Hexameters: Poetry, Magic and Mystery in Ancient Greek Selinous (Oxford)
Farioli 2001: M. Farioli, Mundus alter: Utopie e distopie nella commedia greca antica (Milan)
Farmer 2017: M. C. Farmer, Tragedy on the Comic Stage (New York)
Figuera 2008: T. Figuera, "Colonisation in the Classical Period", in Tsetskhladze 2008, pp. 427–523
Finglass 2007: P. J. Finglass (ed.), Sophocles: Electra (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 44: Cambridge)
Finglass 2011: P. J. Finglass (ed.), Sophocles: Ajax (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 48: Cambridge)
Fleming 1977: T. J. Fleming, "The Musical Nomos in Aeschylus' Oresteia", CJ 72: 222–33
Forbes 1950: R. J. Forbes, Metallurgy in Antiquity (Leiden)
Forbes 1964: R. J. Forbes, Studies in Ancient Technology Vol. IV^2 (Leiden)
Forderer 1960: M. Forderer, Zum homerischen Margites (Amsterdam)

Foster 1984: G. V. Foster, "The Bones from the Altar West of the Painted Stoa", Hesperia 53: 73–82

Fraenkel 1910: E. Fraenkel, Geschichte der griechischen Nomina agentis auf -τήρ, –τωρ, –της (–ι–) (2 vols.: Strassburg)

Fraenkel 1950: E. Fraenkel (ed.), Aeschylus: Agamemnon (3 vols.: Oxford)

Fraenkel 1963: E. Fraenkel, Zu den Phoenissen des Euripides (Sitzungsberichte der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosophisch-Historische Klasse: Munich)

Fraenkel 1964: E. Fraenkel, Kleine Schriften (Rome)

Franko 1995: G. F. Franko, "Incest and Ridicule in the Poenulus of Plautus", CQ NS 45: 250–2

Frayn 1975: J. M. Frayn, "Wild and Cultivated Plants: A Note on the Peasant Economy of Roman Italy", JRS 65: 32–9

Frederiksen–Gebhard–Sokolicek 2015: R. Frederiksen, E. R. Gebhard and A. Sokolicek (eds.), The Architecture of the Ancient Greek Theatre: Acts of an International Conference at the Danish Institute at Athens 27-30 January 2012 (Monographs of the Danish Institute at Athens Vol. 17: Aarhus)

Fritzsche 1835: F. V. Fritzsche, Quaestiones Aristophaneae (Leipzig)

Fritzsche 1845: F. V. Fritzsche (ed.), Aristophanis Ranae (Zurich)

Fritzsche 1855: F. V. Fritzsche, Fragmenta Eupolideo versu conscripta = Index lectionum in Academia Rostochiensi (Rostock)

Gagarin 1981: M. Gagarin, Drakon and Early Athenian Homicide Law (New Haven and London)

Gaisford 1820: T. Gaisford (ed.), Poetae minores graeci Vol. IV (Oxford)

Galante 1904: L. Galante, Studi su l'Atticismo (Florence)

Gale–Stos-Gale 1981: N. H. Gale and Z. A. Stos-Gale, "Cycladic Lead and Silver Metallurgy", ABSA 76: 169–224

Galinksy 1972: K. Galinsky, The Herakles Theme: the Adaptations of the Hero in Literature from Homer to the Twentieth century (Oxford)

Gallant 1999: T. W. Gallant, Risk and Survival in Ancient Greece: Reconstructing the Rural Domestic Economy (Oxford and Stanford)

Gantz 1993: T. Gantz, Early Greek Myth: A Guide to Literary and Artistic Sources (Baltimore and London)

García Romero 1994: F. García Romero, "Sobre algunos términos del léxico del deporte", in Aguilar–López Salvá–Rodríquez Alfageme 1994, pp. 115–26

Garland 1987: R. Garland, The Piraeus from the fifth to the first century B. C. (London)

Garnsey 1988: P. Garnsey, Famine and Food Supply in the Graeco-Roman World (Cambridge)

Gelzer 1980: T. Gelzer, Der epirrhematische Agon bei Aristophanes: Untersuchungen zur Struktur der attischen alten Komödie (Zetemata Heft 23: Munich)

Gernet 1924: L. Gernet, "Sur l'exécution capitale", REG 37: 261–95

Giannakis 1991: G. K. Giannakis, "Homeric μίμνω, ἴσχω, ἴζω and πίπτω: A Semantic Approach", Glotta 69: 48–76

Giannakis 2014: G. K. Giannakis (ed.), Encyclopedia of Ancient Greek Language and Linguistics Vol. 3 (Leiden and Boston)

Goebel 1915: M. Goebel, Ethnica Pars Prima: De Graecarum Civitatum Proprietatibus Proverbio Notatis (Diss. Breslau)
Goldhill–Osborne 1999: S. Goldhill and R. Osborne (eds.), Performance Culture and Athenian Democracy (Cambridge)
Gomme 1945: A. W. Gomme, A Historical Commentary on Thucydides Vol. I (Oxford)
Gomme–Sandbach 1973: A. W. Gomme and F. H. Sandbach, Menander: a commentary (Oxford)
Goodwin 1897: W. W. Goodwin, Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb[8] (Boston)
Gostoli 2007: A. Gostoli (ed. and trans.), Omero: Margite (Testi e Commenti 21: Pisa and Rome)
Gow 1952: A. S. F. Gow (ed.), Theocritus Vol. II (Oxford)
Gow 1965: A. S. F. Gow (ed.), Machon. The Fragments (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 1: Cambridge)
Gow–Page 1968: A. S. F. Gow and D. L. Page (eds.), The Greek Anthology: The Garland of Philip and Some Contemporary Epigrams (Cambridge)
Graf 1974: F. Graf, Eleusis und die orphische Dichtung Athens in vorhellenistischer Zeit (Berlin and New York)
Graham 1964: A. J. Graham, Colony and mother city in ancient Greece (Manchester)
Gray 1851: J. B. M. Gray (ed.), The Aias of Sophokles (Cambridge)
Greppin 1997: J. A. C. Greppin, "Greek verbs in -azō and -izō", Acta Orientalia Hungarica 50: 107–9
Grieser 1937: H. Grieser, Nomos (Diss. Heidelberg)
Griffith 1983: M. Griffith (ed.), Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound (Cambridge Greek and Latin Classics: Cambridge)
Griffiths 1995: A. Griffiths (ed.), Stage Directions: Essays in Ancient Drama in Honour of E. W. Handley (London)
Grotius 1626: H. Grotius, Excerpta ex Tragoediis et Comoediis Graecis (Paris)
Gunkel 2014: D. Gunkel, "Wheeler's Law", in Giannakis 2014, pp. 515–16
Gygli-Wyss 1966: B. Gygli-Wyss, Das nominale Polyptoton im älteren Griechisch (Ergänzungsheft zur Zeitschrift für die Vergleichende Sprachforschung, Heft 18: Göttingen)
Haas 1959: O. Haas, "Die griechischen Absolutiva auf -δα, -δην, -δον", in Kronasser 1956, pp. 130–45
Hagel 2009: S. Hagel, Ancient Greek Music: A New Technical History (Cambridge)
Haldane 1968: J. A. Haldane, "Pindar and Pan: frs. 95–100 Snell", Phoenix 22: 18–31
Hall 1995: E. Hall, "Lawcourt Dramas: The Power of Performance in Greek Forensic Oratory", BICS 40: 39–58
Hamm 1952: E.-M. Hamm, "μάσθλη und μάσθλης", Glotta 32: 43–5
Handley 1965: E. W. Handley (ed.), The Dyskolos of Menander (Cambridge Mass.)
Hansen 1980: M. H. Hansen, "Seven Hundred Archai in Classical Athens", GRBS 21: 151–73
Hansen 1983: M. H. Hansen, The Athenian Ecclesia (Copenhagen)
Hansen 1999: O. Hansen, "The Colony of Brea = Amphipolis?", Hermes 127: 121–2

Harlow–Nosch 2014: M. Harlow and M.-L. Nosch (eds.), Greek and Roman Textiles and Dress: An Interdisciplinary Anthology (Oxford and Philadelphia)
Harris 2001: W. V. Harris, Restraining Wrath (Cambridge Mass. and London)
Harris 2009: W. V. Harris, Dreams and Experience in Classical Antiquity (Cambridge Mass.)
Harvey–Wilkins 2000: D. Harvey and J. Wilkins (eds.), The Rivals of Aristophanes. Studies in Athenian Old Comedy (London)
Hayley 1894: H. W. Hayley, "The κότταβος κατακτός in the Light of Recent Investigations", HSCP 5: 73–82
Headlam 1899: W. Headlam, "Critical Notes", CR 13: 3–8
Headlam 1922: W. Headlam (ed.), Herodas: The Mimes and Fragments (ed. A. D. Knox: Cambridge)
Hehn 1911: V. Hehn, Kulturpflanzen und Haustiere in ihrem Übergang aus Asien nach Griechenland und Italien sowie in das übrige Europa[8] (Berlin)
Henderson 1987: J. Henderson (ed.), Aristophanes Lysistrata (Oxford)
Henderson 1991: J. Henderson, The Maculate Muse: Obscene Language in Attic Comedy[2] (New York and Oxford)
Hendrickson 2013: T. Hendrickson, "Poetry and Biography in the Athênaiôn Politeia: The Case of Solon", CJ 109: 1–19
Heringa 1749: A. Heringa, Observationum Criticorum Liber (Leeuwarden)
Herman 1987: G. Herman, Ritualized Friendship and the Greek City (Cambridge)
Hermann 1816: G. Hermann, Elementa Doctrinae Metricae (Leipzig)
Hermann 1828: G. Hermann, Opuscula Vol. III (Leipzig)
Herter 1973: H. Herter, "Theseus", in RE Suppl. XIII, pp. 1046–1236 Herwerden 1864: H. v. Herwerden, Nova Addenda Critica (Brittenburg)
Herwerden 1903: H. v. Herwerden, Collectanea critica, epicritica, exegetica (Leiden)
Hesk 2007: J. Hesk, "Combative capping in Aristophanic comedy", CCJ 53: 124–60 Hodkinson 1988: S. Hodkinson, "Animal husbandry in the Greek polis", in Whittaker 1988, pp. 35–74
Hoffmann 1994: F. Hoffmann, "Seilflechter in der Unterwelt", ZPE 100: 339–46
Horrocks 2010: G. C. Horrocks, Greek: a history of the language and its speakers (New York)
Immerwahr 1985: H. R. Immerwahr, "The Date of the Construction of Solon's Axones", BASP 22: 123–35
Irwin 1974: E. Irwin, Colour Terms in Greek Poetry (Toronto)
Isaac 1986: B. Isaac, The Greek Settlements in Thrace until the Macedonian Conquest (Studies of the Dutch Archaeological and Historical Society Vol. X: Leiden)
Isager–Skysgaard 1995: S. Isager and J. E. Skydsgaard, Ancient Greek Agriculture (London and New York)
Jacoby 1952: F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker IIIB Kommentar zu nr. 297–607 (Leiden)
Janko 1984: R. Janko, Aristotle on Comedy. Toward a Reconstruction of Poetics II (Berkeley and Los Angeles)
Janko 1987: R. Janko, Aristotle: Poetics with the Tractatus Coisilinianus, reconstructions of Poetics II, and the fragments of On Poets (Indianapolis and Cambridge)

Jouanna 2011: J. Jouanna, "Médecine rationnelle et magie: le statut des amulettes et des incantations chez Galien", REG 124: 47–77
Kagan 1989: D. Kagan, A New History of the Peloponnesian War (Ithaca)
Kaibel 1887: G. Kaibel, Athenaei Naucratitae Dipnosophistarum Libri XV (Leipzig) Kaibel 1895: G. Kaibel, "Sententiarum Liber Septimus", Hermes 30: 429–46
Kanavou 2011: N. Kanavou, Aristophanes' Comedy of Names (Sozomena 8: Berlin)
Kárpáti 2012: A. Kárpáti, "A Satyr-Chorus with Thracian Kithara: Toward an Iconography of the Fifth-Century New Music Debate", Phoenix 66: 221–46
Keller 1909–1913: O. Keller, Die Antike Tierwelt (2 vols.: Leipzig) Kessels 1978: A. H. M. Kessels, Studies on the Dream in Greek Literature (Utrecht)
Killin–Melena–Olivier 1987: John T. Killin, José L. Melena and Jean-Pierre Olivier (eds.), Studies in Mycenaean and Classical Greek Presented to John Chadwick (= Minos 20–22: Salamanca)
Kitchell 2014: K. F. Kitchell, Jr., Animals in the Ancient World from A to Z (The Ancient World from A to Z: London and New York)
Kloekhorst 2008: A. Kloekhorst, Etymological Dictionary of the Hittite Inherited Lexicon (Leiden and Boston)
Knecht 1946: T. Knecht, Geschichte der griechischen Komposita vom Typ τερψίμβροτος (Zurich)
Kock 1880, 1888: T. Kock (ed.), Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta (3 vols.: Leipzig) Kock 1893: T. Kock, "Komiker-Fragmente im Lexicon Sabbaiticum", RhM 48: 579–91
Kokkorou-Alewras 1990: G. Kokkorou-Alewras, "Herakles", LIMC V.1 pp. 35–43
Konstantakos 2005: I. M. Konstantakos, "Aspects of the Figure of the ἄγροικος in Ancient Comedy", RhM 148: 1–26
Kozloff 1976: A. P. Kozloff, "A Bronze Menagerie", Bulletin of the Cleveland Museum of Art 63: 75–88
Krochmal–Lavrentiades 1955: A. Korchmal and G. Lavrentiades, "Poisonous Plants of Greece", Economic Botany 9: 175–89
Kronasser 1956: H. Kronasser (ed.), Μνημῆς Χάριν. Gedenkschrift Paul Kretschmer, 2. Mai 1866 – 9 Màrz 1956 Vol. I (Vienna)
Kroonen 2013: G. Kroonen, Etymological Dictionary of Proto-Germanic (Leiden)
Kühner–Blass 1890, 1892: R. Kühner, Ausführliche Grammatik der griechischen Sprache[3] I Elementar- und Formenlehre (rev. F. Blass; 2 vols.: Hannover)
Kühner–Gerth 1898: R. Kühner, Ausführliche Grammatik der griechischen Sprache[3] II Satzlehre (rev. B. Gerth; 2 vols.: Hannover) Kulenkamp 1819: L. Kulenkamp, Specimen emendationum et observationum in Etymologicum Magnum (Leipzig) Labiano Ilundain 2004: J. M. Labiano Ilundain, "Breves notas sobre el sufijo griego -ikós en la Comedia aristofánica", in López Eire–Ramos Guerreira 2004, pp. 87–101
Lada-Richards 1999: I. Lada-Richards, Initiating Dionysus. Ritual and Theater in Aristophanes' Frogs (Oxford)
Langerbeck 1958: H. Langerbeck, "Margites: Versuch einer Beschreibung und Rekonstruction", HSCP 63: 33–63
Latte 1968: Kurt Latte, Kleine Schriften (Munich)

Lautensach 1899: O. Lautensach, Grammatische Studien zu den griechischen Tragikern und Komikern: Augment und Reduplikation (Hanover and Leipzig) Lautensach 1918: O. Lautensach, "Grammatische Studien zu den attischen Tragikern und Komikern", Glotta 9: 69–94
Lavery 1998: J. Lavery, "Ὄκνος: Aesch. Ag. 1009", QUCC 60: 7–16
Leach 1982: H. M. Leach, "On the Origins of Kitchen Gardening in the Ancient Near East", Garden History 10: 1–16
Lehrs 1857: K. Lehrs, Herodiani scripta tria emendatiora[2] (Berlin)
Leigh 2013: M. Leigh, From Polypragmon to Curiosus. Ancient Concepts of Curious and Meddlesome Behaviour (Oxford)
Lejeune 1940: M. Lejeune, "Sur l'accentuation attique de χαμᾶθεν", REA 42: 227–33
Lelli 2006: E. Lelli, Volpe e leone: il proverbio nella poesia greca (Alceo, Cratino, Callimaco) (Rome)
Leo 1873: F. Leo, Quaestiones Aristophaneae (Diss. Bonn)
Leo 1878: F. Leo, "Bemerkungen zur attischen Komödie", RhM 33: 400–17
Leven 2010: P. A. Leven, "New Music and its Myths: Athenaeus' Reading of the Aulos Revolution (Deipnosophistae 14.616E–617F)", JHS 130: 35–47
Liapis 2012: V. Liapis, A Commentary on the Rhesus Attributed to Euripides (Oxford)
Liberman 1993: G. Liberman, "Alcman, 17.6 ss. Page-Davies", ZPE 98: 42
Lidov 2002: J. B. Lidov, "Sappho, Herodotus, and the Hetaira", CP 97: 203–37
LIV: Helmut Rix et al. (eds.), Lexikon der indogermanischen Verben. Die Wurzeln und ihre Primarstammbildungen[2] (Wiesbaden, 2001)
Lobeck 1820: C. A. Lobeck (ed.), Phrynichi eclogae nominum et verborum atticorum (Leipzig) Lobeck 1829: C. A. Lobeck, Aglaophamus sive de theologiae mysticae Graecorum causis libri tres (Kaliningrad) Lobeck 1837: C. A. Lobeck, Paralipomena grammaticae graecae Part I (Leipzig) Lobeck 1843: C. A. Lobeck, Pathologiae sermonis graeci prolegomena (Leipzig) Lobeck 1846: C. A. Lobeck, Ῥηματικόν, sive verborum graecorum et nominum verbalium technologia (Konigsberg) Lobeck 1866: C. Augustus Lobeck (ed.), Sophoclis Aiax[3] (Berlin)
Lobel 1968: E. Lobel (ed.), "Commentary on an Old Comedy", The Oxyrhynchus Papyri XXXV (London), pp. 46–7
Long 1986: T. Long, Barbarians in Greek comedy (Carbondale)
López Eire 1996: A. López Eire, La lengua coloquial de la Comedia aristofánica (Murcia)
López Eire–Ramos Guerreira 2004: A. López Eire and A. Ramos Guerreira (eds.), Registros lingüísticos en las lenguas clásicas (Salamanca)
Loptson 1981: P. Loptson, "Pelasgikon Argos in the Catalogue of Ships (681)", Mnemosyne 34: 136–8
Luebke 1883: H. Luebke, Observationes criticae in historiam veteris Graecorum comoediae (Diss. Berlin)
Luppe 1966: W. Luppe, "Zu zwei Kratinos-Fragmenten", Philologus 110: 134–7
Luppe 1967: W. Luppe, "Zu einigen Kratinosfragmenten", Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg 16: 397–409

Luppe 1969: W. Luppe, "Kratinos-Konjekturen", Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg 18: 205–11

Luppe 2000: W. Luppe, "The rivalry between Aristophanes and Cratinus", in Harvey–Wilkins 2000, pp. 15–20

Lupu 2001: E. Lupu, "The Sacred Law from the Cave of Pan at Marathon (SEG XXXVI 267)", ZPE 137: 119–24

Lythgoe–Lythgoe 1971: J. Lythgoe and G. Lythgoe, Fishes of the Sea: The Coastal Waters of the British Isles, Northern Europe and the Mediterranean (London)

MacDowell 1990: D. M. MacDowell, "The Meaning of ἀλαζών", in Craik 1990, pp. 287–92

Mallory–Adams: J. P. Mallory and D. Q. Adams, The Oxford Introduction to Proto-Indo-European and the Proto-Indo-European World (Oxford)

Manessy-Guitton 1993: J. Manessy-Guitton (ed.), Actes du colloque international "Les phytonymes grecs et latins" tenu à Nice les 14, 15, et 16 mai 1992 à la Faculté des Lettres, Arts et Sciences humaines, Université de Nice-Sophia Antipolis (Nice)

Martelli 2014: M. Martelli, "Alchemical Textiles: colourful garments, recipes and dyeing techniques", in Harlow–Nosch 2014, pp. 111–29

Martin 1957: R. Martin, "Sur deux expressions techniques", RPhil 31: 66–81

Marzullo 1959: B. Marzullo, "Annotazioni Critiche a Cratino", in Dahlmann–Merkelbach 1959, pp. 133–54

Massa Positano 1960: L. Massa Positano (ed.), Scholia in Aristophanem Pars IV Jo. Tzetzae Commentarii in Aristophanes Fasc. I Prolegomena et Commentarium in Plutum (Groningen)

Mastronarde 1994: D. J. Mastronarde (ed.), Euripides: Phoenissae (Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries 29: Cambridge)

Matthews 1996: V. J. Matthews, Antimachus of Colophon: Text and Commentary (Mnemosyne Supplement 155: Leiden, New York and Cologne)

Mattingly 1966: H. B. Mattingly, "Athenian Imperialism and the Foundation of Brea", CQ NS 16: 172–92

Mawet 1983: F. Mawet, "La formation nominale dans l'Assemblée des Femmes d'Aristophane", Glotta 61: 182–92

McInerney 2010: J. McInerney, The Cattle of the Sun: Cows and Culture in the World of the Ancient Greeks (Princeton and Oxford)

Meineke 1814: A. Meineke, Curae Criticae in Comicorum Fragmenta ab Athenaeo Servata (Berlin)

Meineke 1839: A. Meineke (ed.), Fragmenta poetarum comoediae antiquae (5 vols. in 7: Berlin, 1834–1857)

Meineke 1847: A. Meineke (ed.), Fragmenta Comicorum Graecorum Editio Minor (2 vols.: Berlin)

Meineke 1849: A. Meineke (ed.), Stephani Byzantii Ethnicorum Quae Supersunt (Berlin)

Meineke 1856: A. Meineke (ed.), Theocritus, Bion, Moschus (Berlin)

Meineke 1857: A. Meineke (ed.), Fragmenta Comicorum Graecorum Vol. V Comicae Dictionis Index et Supplementa (2 vols.: Berlin)

Meineke 1858–1867: A. Meineke (ed.), Athenaei Deipnosophistae (4 vols.: Leipzig)

Meissner 2006: T. Meissner, S-Stem Nouns and Adjectives in Greek and Proto-Indo-European. A Diachronic Study in Word Formation (Oxford)

Melchert 2004: H. C. Melchert, "Greek mólybdos as a Loanword from Lydian", in Collins–Bachvarova–Rutherford 2004, pp. 153–8

Mette 1962: H. J. Mette, "Die περιεργία bei Menander", Gymnasium 69: 398–406

Meyer 1899: E. Meyer, Forschungen zur alten Geschichte Vol. II Zur Geschichte des 5. Jahrhunderts v. Chr. (Halle)

Millis 2015: B. W. Millis (ed.), Anaxandrides: Introduction, Translation, Commentary (Fragmenta Comica Band 17: Heidelberg)

Moorhouse 1962: A. C. Moorhouse, "ΕΥ ΟΙΔΑ and ΟΥΔΕ ΕΙΣ: Cases of Hiatus", CQ NS 12: 239–47

Morgan 1999: T. J. Morgan, "Literate Education in Classical Athens", CQ NS 49: 46–61

Moritz 1958: L. A. Moritz, Grain-mills and Flour in Antiquity (Oxford)

Morpurgo 1963: A. Morpurgo (ed.), Mycenaeae Graecitatis Lexicon (Incunabula Graeca Vol. III: Rome)

Müller 1974: D. Müller, Handwerk und Sprache: die sprachlichen Bilder aus dem Bereich des Handwerks in der griechischen Literatur bis 400 v. Chr. (Beiträge zur Klassischen Philologie Heft 51: Meisenheim am Glan)

Naber 1878: S. A. Naber, "Ad Isocratem", Mnemosyne 7: 49–85

Naber 1880a: S. A. Naber, "Ad Fragmenta Comicorum Graecorum", Mnemosyne 8: 21–55

Naber 1880b: S. A. Naber, "Ad Fragmenta Comicorum Graecorum", Mnemosyne 8: 407–35

Naekius 1817: A. F. Naekius, Choerili Samii quae supersunt (Leipzig)

Näf 2004: B. Näf, Traum und Traumdeutung im Altertum (Darmstadt)

Nagy 2012: Á. M. Nagy, "Daktylios Pharmakites. Magical Healing Gems and Rings in the Graeco-Roman World", in Csepregi–Burnett 2012, pp. 71–106

Naiden 2013: F. S. Naiden, Smoke Signals for the Gods: Ancient Greek Sacrifice from the Archaic through Roman Periods (Oxford)

Nauck 1866: A. Nauck, "Über das Verbum ῥρέω", Mélanges Gréco-Romains 2: 519–48

Nauck 1874: A. Nauck, "Kritische Bemerkungen VI", Mélanges Gréco-Romains 3: 207–344

Nauck 1880: A. Nauck, "Kritische Bemerkungen VIII", Mélanges Gréco-Romains 4: 579–730

Nauck 1888: A. Nauck, "Kritische Bemergungen IX", Mélanges Gréco-Romains 5: 93–252

Nauck 1894: A. Nauck, "Bemerkungen zu Kock Comicorum Atticorum fragm.", Mélanges Gréco-Romains 6: 53–180

Neils 1987: J. Neils, The Youthful Deeds of Theseus (Rome)

Nelson 2000: M. Nelson, "A Note on the ὄλισβος", Glotta 76: 75–82

Nesselrath 1993: H.-G. Nesselrath, "Parody and Later Greek Comedy", HSCP 95: 181–95

Neue 1822: C. F. Neue, Bacchylidis cei fragmenta (Berlin)

Newman 1902: W. L. Newman (ed.), The Politics of Aristotle Vol. 4 (Oxford)

Nisbet–Rudd 2004: R. G. M. Nisbet and Niall Rudd, A Commentary on Horace: Odes Book III (Oxford)

Nixon–Price 2001: L. Nixon and S. Price, "The Diachronic Analysis of Pastoralism through Comparative Variables", ABSA 96: 395–424

O'Bryhim 2007: S. O'Bryhim, "Adonis in Plautus' Pseudolus", CP 102: 304–7
Oliva 1973: P. Oliva, "Solon in der Darstellung der Komödie", Graecolatina et Orientalia 5: 25–33
Olson 1998: S. D. Olson (ed.), Aristophanes: Peace (Oxford and New York)
Olson 2002: S. D. Olson (ed.), Aristophanes: Acharnians (Oxford and New York)
Olson 2007: S. D. Olson (ed.), Broken Laughter. Select Fragments of Greek Comedy (Oxford)
Olson 2012: S. D. Olson (ed.), The Homeric Hymn to Aphrodite and Related Texts: Text, Translation and Commentary (Texte und Kommentare Band 39: Berlin and Boston)
Olson 2014: S. D. Olson (ed.), Eupolis frr. 326–497. Translation and Commentary (Fragmenta Comica Band 8.3: Heidelberg)
Olson 2016: S. D. Olson (ed.), Eupolis: Heilotes – Chrysoun genos (frr. 147–325). Translation and Commentary (Fragmenta Comica Band 8.2: Heidelberg)
Olson 2017: S. D. Olson (ed.), Eupolis. Testimonia and Aiges—Dêmoi (frr. 1–146). Translation and Commentary (Fragmenta Comica Band 8.1: Heidelberg)
Olson–Sens 1999: S. D. Olson and Alexander Sens (eds.), Matro of Pitane and the Tradition of Epic Parody in the Fourth century BCE (American Classical Studies 44: Atlanta)
Olson–Sens 2000: S. D. Olson and A. Sens (eds.), Archestratos of Gela: Greek Culture and Cuisine in the Fourth century BCE (Oxford)
Ornaghi 2006: M. Ornaghi, "Note di onomastica comica: Cratino (POxy IV 663; PCG Cratinus fr. 342, fr. 502", Quaderni del Dipartimento di filologia linguistica e tradizione classica A. Rostagni 5: 81–111
Orth 2015: C. Orth (ed.), Nikochares — Xenophon: Einleitung, Übersetzung, Kommentar (Fragmenta Comica 9.3: Heidelberg)
Orville 1737: J. Philippe d' Orville, Critica vannus in inanes Joannis Cornelii Pavonis paleas (Amsterdam)
O'Sullivan 2006: N. O'Sullivan, "Aristophanes' First Critic: Cratinus fr. 342 K-A", in Davidson–Muecke–Wilson 2006, pp. 163–9
Pantis–Stamou 1991: J. D. Pantis and G. P. Stamou, "Spatial Distribution and Density Dependent Growth and Flowering of Asphodelus aestivus Brot", Vegetatio 97: 89–96
Papanastassiou 2001: G. C. Papanastassiou, "Morphology: From Classical Greek to the Koine", in Christidis 2001, pp. 610–8
Papastamati von Moock 2015: C. Papastamati von Moock, "The Wooden Theatre of Dionysos Eleuthereus in Athens: Old Issues, New Research", in Frederiksen–Gebhard–Sokolicek 2015, pp. 39–80
Parker 1988: L. P. E. Parker, "Eupolis the Unruly", PCPS 34: 115–22
Parker 1997: L. P. E. Parker, The Songs of Aristophanes (Oxford)
Parker 2005: R. Parker, Polytheism and Society in Athens (Oxford)
Pearson 1917: A. C. Pearson (ed.), The Fragments of Sophocles (3 vols.: Cambridge) Pellegrino 2000: M. Pellegrino, Utopie e immagini gastronomiche nei frammenti dell'Archaia (Eikasmos Studi 4: Bologna)
Peppler 1902: C. W. Peppler, Comic Terminations in Aristophanes and the Comic Fragments Part I Diminutives, Character Names, Patronymics (Diss. Johns Hopkins)
Peppler 1916: C. W. Peppler, "The Suffix -μα in Aristophanes", AJP 37: 459–65

Peppler 1918: C. W. Peppler, "Comic Terminations in Aristophanes Part IV". AJP 39: 173–83
Perpillou 1982: J.-L. Perpillou, "Verbes de sonorité à vocalisme expressif en grec ancien", REG 95: 233–74
Petrakos 1996: B. Petrakos, Marathon (Archaeological Society at Athens Library no. 155: Athens)
Pfeiffer 1968: R. Pfeiffer, History of Classical Scholarship from the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age (Oxford)
Phillips 2008: D. D. Phillips, Avengers of Blood: Homicide in Athenian Law and Custom from Draco to Demosthenes (Historia Einzelschriften 202: Stuttgart)
Pickard-Cambridge 1968: A. Pickard-Cambridge, The Dramatic Festivals of Athens[2] (rev. J. Gould and D. M. Lewis: Oxford)
Pierson 1759: J. Pierson, Moeridis Atticistae Lexicon Atticum (Brittenburg)
Pieters 1946: J. T. M. F. Pieters, Cratinus: Bijdrage tot de geschiedenis der vroegattische comedie (Leiden)
Pirenne-Delforge 1994: V. Pirenne-Delforge, L'Aphrodite grecque (Kernos Supplèment 4: Athens and Liège)
Pirrotta 2009: S. Pirrotta (ed.), Plato comicus. Die fragmentarischen Komödien: Ein Kommentar (Studia Comica 1: Berlin)
Porson 1808: R. Porson (ed.), Euripidis Hecuba (London)
Porson 1812: R. Porson, Adversaria (Cambridge)
Porson 1815: R. Porson, Tracts and Miscellaneous Criticisms of the Late Richard Porson, Esq. (London)
Porson 1821: R. Porson, Euripidis Hecuba (London)
Poultney 1936: J. W. Poultney, The Syntax of the Genitive Case in Aristophanes (Baltimore)
Poultney 1963: J. W. Poultney, "Studies in the Syntax of Attic Comedy", AJP 84: 359–76
Poultney 1979: J. W. Poultney, "Eupolidean Verse", AJP 100: 133–44
Poursat 1968: J.-C. Poursat, "Danse armée dans la Céramique attique", BCH 92: 550–615
Probert 2006: P. Probert, Ancient Greek Accentuation (Oxford Classical Monographs: Oxford)
Pütz 2003: B. Pütz, The Symposium and Komos in Aristophanes (Drama Beiheft 22: Stuttgart and Weimar)
Quaglia 1998: R. Quaglia, "Elementi strutturali nelle commedie di Cratino", Acme 51: 23–71
Radke 1959: G. Radke, "Psithyristes" and "Psithyros", RE XXIII, pp. 1414–17
Ransom 1905: C. L. Ransom, Studies in Ancient Furniture: Couches and Beds of the Greeks, Etruscans and Romans (Chicago)
Redard 1949: G. Redard, Les noms grecs en -της, -τις et principalement en -ιτης, -ιτις (Paris)
Reece 2007: S. Reece, "Homer's Asphodel Meadow", GRBS 47: 389–400
Reed 1995: J. D. Reed, "The Sexuality of Adonis", CA 14: 317–47
Reitzammer 2008: L. Reitzammer, "Aristophanes' Adôniazusae", CA 27: 282–333
Reitzenstein 1892/1893: R. Reitzenstein, "Inedita Poetarum Graecorum Fragmenta", Index Lectionum in Academia Rostochiensi IV: 3–32

Reitzenstein 1907: R. Reitzenstein, Der Anfang des Lexicons des Photios (Leipzig and Berlin)

Rhodes 1981: P. J. Rhodes, A Commentary on the Aristotelian Athenaion Politeia (Oxford)

Ribbeck 1879: O. Ribbeck, Friedrich Wilhelm Ritschl. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Philologie (2 vols.: Leipzig)

Ribbeck 1882: O. Ribbeck, Alazon: Ein Beitrag zur antiken Ethologie (Leipzig)

Ribichini 1981: S. Ribichini, Adonis : aspetti orientali di un mito greco (Studi semitici 55; Pubblicazioni del Centro di studio per la civilta fenicia e punica 22: Rome)

Richardson 1974: N. J. Richardson (ed.), The Homeric Hymn to Demeter (Oxford)

Richardson 1993: N. Richardson, The Iliad: A Commentary Vol. VI: books 21–24 (Cambridge)

Rix 1976: H. Rix, Historische Grammatik des Griechischen. Laut- und Formenlehre (Darmstadt)

Robertson 1891: J. C. Robertson, Gorgianic Figures in early Greek Prose (Diss. Johns Hopkins)

Robertson 1986: N. Robertson, "Solon's Axones and Kyrbeis, and the Sixth-Century Background", Historia 35: 147–76

Roemer 1908: A.Roemer, "Philologie und Afterphilologie im griechischen Altertum", Philologus 67: 366–410

Rolle 1989: R. Rolle, The World of the Scythians (Berkeley and Los Angeles)

Rolle 2011: R. Rolle, "The Scythians: Between Mobility, Tomb, Architecture, and Early Urban Structures", in Bonfante 2011, pp. 107–31

Roscher 1902–9: W. H. Roscher (ed.), Ausführliches Lexikon der griechischen und römischen Mythologie Vol. III.2 Pasikrateia – Pyxios (Leipzig)

Roselli 2011: D. K. Roselli, Theater of the People: Spectators and Society in Ancient Athens (Austin)

Rosivach 1994: V. J. Rosivach, The System of Public Sacrifice in Fourth-Century Athens (American Classical Studies 34: Atlanta)

Rotroff–Oakley 1992: S. I. Rotroff and J. H. Oakley, "Debris from a Public Dining Place in the Athenian Agora", Hesperia Supplement 25 (Princeton)

Ruffell 2002: I. Ruffell, "A total write-off: Aristophanes, Cratinus, and the rhetoric of comic competition," CQ NS 52: 138–63

Runkel 1827: M. Runkel, Cratini veteris comici Graeci fragmenta (Leipzig)

Rusten 2011: J. Rusten et al. (trans.), The Birth of Comedy: Texts, Documents, and Art from Athenian Comic Competitions, 486–280 (Baltimore)

Rutherford 1881: W. G. Rutherford, The New Phrynichus (London)

Said 1991: S. Said (ed.), Ἑλληνισμός: quelques jalons pour une histoire de l'identité grecque (Actes du colloque de Strasbourg, 25–27 Octobre 1989; Leiden)

Salomon 1997: N. Salomon, Le cleruchie di Atene : caratteri e funzione (Studi e testi di storia antica: Pisa)

Schäfer 1997: A. Schäfer, Unterhaltung beim griechischen Symposion: Darbietungen, Spiele und Wettkämpfe von homerischer bis in spätklassische Zeit (Mainz)

Scheidel 1996: W. Scheidel, "The Most Silent Women of Greece and Rome: Rural Labour and Women's Life in the Ancient World (II)", G&R 43: 1–10

Schmidt 1854: M. Schmidt, Didymi Chalcenteri Grammatici Alexandrini Fragmenta Quae Supersunt Omnia (Leipzig)

Schneider 1821: J. G. Schneider, Nachträge zu dem griechisch-deutschen Wörterbuche (Leipzig)

Schneider 1838: O. Schneider, De veterum in Aristophanem scholiorum fontibus (Stralsund)

Schneider 1922: K. Schneider, "Kottabos", RE XI.2 pp. 1528–41

Schöll 1872: R. Schöll, "Die Speisung im Prytaneion zu Athen", Hermes 1: 14–54

Schweighäuser 1803: J. Schweighäuser, Athenaei Naucratitae Deipnosophistarum Libri Quindecim Vol. 3 (Strasbourg)

Schwyzer 1953: E. Schwyzer, Griechische Grammatik (3 vols.: Munich)

Sens 2011: A. Sens (ed.), Asclepiades of Samos: Epigrams and Fragments (Oxford)

Shrimpton 1980: G. Shrimpton, "The Persian Cavalry at Marathon", Phoenix 34: 20–37

Sidwell 1995: K. Sidwell, "Poetic Rivalry and the Caricature of Comic Poets", in Griffiths 1995, pp. 56–80

Siegmann 1956: E. Siegmann, Literarische griechische Texte der Heidelberger Papyrussammlung (Veröffentlichungen aus der Heidelberger Papyrus-Sammlung Neue Folge Nr. 2: Heidelberg)

Sifakis 1971: G. M. Sifakis, Parabasis and Animal Choruses (London)

Sihler 1995: A. Sihler, New Comparative Grammar of Greek and Latin (Oxford and New York)

Silk 1985: M. S. Silk, "Greek -τριᾳ and the inauthenticity of Archilochus 331", Eos 73: 239–46

Simms 1998: R. R. Simms, "Mourning and Community at the Athenian Adonia", CJ 93: 121–41

Slotty 1915: F. Slotty, Der Gebrauch des Konjunktivs und Optativs in den griechischen Dialekten Vol. 1: Der Hauptsatz (Forschungen zur griechischen und lateinischen Grammatik 3: Göttingen)

Smyth 1956: H. W. Smyth, Greek Grammar (revised version; Cambridge Mass.)

Sofia 2016: A. Sofia, Aigyptiazein: frammenti della commedia attica antica (Milan)

Sommer 1948: F. Sommer, Zur Geschichte der griechischen Nominalkomposita (Abhandlungen der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Neue Folge Heft 27: Munich)

Sommerstein 2013: A. H. Sommerstein (ed.), Menander Samia (The Woman from Samos) (Cambridge Greek and Latin Classics: Cambridge and New York)

Soriga 2017: E. Soriga, "A Diachronic View on Fulling Technology in the Mediterranean and the Ancient Near East: Tools, Raw Materials and Natural Resources for the Finishing of Textiles", in S. Gaspa–C. Michel–M.L. Nosch (eds.), Textile Terminologies from the Orient to the Mediterranean and Europe, 1000 BC to 1000 AD. pp. 24–46 (Lincoln NE).

Sparkes 1960: B. A. Sparkes, "Kottabos: An Athenian After-Dinner Game", Archaeology 13: 202–7

Sparkes 1962: B. A. Sparkes, "The Greek Kitchen", JHS 82: 121–37

Stadter 1989: P. A. Stadter, A Commentary on Plutarch's Pericles (Chapel Hill and London)

Stafford 2000: E. Stafford, Worshipping Virtues: Personification and the Divine in Ancient Greece (London)

Stafford–Herrin 2005: E. Stafford and J. Herrin, Personifications in the Greek World: from Antiquity to Byzantium (Centre for Hellenic Studies, King's College London, Publications no. 7: Ashgate)

Stama 2014: F. Stama (ed.), Frinico: Introduzione, Traduzione et Commento (Fragmenta Comica Band 7: Heidelberg)

Stansbury-O'Donnell 1990: M. D. Stansbury-O'Donnell, "Polygnotus's Nekyia: A Reconstruction and Analysis", AJA 94: 213–35

Stauber 1996: J. Stauber, Die Bucht von Adramytteion (2 vols.; Inschriften griechischer Städte aus Kleinasien Bände 50–1: Bonn)

Stevens 1976: P. T. Stevens, Colloquial Expressions in Euripides (Hermes Einzelschriften 38: Wiesbaden)

Stockton 1990: D. Stockton, The Classical Athenian Democracy (Oxford)

Storey 2003: I. C. Storey, Eupolis: Poet of Old Comedy (Oxford)

Storey 2011: I. C. Storey (ed. and transl.), Fragments of Old Comedy: Alcaeus to Diocles (3 vols.: Loeb Classical Library 513–515: Cambridge Mass. and London)

Stroud 1968: R. S. Stroud, Drakon's Law on Homicide (University of California Publications in Classical Studies 3: Berkeley)

Sturtevant 1887: E. L. Sturtevant, "History of Garden Vegetables (Continued)", The American Naturalist 21: 125–33

Sutton 1987: D. F. Sutton, "The Theatrical Families of Athens", AJP 108: 9–26

Suzuki 1994: S. Suzuki, "Accounting for Attic Reduplication: A Synthesis", Journal of Indo-European Studies 22: 399–415

Szemerényi 1980: O. J. L. Szemerényi, Four Old Iranian Names (Vienna)

Szemerényi 1987: O. J. L. Szemerényi, "ETYMA GRAECA VI (33–34)", in Killin–Melena–Olivier 1987, pp. 569–80

Taillardat 1965: J. Taillardat, Les images d'Aristophane: études de langues et de style[2] (Paris)

Taplin 1993: O. Taplin, Comic Angels and Other Approaches to Greek Drama through Vase-Paintings (Oxford)

Telò 2007: M. Telò (ed.), Eupolidis Demi (Biblioteca Nazionale, Serie dei Classici Greci e Latini XIV: Florence)

Telò 2016: M. Telò, Aristophanes and the Cloak of Comedy: Affect, Aesthetics, and the Canon (Chicago and London)

Theodoridis 1978: C. Theodoridis, "Neues zur griechischen Komödie", ZPE 29: 29–32

Theodoridis 1979: C. Theodoridis, "Zu drei Dichterstellen aus dem Lexikon des Photios", ZPE 35: 29–31

Thompson 1936: D. W. Thompson, A Glossary of Greek Birds (Oxford)

Thompson 1947: D. W. Thompson, A Glossary of Greek Fishes (Oxford)

Threatte 1980: L. Threatte, The Grammar of Attic Inscriptions Vol. 1 Phonology (Berlin and New York)

Threatte 1996: L. Threatte, The Grammar of Attic Inscriptions Vol. II Morphology (Berlin and New York)

Thumb 1905: A. Thumb, review of Galante 1904, in Deutsche Literaturzeitung 8: 474

Tichy 1983: E. Tichy, Onomatopoetische Verbalbildungen des Griechischen (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, Sitzungsberichte 409 Band 14: Vienna)

Todd 1993: S. C. Todd, The Shape of Athenian Law (Oxford)

Tolles 1943: D. Tolles, The Banquet-Libations of the Greeks (Diss. Bryn Mawr: Ann Arbor)

Triantafyllidis 1998; Idryma Triantafyllidis, Dictionary of Common Modern Greek (Thessaloniki)

Tribulato 2015: O. Tribulato, Ancient Greek Verb-Initial Compounds (Berlin and Boston)

Tsetskhladze 2008: G. R. Tsetskhladze (ed.), Greek Colonisation. An Account of Greek Colonies and Other Settlements Overseas Vol. 2 (Mnemosyne Supplement 193: Leiden and Boston)

Tsirigotou-Drakotou 2010: I. Tsirigotou-Drakotou, "Η κατοίκηση της περιοχής κατά τους κλασικούς χρόνους", in Buraselis–Meidani 2010, pp. 51–62

Tsirimbas 1936: D. A. Tsirimbas, Sprichwörter und sprichwörtliche Redensarten bei den Epistolographen der zweiten Sophistik (Diss. Munich)

Usener 1904: H. Usener, "Psithyros", RhM 59: 623–4

Ussher 1973: R. G. Ussher (ed.), Aristophanes: Ecclesiazusae (Oxford)

van der Valk 1972: M. van der Valk, "On a Few Points of Attic Comedy and Tragedy", in Studi classici in onore di Quintino Cataudella (Catania), pp. 59–98

van Dijk 1997: G.-J. van Dijk, Ainoi, Logoi, Mythoi: fables in archaic, classical, and Hellenistic Greek literature: with a study of the theory and terminology of the genre (Mnemosyne Supplement 166: Leiden, New York and Cologne) van Leeuwen 1900: J. van Leeuwen (ed.), Aristophanis Equites cum prolegomenis et commentariis (Leiden) van Straten 1995: F. T. van Straten, Hiera Kala: Images of Animal Sacrifice in Archaic and Classical Greece (Religions in the Graeco-Roman World Vol. 127: Leiden, New York and Cologne)

Vendryes 1916: J. Vendryes, "Type thématique à redoublement en indo-européen", Mémoires de la Societé Linguistique de Paris 20: 117–23

Venit 1989: M. S. Venit, "Herakles and the Hydra in Athens in the First Half of the Sixth century B.C.", Hesperia 58: 99–113

Verpoorten 1962: J.-M. Verpoorten, "Les noms grecs et latins de l'asphodèle", AC 31: 111–29

Virgilio García–Ruiz 2013: J. V. García and A. Ruiz (eds.), Poetic Language and Religion in Greece and Rome (Newcastle upon Tyne)

Wackernagel 1926: J. Wackernagel, Vorlesungen über Syntax mit besonderer Berücksichtigung von Griechisch, Lateinisch und Deutsch: Erste Reihe[2] (Basel)

Wackernagel 1953: J. Wackernagel, Kleine Schriften (Göttingen)

Wallace 2003: R. W. Wallace, "An Early Fifth-Century Athenian Revolution in Aulos Music", HSCP 101: 73–92

Warton 1770: T. Warton (ed.), Theocriti Syracusii quae supersunt (2 vols.: Oxford)

Weil 1892: H. Weil, "Un fragment d'un nouvel historien d'Alexandre le grand", REG 5: 306–26

Weiss 1998: M. Weiss, "Erotica: On the Prehistory of Greek Desire", HSCP 98: 31–61

Weiss 2009: M. Weiss, Outline of the Historical and Comparative Grammar of Latin (Ann Arbor and New York)
Welcker 1848: F. G. Welcker, Die Composition der polygnotischen Gemälde in der Lesche zu Delphi (Berlin)
West 1966: M. L. West (ed.), Hesiod Theogony (Oxford)
West 1988: S. West, "Archilochus' Message-Stick", CQ NS 38: 42–8
West 1990: M. L. West, "Notes on Sappho and Alcaeus", ZPE 80: 1–8
West 1992: M. L. West, Ancient Greek Music (Oxford)
West 2003: M. L. West (ed. and trans.), Homeric Hymns. Homeric Apocrypha. Lives of Homer (Loeb Classical Library 496: Cambridge Mass. and London)
Whitaker 1969: T. W. Whitaker, "Salads for Everyone: A Look at the Lettuce Plant", Economic Botany 23: 261–4
White 1921: J. W. White, The verse of Greek comedy (London)
Whitehead 2000: D. Whitehead, Hypereides: The Forensic Speeches (Oxford)
Whittaker 1935: M. Whittaker, "The comic fragments in their relation to the structure of Old Attic Comedy", CQ 29: 181–91
Wilamowitz 1870: U. v. Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, Observationes Criticae in Comoediam Graecam Selectae (Diss. Berlin)
Wilamowitz 1879: U. v. Wilamowitz-Mölloendorff, "Parerga", Hermes 14: 161–86
Wilamowitz 1893: U. v. Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, Aristoteles und Athen (2 vols.: Berlin)
Wilamowitz 1900: U. v. Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, Die Textgeschichte der griechischen Lyriker (Berlin)
Wilamowitz 1921: U. v. Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, Griechische Verskunst (Berlin)
Wilamowtiz 1922: U. v. Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, Pindaros (Berlin)
Wilkins 2000: J. Wilkins, The Boastful Chef: The Discourse of Food in Ancient Greek Comedy (Oxford)
Willi 2003: A. Willi, The Languages of Aristophanes: Aspects of Linguistic Variation in Classical Attic Greek (Oxford Classical Monographs: Oxford)
Williger 1922: E. Williger, Hagios: Untersuchungen zur Terminologie des Heiligen in den hellenisch-hellenistischen Religionen, in Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten 19, pp. 1–108 (Giessen)
Wilson 1999: P. Wilson, "The aulos in Athens", in Goldhill–Osborne 1999, pp. 58–95
Wilson 2002: P. Wilson, "The musicians among the actors", in Easterling–Hall 2002, pp. 39–68
Wilson 2006: J.-P. Wilson, "'Ideologies' of Greek Colonization", in Bradley–Wilson 2006, pp. 25–57
Winter 1950: W. Winter, "On the Origin of the Saṁprasaraṇa Reduplication in Sanskrit", Language 26: 365–70
Woodhead 1952: A. G. Woodhead, "The Site of Brea: Thucydides 1. 61. 4", CQ NS 2: 57–62
Wright 2012: M. Wright, The Comedian as Critic: Greek Old Comedy and Poetics (London)
Zimmerman 2001: B. Zimmerman (ed.), Rezeption des antiken Dramas auf der Bühne und in der Literatur (Stuttgart)
Zohary–Hopf–Weiss 2012: D. Zohary, M. Hopf and E. Weiss, Domestication of Plants in the Old World[4] (Oxford)

Indices

Index fontium

Ael. VH 2.13: fr. 395
Antiatt. μ 35: fr. 473
App. prov. 4.1: fr. 512
Aristid. or. 2.72: fr. 324
Aristid. or. 3.51: fr. 324
Aristid. or. 34.51: fr. 364
Ath. 1.7f–8a: fr. 365
Ath. 1.22c: fr. 425
Ath. 1.23b: fr. 332
Ath. 2.49a: fr. 334
Ath. 2.56d–e: fr. 350
Ath. 2.62e–f: fr. 363
Ath. 2.67b–c: fr. 312
Ath. 2.67f–8a: fr. 336
Ath. 2.69d: fr. 370
Ath. 3.106b–c: fr. *314
Ath. 7.305a–b: fr. 358
Ath. 10.424b: fr. 464
Ath. 11.782d–f: fr. 299
Ath. 13.566e–f: fr. 351
Ath. 13.596b–c: fr. 369
Ath. 15.676f: fr. 394
Choerob. p. 241.5–9: fr. 359
D.Chr. or. 56.2: fr. 313
EM p. 90.33–7: fr. 409
EM p. 183.45–8: fr. 359
EM p. 194.23: fr. 424
EM p. 200.37–49: fr. 335
EM p. 269.31–6: fr. 304
EM p. 299.30–2: fr. 446
EM p. 402.39–45: fr. 456
EM p. 491.40–3: fr. *314
EM p. 512.8–14: fr. 339
EM pp. 578.57–579.4: fr. 472
EM pp. 717.57–718.3: fr. 491
EM p. 784.21–3: fr. 498
Et.Gen. AB β 85: fr. 424
Et.Gen. AB β 146: fr. 335
Et.Gen. AB s. v. βαβάκτης: fr. 359
Et.Gen. AB s. v. διαπηνηκίζω: fr. 304
Et.Gen. AB s. v. εἰλίπους: fr. 446
Et.Gen. AB s. v. καρίς: fr. *314
Et.Gen. AB s. v. ἐφετίνδα: fr. 456
Et.Gud. α 715: fr. 409
Et.Sym. I pp. 448.30–451.26: fr. 335
Et.Sym. β 1 B: fr. 359
Eust. p. 294.40–3 = I.455.10–14: fr. 493
Eust. p. 777.62 = II.816.6: fr. 489
Eust. p. 1430.22–5 = i.77.7–11: fr. 337
Eust. p. 1446.25–30 = i.98.36–9: fr. 409
Eust. p. 1479.41–6 = i.142.9–23: fr. 344
Eust. p. 1484.28–9 = i.149.14–16: fr. 406
Eust. p. 1641.8 = i.358.31–2: fr. 332
Eust. p. 1650.64–1651.2 = i.371.37–40: fr. 354
Eust. p. 1669.44–6 = i.395.13–14: fr. 489
Eust. p. 1761.19–23 = ii.73.35–9: fr. 489
Eust. p. 1761.27–8 = ii.73.44–6: fr. 345
Eustratius in Arist. EN 6.7 (CAG XX pp. 320.36–321.1 Heylbut): fr. 368
Excerpta cod. Darmst. 2773 fol. 329r ap. Hermann 1828 III.40: fr. 398
Harp. pp. 7.8–8.9 Dindorf = A 22 Keaney: fr. 402
Harp. p. 178.8–9 Dindorf = K 61 Keaney: fr. 343
Hdn. Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 384.11–14: fr. 347
[Hdn.] Philet. 32: fr. 325
[Hdn.] Philet. 89: fr. 466
[Hdn.] Philet. 106: fr. 306
Heph. Enchiridion 10.3 (pp. 32.21–33.4 Consbruch): fr. 359
Heph. Enchiridion 15.2 (pp. 47.3–48.1 Consbruch): fr. 360
Heph. Enchiridion 15.21–2 (p. 54.11–20 Consbruch): fr. *361
Hsch. α 4902: fr. 411
Hsch. α 8981: fr. 420
Hsch. β 1084: fr. 426

Hsch. δ 644: fr. 435
Hsch. δ 1143: fr. 438
Hsch. δ 2539: fr. 442
Hsch. δ 2578: fr. 443
Hsch. ε 2169: fr. 448
Hsch. ε 2300: fr. 510
Hsch. η 577: fr. *318
Hsch. κ 1923: fr. 409
Hsch. κ 3661: fr. 463
Hsch. κ 4380: fr. 352
Hsch. κ 4849: fr. 397
Hsch. λ 691: fr. 392
Hsch. μ 374: fr. 301
Hsch. μ 1450: fr. 354
Hsch. ν 152: fr. 512
Hsch. π 2891: fr. 338
Hsch. σ 273: fr. 490
Hsch. σ 1156: fr. 492
Hsch. σ 1823: fr. 399
Hsch. χ 34: fr. 500
Hsch. χ 50: fr. 500
Hsch. χ 643: fr. 502
Lex. cod. Vat. gr. 12 ap. Reitzenstein 1892/1893. 4: fr. 408
Michael Ital. epist. 24, An.Ox. III p. 195.6–8: fr. 478
Philemon ap. Porph. ad Il. p. 288.18–21 Schrader = pp. 38.31–3 Sodano: fr. 506
Phot. α 174: fr. 402
Phot. α 248: fr. 356
Phot. α 267: fr. 371
Phot. α 399: fr. 404
Phot. α 363: fr. 353
Phot. α 414: fr. 327
Phot. α 505: fr. 372
Phot. α 634: fr. 407
Phot. α 804: fr. 315
Phot. α 808: fr. 374
Phot. α 813: fr. 315
Phot. α 830: fr. 373
Phot. α 889–90: fr. 375
Phot. α 1151: fr. 376
Phot. α 1488: fr. 377
Phot. α 1617: fr. 379
Phot. α 1663: fr. 447
Phot. α 1834: fr. 348
Phot. α 1924: fr. 380
Phot. α 1975: fr. 381
Phot. α 1979: fr. 382
Phot. α 2031: fr. 412
Phot. α 2035: fr. 413
Phot. α 2231: fr. 414
Phot. α 2489: fr 330
Phot. α 2525: fr. 415
Phot. α 2616: fr. 384
Phot. α 2860: fr. 416
Phot. α 2881: fr. 417
Phot. α 3155: fr. 450
Phot. α 3237: fr. 419
Phot. α 3403: fr. 386
Phot. α 3478: fr. 505
Phot. α 3447: fr. 387
Phot. α 3454: fr. 360
Phot. β 16: 421
Phot. β 334: fr. 427
Phot. γ 99: fr. 429
Phot. γ 150: fr. 430
Phot. δ 287: fr. 436
Phot. δ 306: fr. 437
Phot. δ 505: fr. 439
Phot. ε 688: fr. 510
Phot. ε 744: fr. 449
Phot. ε 1250: fr. 308
Phot. θ 157: fr. 459
Phot. ι 293: fr. 460
Phot. κ 1249: fr. 465
Phot. λ 37: fr. 493
Phot. λ 120: fr. 467
Phot. λ 193: fr. 468
Phot. λ 204: fr. 392
Phot. μ 123: fr. 469
Phot. μ 345: fr. 474
Phot. μ 409: fr. 475
Phot. μ 475: fr. 354
Phot. μ 475: fr. 509
Phot. μ 480: fr. 477
Phot. ο 363: fr. 367
Phot. π 1049: fr. 338
Phot. π 1168: fr. 482
Phot. π 1331: fr. 317

Phot. ρ 169: fr. 486
Phot. ρ 171: fr. 487
Phot. σ 19: fr. 488
Phot. σ 69: fr. 489
Phot. σ 99: fr. 490
Phot. σ 462: fr. 441
Phot. σ 642: fr. 494
Phot. σ 878: fr. 495
Phot. σ 911: fr. 496
Phot. υ 272: fr. 498
Phot. ined.: fr. 347
Phot.^{z} ined.: frr. 398; 400
Phryn. Ecl. 81: fr. 363
Phryn. Ecl. 114: fr. 453
Phryn. Ecl. 337: fr. 401
Phryn. Ecl. 402: fr. 499
Phryn. PS p. 3.1–2: fr. 348
Phryn. PS p. 9.6–7: fr. 378
Phryn. PS p. 10.12–17: fr. 452
Phryn. PS p. 19.14–16: fr. 383
Phryn. PS p. 20.6–10: fr. 503
Phryn. PS p. 21.1–2: fr. 450
Phryn. PS p. 50.16–17: fr. 320
Phryn. PS p. 59.13–14: fr. 428
Phyrn. PS p. 69.4: fr. 389
Phryn. PS p. 74.7–8: fr. 458
Phryn. PS p. 89.1: fr. 393
Phryn. PS p. 102.19–21: fr. 483
Phryn. PS fr. *91: fr. 327
Plu. Per. 13.7: fr. 326
Plu. Sol. 25.1–2: fr. 300
Plu. Mor. 351a: fr. 326
Poll. 1.242: fr. 390
Poll. 2.7: fr. 497
Poll. 2.10: fr. 485
Poll. 2.17: fr. 385
Poll. 2.28: fr. 399
Poll. 2.49: fr. 470
Poll. 2.78: fr. 333
Poll. 2.124: fr. 476
Poll. 2.153: fr. 501
Poll. 2.188: fr. 432
Poll. 3.14: fr. *318
Poll. 3.64: fr. 445
Poll. 3.75: fr. 440
Poll. 3.92: fr. 422
Poll. 3.106: fr. 454
Poll. 4.184–5: fr. 319
Poll. 5.68: fr. 434
Poll. 6.21: fr. 504
Poll. 6.23: fr. 396
Poll. 6.61: fr. 329
Poll. 6.65: fr. 312
Poll. 6.81: fr. 390
Poll. 6.161: fr. 457
Poll. 6.163: frr. 479; 480
Poll. 7.28: fr. 388
Poll. 7.31: fr. 481
Poll. 7.37–8: fr. 303
Poll. 7.39: fr. 500
Poll. 7.43: fr. 455
Poll. 7.142: fr. 461
Poll. 7.161: fr. 391
Poll. 7.179: fr. 431
Poll. 10.143: fr. 490
Porphyry ap. Eus. PE 10.3.21: fr. 355
POxy. 2738 col. ii: fr. 433
Priscian. Instit. Gramm. 18.306 (Grammatici Latini III pp. 376.20–377.6): fr. 328
Prov. Bodl. 625: fr. 301
Prov. Bodl. 677: fr. 512
Prov. cod. Par. Suppl. 676: fr. 301
Prov. Coisl. 372: fr. 367
Orus fr. A 42: fr. 316
Orus fr. A 48a: fr. 362
Orus fr. A 52: fr. 311
Orus fr. A 57: frr. 309; 310
Orus fr. B 98: fr. 471
St.Byz. α 60: fr. 508
St.Byz. τ 12: fr. 513
St.Byz. p. 704.1–5: fr. 347
Suda α 317: fr. 356
Suda α 1947: fr. 410
Suda α 2019: fr. 332
Suda α 2305: fr. 379
Suda α 2537: fr. 381
Suda α 2563: fr. 413
Suda α 2819: fr, 340
Suda α 2877: fr. 414

Suda α 3496: fr. 384
Suda α 4714: fr. 360
Suda αι 64: fr. 405
Suda β 18: fr. 421
Suda β 502: fr. 427
Suda δ 500: fr. 436
Suda δ 845: fr. 439
Suda ε 1784: fr. 308
Suda ε 2189: fr. 398
Suda κ 2027: fr. 349
Suda λ 302: fr. 392
Suda μ 1112: frr. 354; 509
Suda ν 77: fr. 512
Suda ο 399: fr. 367
Suda π 1988: fr. 338
Suda π 2702: fr. 317
Suda ρ 282: fr. 486
Suda υ 622: fr. 498
Suda ψ 155: fr. 347
Suet. περὶ βλασφημίας C.IV.80 (p. 102): fr. 489
Synag. B α 192: fr. 356
Synag. B α 272: fr. 402
Synag. B α 301: fr. 371
Synag. B α 386: fr. 404
Synag. B α 404: fr. 327
Synag. B α 497: fr. 372
Synag. B α 638: fr. 407
Synag. B α 758: fr. 373
Synag. B α 762: fr. 315
Synag. B α 808: fr. 315
Synag. B α 832: fr. 375
Synag. B α 1305: fr. 379
Synag. B α 1410: fr. 381
Synag. B α 1450: fr. 413
Synag. B α 1551: fr. 340
Synag. B α 1594: fr. 414
Synag. B α 1835: fr. 330
Synag. B α 1875: fr. 415
Synag. B α 1935: fr. 384
Synag. B α 2148: fr. 417
Synag. B α 2149: fr. 416
Synag. B α 2614: fr. 360
Theodos. Περὶ κλίσεως τῶν εἰς ων βαρυτόνων (ed. Hilgard) p. 21.29: fr. 418
Zenob. 5.7: fr. 301
Zon. p. 1366: fr. 357
Σ^{Γ} Ar. Ach. 3: fr. 321
Σ^{RE} Ar. Ach. 3: fr. 321
$\Sigma^{VE\Gamma3\Theta}$ Ar. Eq. 407: fr. 484
$\Sigma^{VE\Gamma3\Theta M}$ Ar. Eq. 534: fr. 349
Σ Ar. Eq. 1236$^{VE\Gamma3}$: fr. 409
$\Sigma^{VE\Gamma3M}$ Ar. Eq. 1287: fr. 338
Σ^{REM} Ar. Nu. 790: fr. 451
Σ^{RV} Ar. V. 151: fr. 462
Σ^{V} Ar. V. 352 b: fr. 511
$\Sigma^{RV\Gamma}$ Ar. Pax 741: fr. 346; test. 26
$\Sigma^{RV\Gamma EM}$ Ar. Av. 365: fr. 341
$\Sigma^{RVE\Gamma}$ Ar. Av. 1536: fr. 423
Σ^{R} Ar. Th. 940: fr. 366
$\Sigma^{RVEMBarbMatrLut}$ Ar. Pl. 66: fr. 307
Σ^{A} E. Rh. 419: fr. 322
Σ^{Th} Il. 2.56: fr. 331
Σ^{T} Il. 16.428: fr. 444
Σ^{A} Il. 18.521b: fr. 397
Σ^{h} Il. 23.361: fr. 472
Σ^{F} Orib. inc. 12.1 (IV p. 99.19 Raeder): fr. *305
$\Sigma^{Areth.}$ Pl. Ap. 19c: fr. 342
$\Sigma^{vet.}$ S. Ant. 404–5: fr. 323
Σ^{KGUEAT} Theoc. 4.18: fr. 302
Σ^{KUEAT} Theoc. 9.19a: fr. 507
$\Sigma^{ABFMGc2}$ Thucydides 1.30.1 (p. 32.19–21 Hude): fr. 514

Index verborum

ἅγιος: 228–9 ἀγκύλη: 17
ἀγρο-, compounds in: 193
ἀγροβόας: 193
ἀγρός in sense “countryside”: 154 ἀγυιεύς: 229–30
ἄγω ἑορτήν: 152
-αδ-, nouns in: 248
Ἀδώνιος: 230–1
ἀείδω/ᾄδω: 110 ἀείνων: 81
αἴγλη: 231
αἰγυπτιάζω: 234 αἰμυλοπλόκος: 235
αἰμύλος: 235
αἰμυλόφρων: 235
αἰπολέω: 53
-αισιν vs. -αις: 61
ἀκμήν: 236
ἄκος: 197
ἀκούω used absolutely: 57
ἀλαζών: 199
ἀλεκτρυών: 126–7
ἀλλὰ οὖν: 71
ἀλλ᾽ εἴσιθ᾽ εἴσω: 86
ἀμαθής: 129
ἄμαχος: 200
ἄμυστις: 71
ἀμφικαῦστις: 239
ἀναιδής: 201
ἄναλτος: 241
ἀναπηδάω: 202
ἀναπίπτω: 93
ἀναπτερόω: 203
ἀνδρόω: 63
ἀνεκτέος: 173
ἀνελκτός: 136
ἀνεξικώμη: 242
ἀνέχομαι + infinitive/particple: 125 ἀνθέρικος: 178
ἄνθρωπος as place-holder in lemmata: 205 ἀνημέρωτος: 203–4
ἀνὴρ ἄριστος: 68
ἀνίκανος: 355
ἀνομία and cognates: 243
ἄνοργος: 243
-αξ, nouns in: 246
ἄξιος: 115
ἀπαλλάσσω: 244
ἁπαλός: 207
ἀπόδυθι vs. ἀπόδυσαι: 87
ἀποτέμνω: 66
ἅπτω: 250
ἆρά γε: 40
ἄριστος vs. κράτιστος: 68
ἀρράβαξ and cognates: 246–7 ἀρρενώπας: 248
ἀρτύω: 106
Ἀρτύων: 249
ἄρχων + dat. of interest: 75–6
-ᾶς, nouns in: 339
ἀσφάραγος/ἀσπάραγος: 177–8 ἅτε: 114
αὖθις αὖ: 154
αὐλέω: 42
αὐτόματος: 177
αὐτόνομος: 249–50
ἀφῆλιξ: 209–10
ἄφρων: 37
ἄχνυμαι: 212
ἀχρειόγελως: 165–6
ἀψευδής: 349
-άω, desideratives in: 65, 336
βαβάκτης and cognates: 162 βαδίζω: 251
βαδισματίας: 251–2 βαλλαντιοτόμος: 66
βάρβαρος: 61
βασίλεια: 253
βαυβ-/βαυκ-, verbs in: 130 βέθρον/βέρεθρον/βάραθρον: 254 βλέπω + adv. of manner: 201 βλιμάζω: 103–4

-βόας, compounds in: 193
βοάω, imperatives of: 257
βουκολέω: 53–4 βράκανα: 275
γαργαίρω and cognates: 68
γάρος/γάρον: 51
γαστήρ: 139
γαστροχάρυβδις: 257–8
γαυριάω: 97
γεωνόμης and γεωμέτρης: 258–9 γλαῦκος: 105–6 γλυκωνόχορδος: 260–1 γλύφω: 261
γλῶττα: 74
γνωμίδιον: 121–2 γνωμιδιώτης: 121
γονατίζω: 262
Γοργοδρακνοταδοκα: 263–4
δασυ-, compounds in: 265 δασύπους: 265
δασύς: 113
δείρω/δέρω: 116
δεῦρο and δευρί: 57–8 δῆμος: 202
-δήν, adverbs in: 323
δια- as intensifying prefix: 51 διαβάλλω: 267–8
διάλογος: 269–70
διαπηνηκίζω and cognates: 34–5 διάπλεως: 51 διαφθείρω, perfect forms of in poetry: 73
διαψαλάττομαι: 271
δίδωμι χάριν + dat.: 139
δοκεῖ: 141
δουλοπρεπής: 272
δοχμή: 273
δυσαυξής: 276
δυσβράκανος: 275
δυσθαλής: 276
ἐδηδοκοίη: 157
ἐθέλεχθρος: 277
ἐθελο-, compounds in: 277
ἐθελόσυχνος: 278–9
ἐκσκυζάω: 280
ἔκφορος: 37
Ἑλληνίς: 74
ἐλλόπιδας: 281
ἐλλόποδες: 281
ἐλλός/ἑλλός: 281
ἔλλοψ: 281
ἐμβατεύω: 163
ἔμβρυον: 363
ἔμπαις: 63 ἐμπίνω: 27
ἐναύομαι: 283
ἐνηβάω: 179
ἐνύπνιον: 91 ἐξαπατάω: 224
ἐξόδιος: 42
ἐπαγλαΐζω: 97
ἐπι- in kinship terminology: 319 ἐπιβάλλω τὴν χεῖρα: 44–5 ἐπίβδαι: 166
ἐπιλήσμων: 284
ἐπιστολή: 59
ἐπονομάζω: 17
ἔριον: 213
ἔρρωμαι: 285
ἐσθίω: 139
  perfect forms of: 157
-έτης/-έτις, compounds in: 276
ἔτικτε/ἔτεκε: 166
εὖ μάλα: 31
εὐ-, compounds in: 351
εὐθανάτως and cognates: 287 εὐθενέω: 173
εὔζωρος: 286 εὔιππος: 351
εὐπινής: 287–8
εὐπρόσωπος: 107
εὐριπιδαριστοφανίζω: 122
ἔφασκε introducting a quotation: 170 ἐφετίνδα: 288–9
ἐφιππάζομαι: 214 ζωρός: 286
ἡμι-, compounds in: 291
ἡμίλουτος: 291
-ηρός, adjectives in: 216
-ῃσιν vs. -αις: 61

-θαλής, compounds in: 276
θάνατος + infinitive: 15 θεατής: 217
θεο-, compounds in: 292
θεόθυτος: 292
θηλάστρια: 292–3
-θι, imperatives in: 87–8 θρασύς: 201
θράττω: 90–1 θριδάκινος: 192
θύραζε: 36–7
-θυτος, compounds in: 292
-ί (deictic suffix): 143
-ίας, nouns in: 252, 335
-ιάω, desideratives in: 65
-ίζω, verbs in: 261
-ικός, adjectives in: 38
ἴκρια: 166–7
-ινδα, names of games in: 289–90
-ινος, adjectives in: 98–9 ἰσκάς: 215
ἴσος in polyptota: 16
-ῖτης, nouns and adjectives in: 333
Ἰωνόκυσος: 293–4
κάθημαι:
  imperatives of: 43
  subjunctives of: 45
καθίζω vs. καθίζομαι: 47
καθίστημι: 53
καλαμάομαι: 294–5
κάμπτω: 84
καπνίας: 296
καρίς: 55
κατ᾽ ἀγρούς: 154
καταφαγᾶς: 338–9 κάχρυς: 23
κεράμιος: 215–6
κέρδος: 146–7
κήλων: 162
κίκιννοι: 225
κινέω: 78
κοκκύζω and cognates: 126
κλάω: 45
κλύω: 348–9
κνάφω and cognates: 31
κοιλοφθαλμιάω: 65
κόμη in sense "foliage": 85
κομπός: 199
κόμπος: 199
κομψός: 121
-κοπος, compounds in: 307–8 κοπτός: 215
κόπτω: 115–6
κόρσακις: 297
κόρση: 297
κύαθος: 297
κύβηλις: 145
κύρβεις: 23
κυρηβάζομαι: 299 κυρήβια: 114
κυσός and cognates: 293–4 κύτισος: 178
κώμυς: 29
λαγώς/λαγός: 299–300
λαμβάνω: 115
  + infinitive: 46 λάταγες: 17–8 λαυροστάται: 300–2 λάχανα: 141
λεπαστή: 302–3
λιμός: 132, 139–40
λόγος:
  in sense "speech, argument": 128
  in sense "raw material underlying a dramatic plot": 73
-λογος, compounds in: 204–5
-λουτος, compounds in: 291
λυπησίλογος: 204
-μα, nouns in: 303
μαλακός: 102–3
μάλιστα with adjectives: 16
μασθλήτινος: 55–6
μάσμα: 303
μασχάλη: 26–7
-ματίας, nouns in: 252
μέγα as adverb: 165
μειξο-, compounds in: 304 μείξοφρυς: 304
μεῖραξ: 97
μελάγχρης: 305

μέμνοιτο: 306–7 μεσόκοπος: 307
μετεκβολή: 308–9
μηνυτής: 310
μικρολογέομαι and cognates: 310–11 μιμνήσκω, perfect optatives of: 306–7 μισήτος and cognates: 149–50 μισθός: 115
μίτος: 316
μναρός/μνιαρός: 312
μολύβδινος: 154
μόλυβδος/μόλιβος: 154 μουσική: 110
Μυκόνιος: 183
νάπη: 178
νικάω: 146
νόμος in sense "musical composition": 42 νοσέω: 220–1
νῦν … ἤδη: 23
-οίη rather than -οι in optatives: 157 οἰναγωγός: 221
οἰνηρός: 216
-οισιν vs. -οις: 61
ὄλισβος: 150
όλο-, intensive adjectives in: 314 ὅμαιμος and ὁμαίμων: 313
ὅμιλος: 166
ὄντως: 91
ὀργάω: 197
-οργος/-οργής, compounds in: 243–4 ὁρκόω: 227
ὁρκωτής: 227
ὅρος + gen.: 124
οὐ βιωτόν ἐστι: 132
οὐδὲ εἷς/ἕν: 104
οὐδέν + gen.: 107
ὀφρύς: 136–7
πάλαι + present tense: 78 παν-, intensive adjectives in: 313–4 πανάγαθος: 313
πανεύφρων: 315
πάντων, pleonastic use with a superlative: 166 πᾶς without definite article: 67–8 πατρικός: 38
πεινάω and cognates: 132
πέος: 18
περίαπτον: 197
περιάπτω and cognates: 196
Περικλέης/Περικλῆς: 78
πηνήκη: 34–5
πηνηκίζω: 224
πιναρός: 213
πίνω: 15
πισσοκωνίας: 223
πιτυοκάμπτης: 83–4 πίτυς: 84
πλοῖον: 221
-πλοκος, compounds in: 235–6 πνῖγος: 200
ποιμήν: 53 πόκος: 213
πολύμιτος: 316
πολυστέφανος: 140
πόρνος: 270
-πότης/-πώτης, compounds in: 64–5
-πρεπής, compounds in: 272
πριών/πρίων: 317
προ- in kinship terminology: 319 πρός + gen. in adjurations: 23
πρὸς ἀνδρός: 105
πρόσεχε τὸν νοῦν: 57
πρόσισχε τὸν νοῦν: 61
προσίσχω: 61
πρότηθυς: 318–19
πρωκτός: 113
πυνθάνομαι + gen. and acc.: 38 πυροπίπης: 320
πωγωνίας: 321 ῥαφανίς: 141
ῥίς: 94
ῥοδοδάκτυλος: 143
ῥοθιάζω: 93
ῥύγχος: 322–3 ῥύδην: 323
σαννάς amd cognates: 323
σαυνίον: 327
σέβομαι, imperatives of: 349
-σείω, desideratives in: 340

σεμνός: 137
σέρφος: 357
-σκελής, compounds in: 98
σκῖρος: 328
σκυθικός: 329–30
σκυζάω and cognates: 279–80 σκυτάλη: 212
σοφία: 166
σπιθαμή: 273
στημονίας: 225
στολή: 88
στρωματίτης: 333
συγκαθεύδω: 49
συμπατέομαι: 31
συοβαύβαλος and cognates: 127–9, 130 σφακελίζω: 208 σφάκον: 177
σφάττω: 117
σφενδάμνινος: 98
σφένδαμνος: 98
σφίγκτης: 334
σχιζίας: 335
τάλαρος: 50–1 ταμιεῖον: 360–1 τᾶν: 40–1 τένθης: 157
-τέος, verbal adjectives in: 173
τέρην: 103
τέρμα: 123–4
τιθύμαλλον: 177
τίς δὲ σύ;: 121
τοκάω and cognates: 336
τόλμα and cognates: 143
τολμητός: 171
-τος, verbal adjectives in: 170
-τρια, nouns in: 292–3 τρίγλη: 156
τρισκελής: 98
τροπαῖον vs. τρόπαιον: 362
τυρός: 226
ὑδατοπώτης: 64
ὕδωρ: 16
-ύζω verbs: 126
ὑλίζω: 94
ὑπερ-, intensive adjectives in: 314 ὑπερ-, intensive adverbs in: 218 ὑπέρφευ: 218
ὑπο-: 129
ὑπολεπτολόγος and cognates: 121 ὕπουλος: 337
φαγᾶς: 338–9
φαιδρός: 97–8
φενακίζω and cognates: 224
φιλόδωρος: 183
φιλοπραγματίας and cognates: 206
φλόμος/πλόμος/φλόνος: 179
φορβειά: 282–3
φορέω: 81
φορητός: 171
φρύγω: 23
-φρων, compounds in: 235
χαῖρε as an address to a deity: 161 χαλαίρυπος: 340
χαλκίς: 144
χαμᾶθεν: 84–5
Χάρον as vocative rather than Χάρων: 168
-χάρυβδις, compounds in: 257 χειρονομησείω and χειρονομέω: 341–2 χλωρός: 226
-χορδος, compounds in: 260 χόριον: 353
χοῦς: 16–7
χρωτίδιον: 103
-χρως, compounds in: 305
χρυσόκερως: 162
χυλός: 86
ψαλάσσω and derivatives: 271
ψόφησις: 167
-ώ, personal names in: 265–6 ὧδε: 97
ὦ θεοί: 103
-ων, personal names in: 249
ὡς + adjective (exclamatory): 102 ὥστε + infinitive without οὕτως/τοιοῦτος/etc.: 179

Index locorum

Aelian VH 12.18: 191
Ael. Dion.
δ 30: 273
μ 24: 153
Ammon. 322 Nickau: 148–9
Anaxandr. fr. 51: 137
Antiatt.
α 21: 236
α 70: 203
β 23: 128
κ 104: 338
ρ 4: 321
Apollon. p. 35.28: 240
[Arc.] p. 18.3: 317
Archil. fr. 185.2: 212
Ar.
Eq. 407: 319–20
Nu. 989: 263
Th. 404: 18
Ar.Byz.
fr. 1: 325
fr. 8: 338
fr. 20: 125
fr. 188: 265
frr. 252–3: 312
fr. 411: 302
Ath.
3.95e: 322
11.783d–e: 69–70
14.646e: 352
15.667b–c: 14
CGFPR 342,26: 134
Choerob.
Grammatici Graeci IV.1 pp. 166.34–167.1: 276
An.Ox. II p. 249.11–12: 317
Comm. on Dion. Thrax Grammatici Graeci I.3 p. 539.29–30: 101 Diogenian.
3.25: 211–12
6.7: 217
6.33: 25
Epich. fr. 31.4: 71 n. 43
Epimer. Hom.
A 262: 159
κ 64: 29
Erot. fr. 16: 100
Et.Gen.
α 391: 198
β 145: 101
Et.Gen. AB
α 696: 70
α 770: 240–1
Et.Gud.
α 181: 250
β p. 274.4–6: 101
ε 481: 89–90
μ p. 395.23–6: 149
Etymologicum Magnum
p. 12.20–1: 14
p. 157.37–43: 90
p. 345.50: 153
p. 532.6–7: 29
p. 590.8–11: 169
p. 761.46–9: 250
E. fr. 664: 18
Eust.
p. 29.12–14 = I.47.14–16: 59
p. 148.33 = I.227.33: 72
p. 539.16–18 = II.57.5–9: 282
p. 823.25 = III.127.10–11: 232
p. 823.27 = III.127.12: 232
p. 1356.59–60 = IV.926.3–4: 228
pp. 1421.64–1422.5 = i.65.28–34: 34
p. 1462.46–9 = i.120.2–7: 134
p. 1494.10 = i.162.21–2: 233
p. 1523.53–5 = i.199.44–6: 195
p. 1840.23–4 = ii.143.9–11: 240
p. 1888.1–3 = ii.223.20–4: 210–11
Gal.
XIX.78.3 K.: 70
XI.841.6–7 K.: 176
VI.641.12–16 K.: 176
Greg.Cypr. cod. Mosq. 1.12: 26

Harp.
β 13: 100
ψ 3: 210
ap. Keaney, TAPA 98 (1967) 209 # 13: 344
Hdn.
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 51.8–9: 338
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 53.18–19: 338
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 283.28: 256
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 345.2–3: 302
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 369.9–10: 361
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 375.26–7: 360
Grammatici Graeci III.1 p. 463.1–6: 306
Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 109.15–22: 223
Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 260.22–7: 278
Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 709.34: 28
Grammatici Graeci III.2 p. 762.16–17: 29
[Hdn.]
Philet. 38: 344
Philet. 168: 209
Philet. 234: 305
Hdt.
1.92.2: 349–50
2.159.3: 350
6.129.3: 341–2
Hes. Op. 299–300: 138–9
Hsch.
α 473: 136
α 564: 14
α 856: 229
α 1188: 354
α 1291: 80
α 1695: 194
α 1730: 232
α 1731: 233
α 1732: 233
α 1744: 233
Hsch. [cont.]
α 1763: 126
α 2066: 25
α 2449: 236
α 2731: 198
α 3875: 70
α 3877: 70
α 4033: 238
α 4421: 240
α 6322: 87
α 6407: 245
α 6810: 245
α 7414: 246
α 7429: 247
α 8769: 210
β 6: 159
β 353: 128
β 354: 128
β 710: 100
β 741: 100
β 1041: 274
β 1399: 257
γ 478: 258
δ 307: 265
δ 942: 267
δ 994: 268
δ 995: 268
δ 1220: 33
δ 1472: 270
ε 2407: 62
ε 3934: 41
ε 5255: 59
η 282: 62
θ 155: 329
θ 166: 195
θ 266: 291
θ 484: 292
ι 292: 329
κ 2686: 96
κ 2785: 123
κ 3530: 138
κ 3629: 18
κ 4674: 298
κ 4675: 298
κ 4841: 29

Hsch. [cont.]
λ 186: 331
λ 425: 300
λ 663: 302
λ 690: 217
μ 1109: 262
μ 1452: 149
μ 1493: 311
μ 1838: 182
ο 670: 312
ο 926: 186–7
ο 1991: 136
π 513: 194
π 979: 262
π 2205: 224
ρ 468: 323
ρ 471: 323
σ 175: 325
σ 279: 357
σ 433: 356
σ 893: 328
σ 1508: 273
σ 2057: 332–3
σ 2839: 208
σ 2903: 334
υ 486: 218
χ 642: 352
ψ 59: 67
ψ 278: 134
ω 251: 344
ω 476: 40
ω 477: 40
ω 931: 344
Homer Il. 14.291: 143–4
Hyperides fr. 239 Blass: 125 n. 80
Lex. art. gramm. Coislin. 345: 29
Lex.Rhet.
AB I p. 221.17–21: 101
AB I p. 223.21: 159
AB I p. 268.8–10: 229
Lex.Sabb. p. 43.13–14: 348
Macrobius 5.20.11–13: 67
Moer.
α 21: 243
α 40: 80
Moer. [cont.]
α 47: 87
α 149: 236
α 153: 209
δ 41: 273
ε 43: 277
θ 21: 292
μ 6: 153
μ 18: 305
χ 9: 225–6
ω 1: 41 n. 23
Orus
fr. A 48b: 173
fr. B 123: 227
fr. B 38: 344
Paus.Gr. ε 21: 186
δ 26: 273
Phot.
α 277: 229
α 400: 230
α 413: 80
α 518: 233
α 527: 231–2
α 549: 126
α 640: 25
α 1152: 200
α 1278: 71
α 1279: 70
α 1332: 238–9
α 1542: 240
α 1600: 93
α 1602: 92
α 2595: 344
α 2596: 344
α 3038: 176
α 3340: 209
β 6: 159
β 8: 159
β 168: 100
β 169: 100
β 170: 101
β 171: 101
β 260: 274
δ 64: 265

Moer. [cont.]
δ 66: 264–5
δ 291: 267
δ 307: 268
δ 375: 269
δ 406: 33
δ 535: 33
δ 736: 273
δ 799: 274
ε 652: 281
ε 730: 62
ε 1060: 90
η 196: 62
θ 44: 329
θ 47: 195
θ 87: 291
ι 251: 334
κ 107: 294
κ 746: 123
κ 1151: 144
κ 1239: 298
κ 1259: 298
κ 1315: 29
μ 139: 25
μ 174: 334
μ 465: 304
μ 584: 182
μ 588: 182
ο 260: 312
ο 367: 345
ο 721: 136
ο 724: 136
π 431: 262
π 862: 33–4
ρ 137: 189–90
σ 20: 324
σ 148: 356
Phryn.
Ecl. 56: 209
Ecl. 93: 236
Ecl. 130: 291
Ecl. 186: 93
Ecl. 253: 343–4
PS p. 1.1–6: 209
PS p. 1.3–6: 210
Phryn. [cont.]
PS p. 2.1–3: 206
PS p. 8.12–13: 197
PS p. 13.11–12: 204
PS p. 15.6–7: 202–3
PS p. 18.13–18: 279
PS p. 22.8–9: 200
PS p. 26.11–13: 196
PS p. 35.14–15: 125
PS pp. 41.8–42.3: 176
PS p. 56.5: 262
PS p. 57.15–17: 258
PS p. 95.9–10: 343
PS p. 117.14–18: 337
PS p. 120.14–15: 218
PS p. 128.19–20: 343
Plu. Mor. 750b: 70
Poll.
1.29: 291
2.18: 62
2.30: 33
2.47: 322
2.49: 136
2.62: 64
2.63: 232
2.88: 321
2.146: 344
2.157: 273
3.50: 292
4.70: 282
3.72: 232
4.108: 41
4.156: 232
5.79: 322
5.89: 125–6
5.99: 232
6.40: 338
6.25: 71
6.26: 25
6.89: 144
6.95: 14
6.97: 69
6.122: 157 n. 110
6.175: 323
6.189: 148

Poll. [cont.]
7.43–4: 87
7.108: 261
9.162: 287
10.17: 33
10.104: 144
POxy. 2176 fr. 1.2–3: 325
Prov. Bodl.
625: 25
708: 187
Σ^{MD} [A.] PV 3: 59
$\Sigma^{REΓ}$ Ar. Ach. 744: 322
$\Sigma^{EΓ}$ Ar. Ach. 1229: 70
$\Sigma^{VEΓΘM}$ Ar. Eq. 272: 298–9
$\Sigma^{VEΓΘM}$ Ar. Eq. 318: 273
$\Sigma^{VΓ}$ Ar. V. 875: 229
$\Sigma^{VΓ}$ Ar. V. 925: 328
$\Sigma^{RVΓ}$ Ar. Pax 916: 302
Σ^{R} Ar. Av. 82: 357
Σ Ar. Av. 530: 101
Σ^{RVE} Ar. Av. 1620: 149
$\Sigma^{RVEΓ}$ Ar. Av. 1648: 267
Σ^{R} Ar. Th. 697: 361–2
Σ Ar. Ra 186: 186
$\Sigma^{VEθ}$ Ar. Ra. 308: 329
$\Sigma^{RVMEΘMatrBarbRsV57}$ Ar. Pl. 453: 361
Σ Dionysius Thrax Grammatici Graeci I.3 p. 131.18–19: 362
Σ^{b} Il. 2.191a: 43
Σ^{T} Il. 2.191a: 43
Σ^{A} Luc. Abd. 21: 29
Σ^{LH} Od. 16,175: 305
$\Sigma^{VBQVind.133}$ Od. 17,228: 241
Σ Pi. O. 1.10: 350
Σ^{T} Pl. Alc. II 147c: 159
Σ Pl. Ap. 25c: 40
Σ^{LFSl} S. Ai. 781: 58
Σ S. Ai. 833: 208
Σ^{L} S. OC 1601: 58
$\Sigma^{ABFGMc2}$ Th. 5.1: 354
Σ^{UEA} Theoc. 2.88b: 329
Σ^{PT} Theoc. 4.18b: 29
Σ^{LEAT} Theoc. 6,29: 322
Sophronius ap. Theodos. Grammatici Graeci IV.2 p. 397.23–4: 317
St.Byz.
α 50: 229
β 166: 255–6
Str.
8.371: 217
17.808: 189
Suda
α 251: 14
α 383: 229
α 515: 230
α 631: 80
α 906: 236
α 1057: 198
α 1687: 71
α 2018: 92
α 2198: 201
α 2539: 206
α 2952: 195
α 3461: 344
α 3822: 247–8
α 4297: 176
α 4603: 209
α 4723: 270
αι 35: 194
αι 75: 233
αι 283: 26
β 341: 101
β 343: 101
δ 86: 265
δ 499: 267
δ 540: 268
δ 698: 33
δ 892: 267
δ 1434: 273
δ 1602: 274
ε 2145: 182
ε 2444: 284
κ 198: 294
κ 1086: 90
κ 1676: 123
κ 2274: 29
μ 273: 25
μ 291: 132
μ 1146: 311
μ 1400: 182

Suda [cont.]
o 236: 312
o 411: 345
o 1024: 136
π 688: 262
π 1529: 33–4
π 2151: 321
ρ 34: 322
ρ 211: 189–90
σ 256: 357
ψ 22: 67
ψ 99: 211
ψ 100: 210 n. 148
ω 141: 320
ω 260: 40
Synag.
α 1154: 209
β 59: 101
δ 357: 273
κ 47: 294
Synag. [cont.]
o 127: 312
o 177: 345
π 463: 33–4
Synag. B
α 200: 229
α 408: 80
α 494: 233
α 496: 231–2
α 536: 26
α 1349: 136
α 1651: 195
α 1919: 344
α 2306: 176
Thom. Mag.
p. 11.14: 243
p. 136.15–16: 173
p. 240.11: 149
p. 242.5–8: 350
Tim. Lex. β 8: 100

Index rerum et personarum abuse and mockery: 55, 234, 270, 277, 279, 318–19, 322–3, 325, 334 adjurations: 23

Adonis: 230–1
Adramyteion: 354 adultery: 20
Aelius Asclepiades, Garlands: 219
Aelius Dionysius, lexicographer: 60, 71, 92, 184, 195, 198, 232, 233, 238, 239 n. 165, 294, 305, 312, 325, 331
Aeschines: 326
Aeschylus, Prometheus: 123
Aeschylus, revivals: 123
Alexander of Cotiaeum: 349
alpha-contract verbs: 336 altar, of Apollo Agyieus: 229–30 amulet: 196 anger: 244
Antimachus of Colophon: 151
Aphrodite: 191–2
Apollo Agyieus: 229–30
Archilochus, in comic poets: 212
Argos, Pelasgian: 163
Ariphrades, cunnilictor: 110
Aristophanes, Clouds: 220 armpit, raised to drink: 26–7 Artyon, man's name: 249
asparagus: 177–8
asphodel: 178 with n. 128
Assembly: 202
Athena: 253, 263–4
Attic and Atticisms: 22, 23, 26, 27, 29, 36, 37, 38, 41 n. 23, 43 with n. 25, 45 n. 26, 57, 61, 64 with n. 41, 71, 79, 84–5, 87–8, 91, 97, 103, 114, 117, 126, 129, 130, 132, 143, 150, 154, 157 with n. 109, 171, 173, 192, 197, 199, 201, 210 n. 147, 221, 227, 236, 237, 243, 249–50, 251, 251–2, 257, 283, 284, 286, 289, 293, 297, 299, 300, 307, 310, 311, 320,

Attic and Atticisms [cont.]
321, 335, 338, 340 n. 267, 341, 350 n. 277, 352 n. 278, 360–1, 361, 362
Attic reduplication: 157 n. 109
Atticist lexicographers: 24–5, 33, 48, 58, 64, 83, 87, 125, 148, 193, 194, 196, 197, 201, 202, 203, 204, 208, 210, 214, 216, 218, 225, 232, 236, 242, 243, 246, 262, 267, 273–4, 289, 294, 305, 318, 321, 323, 338, 339, 343, 349, 355 audience, in Theater: 165, 167, 195–6, 217, 220 aulos: 42 awe: 228 ax: 145
axones: 21–2 barbarian: 61
barber: 345
barley, roasting of: 22 with n. 8, 23 barley: 22, 23, 86, 237–9, 320
barley: 239–40
Basileia, character in Aristophanes' Birds: 253 basket: 50–1 bathing: 291
beard: 321
Bellerophon: 18 belly: 139
Bisaltia: 256
boasting: 199
Bolbos, dancer: 255
bran or chaff: 114
Brea: 256, 258–9
bribery: 265, 356
butcher and butchering: 116–17 with n. 72 Callias Comicus: 171–2 capital punishment: 184, 223, 254
Cassius Longinus: 357
Chalastre/Chalestre, Thracian/Macedonian city: 340
Charaxus, brother of Sappho: 190
Charon: 172
Charybdis: 257–8
cheese, green: 226
cheese-grater: 145
chicken: 126–7
Choerilus, identity uncertain: 342–3
Choerilus of Samos: 350
chorus, in tragedy, arrangement of: 300–2
Cilicia: 297
Cimon: 107
Cleon: 320
cleruchy: 259
coinage: 235, 257, 264, 356 colloquialism: 18, 27, 97, 40, 43 n. 25, 45, 46, 51, 57, 91, 93, 97, 103, 104, 112, 114, 117, 121, 122, 126, 130, 132, 142, 143, 157, 199, 201, 208, 239, 251, 252, 254, 265, 283, 284, 293, 311, 335 colonization and colonies, Athenian: 256, 258–9 colonization and colonies: 259, 354 n. 279 comic fragment recycled as moralizing commonplace: 180–1 commonplace: 85, 180–1, 218 compound names, mocking: 343 compound prefixes: 308–9 compounds, accents of: 307–8 consonantalized iota: 312 cook: 249
couches, used at dinner parties and symposia: 333
Crates Comicus: 102, 241, 243, 244, 254, 267, 271, 278, 306, 337
Crates of Mallos: 357
Cratinus Junior: 97
Croton: 324
Danaids: 217
dancing girls: 247
"daring everything": 170–1
Dawn: 143
Deinias: 359 n. 282
dialect-speaker: 257
dialects, of Attic: 193
Didymus: 41, 101, 253, 295, 296–7, 356 with n. 280, 357
dildo: 150

diminutive, as first element in compound: 119 diminutive: 103, 213, 219
Diomedes: 253
Dionysus: 135, 162, 170 divine names, formation: 266 donkey: 185–6, 187–8
Doricha, lover of Sappho's brother: 189–90
Draco, Athenian lawgiver: 20, 21 dream: 90
dyeing, of wool: 330
Ecphantides: 295–6, 342
effeminacy: 248
Egyptians, reputation of: 234 epic language: 31, 124, 143, 144, 146, 151, 233, 254, 352 n. 278
Epitome of Harpocration: 21 n. 6, 123, 210 n. 148, 229
Epizephyrian Locris: 324 etymological jingle: 146, 359
Eucrates of Melite, Athenian politician: 112–13
Eudemus, runner: 29
euphemism: 48, 49, 63 n. 39, 239
Euphronius, Alexandrian grammarian: 253 Euripides: 120–1
exegetic infinitive: 115
exodos, of a drama: 42
exodos, songs: 42
eyebrows, raised as sign of arrogance: 136 eyes, as significant of character: 64 face, appearance of: 55 festival, proverbially: 152
fig and fig-cake: 215 figurative language: 51, 93, 153, 214, 257, 327 fingernails, kept trimmed: 345 fire: 283
fish-sauce: 51
flaying: 117–18
fuller and fulling: 30, 31 games, words for: 288–90 garland: 139–40
gemstone and engraving: 261 gleaning: 294–5
glutton and gluttony: 157, 257–8
gold: 154, 162
Golden Age: 176–7
Gorgon: 263–4
Graiai: 123
groping scenes: 102, 104–5 hair: 225
as image for foliage: 85
hairiness, as mark of virility: 112 hapax legomenon: 67, 100, 119, 120, 136, 193, 225, 235, 242, 251, 254, 257, 260, 278, 286, 291, 308, 315, 338, 340 harbor and harbor-entrance: 207 hare: 265, 299–300
Heracles, as glutton: 132
herdsman and herding: 53, 160, 193
Herennius Philo: 299 high-style language: 84, 88, 97, 98, 117, 136, 139, 140, 162, 166, 170, 178, 193, 197, 204, 212, 235, 243, 284, 292, 303, 305, 313–14, 315, 340, 348, 351 Hipponicus II, son of Callias II: 329–30 homicide, Draco's law on: 20 hoplite: 20 horseman, metaphorical reference to: 214 hunger: 132, 139–40
hymn and hymnic language: 159, 160, 169–70
Hyperbolus: 153
Iktinos, architect: 77 incest: 48–9 insult: 55, 104 n. 61, 234, 269, 294 intensive adjectives: 313–14 invocation, of another person while drinking: 17
Ionians, image of as cowardly and sexually passive: 293–4 Ischomachus: 182–3
jar, for storing and transporting commodities: 215–16
Judgment of Paris: 81

Kallikrates, architect: 77
kinship terminology: 319
Kisthênê: 123 knee: 262
Konnas, bon vivant: 139
kottabos: 17
kyrbeis: 21–2
Kyrebion, nickname of relative of Aeschines: 111 ladle: 297
Lampon, seer: 145
language of the gods: 144
Laurion, mines: 154
lawcodes, Athenian: 20–2 lead: 154 leather: 55–6
Lerna: 217
lettuce: 192
libation ritual: 71 loan-word: 327 long dative plural endings: 61
long walls, Athenian: 77 Lucillus of Tarrha, see Tarrhaios magic: 196
magistrates, Athenian: 75
Marathon: 351
Margitês: 188–9
material, adjectives of: 98–9 measurement, by reference to the hand, etc.: 273–4 Melanippus: 253
merchant ship and merchant shipping: 221 message-baton, Spartan: 212 with n. 150 metaphor: 23, 42, 53, 60, 117–18, 203, 236, 239, 247, 257–8, 336, 337, 361 modal particle with optative: 119 n. 73
Montpellier maple: 98
mullein: 179
music and musical instrument: 41–2, 110, 178, 260, 271, 282–3, 341–2 Mykonos and Mykonians: 182–3 mystery cult: 36
n-stem nouns: 317–18
narcissus: 219–20
nickname: 255
non-citizen status, malicious charges of: 330 nonce-word: 122, 165, 260, 293, 300, 318, 323, 341 nose or nostil, words for: 94 oath: 103 , 227
obscenity: 113
Oeonichus, cunnilictor: 110 n. 64
Oknos: 187–8 with n. 135 oracle: 144, 146, 149, 348, 349
Oulios, son of Cimon: 320
Pamphilus, lexicographer: 12, 54, 148, 325
Pan: 159–61
para prosdokian: 66
parabasis: 120, 132, 153, 159, 165, 169, 173, 200, 217 paratragedy: 218, 348
parechesis: 359
Parthenon: 77
Pausanias, lexicographer: 13, 25, 33, 34, 60, 93, 134, 148, 182, 186, 191, 192, 194, 195, 210, 211, 216, 224, 232 with n. 161, 237, 246, 247, 289, 355
Pelopia, daughter of Thyestes: 48
Perseus: 74, 77, 123, 256, 356 personified concepts: 266
pettiness: 311
Phaon, ferryman: 191–2
Philocles, tragic poet: 72–3 phonetic reduction, in colloquial speech: 254 pig: 128–9
piper, theatrical: 282–3 pit, place of punishment: 254 pitch: 223
pleonasm: 151, 154
poetic vocabulary and poeticism: 35, 37, 81, 97, 103, 109–10, 124, 162, 178, 203, 212, 213, 248, 254, 283, 297, 313, 313–14, 348 politicians, as prostitutes: 270
Polygnotus: 187–8
Polymnestus and Polymnêsteia: 109–10

polyptoton: 16
poplar tree, as feature of Theater of Dionysus: 195–6 potential optative without ἄν: 119 n. 74 poverty: 107, 275
prayer: 159, 160, 161, 211, 348 pre-Greek vocabulary, see substrate vocabulary profit, as ugly motivation: 146–7 prophecy: 348
prosaic vocabulary: 91, 117, 173, 197, 269, 287, 308, 341, 360 prostitute and prostitution: 96, 269, 270, 334 proverb: 105, 107, 122, 134, 146, 152, 169 n. 121, 183 with n. 132, 187, 192, 218, 324, 357, 359 Psyra/Psyria: 134 public execution: 184 purse, theft from: 66
pyrrhic dance: 263–4 radish: 141
red mullet: 156
reduplicated present with simplex counterpart: 60, 71, 92, 184, 195, 198, 232, 233, 238, 239 n. 165, 294, 305, 312, 325, 331 rhetoric, images of: 74 rhetoric, trope: 78 rhetoric: 74, 80, 81, 146, 214, 280 n. 200, 288 n. 206, 308 Rhodopis: 190–1 rooster: 126 rope and rope-making: 188 rowing: 93
rustic, as stock character: 193 sacrifice: 292
Sagra: 324
salt, metaphorically referring to wit: 239–40 n. 166
Sannion, chorus-trainer: 326
Sappho: 190–1
Schoinion, nickname of Callias Comicus?: 171–2 Scythians: 330
sea-slug: 299
sex: 20, 48–9, 62–3, 96 n. 54, 102, 103, 104 n. 61, 150, 162, 192, 239, 242, 279–80, 293–4, 327, 334, 354–5 shadow-boxing: 341–2 sheep and shepherd: 223 shrimp: 55
silver-mining: 154
Sinis: 83–4
sitophylax: 320
slander and slanderer: 268–9 slaves and slavery: 272
  Solon's reforms regarding: 20 smoke, used to treat wine: 296
Solon, Athenian lawgiver: 20–1, 202
Sophocles: 203–4
Sparta, names for: 331–2 spurge: 177
subjunctive, accentuation of athematic verbs: 45 with nn. 26–7 substrate vocabulary: 17–18, 23, 27, 31, 55, 150, 178, 179, 192, 225, 281, 297, 328, 357 Sybaris and Sybarites: 126
sycophant: 146
table, as banquet furniture: 96–7, 98
Tarrhaios: 134, 186
Tellên, lyric poet and musician: 169 n. 121
Tethys: 318
thapsus: 330
Theater of Dionysus, seating: 166–7, 195–6 theatrical piper: 42
Theozotides, father of Nicostratus and Theodotus? or grandson of Theozotides?: 325–6 Theseus: 83–4 thief: 151–2 threat: 50, 65–6, 254 of violence: 44–5
Thyestes: 48
Tolynus: 169 n. 121 torture: 184
trampling, of persons or objects: 31, 247

Tydeus: 253
Underworld: 185–6, 187–8
unibrow: 304
verbal adjective, indicating obligation or necessity: 173 water, disparaged: 16, 64 weaving: 316
weeping: 45
wetnurse: 292–3 whip: 31
Whispering, as divine name: 210–11 wine: 14–15, 16, 17–18, 215–16, 221–2, 286, 295–6, 297, 333, 345 consumed unmixed: 15 wine [cont.]
  dangers of: 15 n. 2 proportions when mixed with water: 14–15 quantities supposedly consumed: 16–17 transport and importing: 221–2 women occupations: 292–3
  terms for at different ages: 209 wool and wool-working: 213 xenia: 38
Xenias: 171
Zenodotus: 90